FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION DECISIONS

Findings, Opinions and Orders

IN THE MATTER OF

BEATRICE FOODS CO.

ORDER, OPINION, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 7 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Docket 8864. Complaint, Oct. 1, 1971-Decision, July 1, 1975

Order requiring a multinational, multiproduct company, located in Chicago, Ill., among other things to divest itself of a competing manufacturer of paint rollers which it acquired in 1970, and to not make any acquisitions for 10 years, in the paint brush-and-roller industry, without prior Federal Trade Commission approval. Further, the order dismissed, for failure of proof, allegations in the complaint that the acquisition of Tip Top Brush Co., through which the respondent entered the industry, violated Sec. 7 of the Clayton Act.

Appearances

For the Commission: Murray L. Lyon, William M. Sexton, and Randolph B. Sim.

For the Respondent: Edward L. Foote, John W. Stack, and Terry M. Grimm, Winston & Strawn, Wash., D.C., John P. Fox, Jr., General Counsel, Beatrice Foods Co.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that respondent Beatrice Foods Co., a corporation, has violated and is now violating the provisions of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18) through the acquisition of the stock and assets of various corporations, as hereinafter more particularly designated and described, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it with reference thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint pursuant to the provisions of Section 11 of the aforesaid Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §21) stating its charges as follows:

I. DEFINITIONS

1. For the purpose of this complaint, the following definitions shall apply:

(a) Manually powered paint applicators: Paint and varnish brushes; paint rollers including pans, covers, handles, and other accessories sold separately, or as part of a paint roller kit; and miscellaneous paint applicators other than spray equipment and aerosol cans.

(b) Manually powered paint application industry: Persons, partnerships, joint ventures, and corporations engaging in the manufacture and sale of manually powered paint applicators, as defined in (a), immediately above.

(c) Paint rollers: As used separately, includes, in addition to the complete paint roller, pans, covers, handles, and other accessories sold separately, or as part of a paint roller kit.

II. RESPONDENT

2. Respondent, Beatrice Foods Co., sometimes hereinafter referred to as "Beatrice," is, and has been, at all times relevant herein, a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its present executive office and principal place of business located at 120 S. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

3. Beatrice is today a multinational, multiproduct company with its primary emphasis on foods and related services. Following extensive research by management and market specialists, Beatrice began diversifying six years ago into a limited number of non-food fields appraised as having exceptional potential for growth of sales and profits. These fields, grouped together as the Chemical & Manufactured Products Division, represented approximately 20 percent of Beatrice's dollar sales in fiscal year ended Feb. 28, 1970. Many of the products in the Chemical & Manufactured Products Division are similar in that these products are sold by Beatrice to common customers or are distributed to similar outlets, such as variety, hardware, grocery and mass merchandise stores. One field within this division is paint brushes and paint rollers. Many retailers and distributors of paint brushes and paint rollers are purchasers or potential purchasers of a variety of other products manufactured and distributed by Beatrice.

Beatrice, in the sale of its products, relies heavily on advertising, especially advertising designed to promote consumer brand identification. For fiscal year ended Feb. 29, 1968, Beatrice spent approximately $27 million for advertising of its products, utilizing all major media and means of reaching the consumer public. Respondent has continued to expand its advertising expenditure since that time.

In conjunction with its advertising, Beatrice has been successful in promoting its household products through new packages, display materials, coupons, and special promotions. Major promotional programs have centered on products within the Chemical & Manufactured Products Division, including Melnor sprinklers, Stiffel lamps, and Airstream trailers.

4. In the course and conduct of its business, Beatrice is, and has been, at all times relevant herein, engaged in selling its products to purchasers located in various States of the United States, and caused such products, when sold, to be transported from its facilities in various States of the United States to such purchasers located in various States of the United States. In so doing, Beatrice is engaged in "commerce," as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, and has been continuously so engaged at all times relevant herein.

5. Beatrice's development has been characterized through the years by continuous growth. During the past decade, sales increased by $1.1 billion, or 256 percent. For fiscal year ended Feb. 28, 1970, net sales were approximately $1,576,000,000, and total assets approximated $504 million. Acquisitions accounted for a significant portion of this growth.

III. ACQUIRED COMPANIES

Tip Top Brush Co., Inc. and Affiliated Companies

6. Prior to and until July 31, 1969, Tip Top Brush Co., Inc. and its affiliated companies Banner Brush Co., Inc.; Best-Set Brush Co., Inc.; United Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc.; First Synthetic Fibre & Brush Co., Inc.; West Side Leasing Corp.; Excello Roller Co., Inc.; and Star Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc., sometimes hereinafter referred to collectively as "Tip Top," were corporations organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with their offices and principal places of business located at 151 W. Side Ave., Jersey City, N.J., except with respect to Star Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc., which was organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 690 Harrison Ave., Boston, Mass.

7. All of the issued and outstanding capital stock of each of the corporations listed in Paragraph 6, above, were owned by Miklos Felkay and Madelaine Felkay. These corporations were closely held and operated so as to mutually benefit each other.

8. Tip Top was engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of manually powered paint applicators. For fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1968, the year preceding its acquisition by Beatrice, it had net sales of approximately $5,425,000, and it had total assets approximating $2,641,000. By fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1969, these sales had increased to approximately $7,126,000.

9. In the course and conduct of its business prior to July 31, 1969, as aforesaid, Tip Top sold its products to purchasers located in various States of the United States and caused such products, when sold, to be transported from its facilities in various States of the United States to such purchasers located in various other States of the United States. In so doing, Tip Top was engaged in "commerce," as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended.

10. Pursuant to an agreement adopted June 25, 1969, Beatrice, on July 31, 1969, acquired all of the issued and outstanding capital stock of Tip Top in exchange for up to 85,000 shares of Beatrice's common stock.

Essex Graham Company

11. Prior to and until July 1, 1970, Essex Graham Company, sometimes hereinafter referred to as "Essex," was a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business located at 1700 W. Pershing Rd., Chicago, Ill.

12. Essex was engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of manually powered paint applicators. In 1969, the year preceding its acquisition by Beatrice, Essex had net sales of approximately $2,216,000 and its total assets approximated $2,322,000.

13. In the course and conduct of its business prior to July 1, 1970, as aforesaid, Essex sold its products to purchasers located in various States of the United States and caused such products, when sold, to be transported from its facilities in Illinois to such purchasers located in various other States of the United States. In so doing, Essex was engaged in "commerce," as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended.

14. Pursuant to an agreement and plan of reorganization adopted July 1, 1970, Beatrice, on July 1, 1970, acquired substantially all of the assets of Essex in exchange for shares of Beatrice's common stock.

IV. NATURE OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

15. Manually powered paint applicators are a separate and distinct product which is distinguished from all other paint applicators and all other products in a number of ways, including, but not restricted to, method of use, cost of production, marketing, and consumer acceptance.

16. In the United States prior to World War II, paint was principally applied by brush. During World War II the paint roller was developed, offering a new method by which to apply paint. Initially paint rollers were produced principally by firms not engaged in the manufacture of paint brushes. During the past decade, however, substantial market pressure has resulted in a significant number of companies originally engaged in the manufacture of either paint brushes or paint rollers entering into the manufacture and sale of both. Currently, of the top twelve concerns in the manually powered paint application industry, ten manufacture and sell both paint brushes and paint rollers. Of the remaining companies within this industry, most if not all, manufacture and/or distribute both paint brushes and paint rollers.

17. Approximately three years ago miscellaneous flat paint applicators other than brushes and rollers were introduced. In 1969, such miscellaneous flat paint applicators constituted an insignificant portion of the total sales of manually powered paint applicators.

18. The manufacture and sale of manually powered paint applicators is a significant industry in the United States. In 1969, value of shipments was approximately $99.3 million, up from 1967 value of shipments of $88.6 million. There has been a significant increase in the level of concentration in the manually powered paint application industry. In 1967, the top four and top eight manufacturers had approximately 34.6 percent and 51.3 percent of domestic plant shipments, respectively. By 1969, these shares had increased to approximately 40.4 percent and 58.6 percent, respectively. By attributing to the acquiring company the 1969 plant shipments of those companies acquired in 1970, the market shares of the top four and top eight in 1969 increase to 46.7 percent and 66.1 percent, respectively.

19. The aforesaid increase in concentration has been paralleled by a number of independent manually powered paint applicator concerns leaving the industry, either by virtue of merger or by voluntarily ceasing operations. Additionally, there has not been a significant new entrant into this industry within the past two decades.

20. In 1969, Tip Top was the third largest manufacturer of manually powered paint applicators, accounting for approximately 6.9 percent of plant shipments in the United States. In that year, Essex had approximately 2.3 percent of domestic plant shipments. The combined production of these acquired concerns would have made Beatrice the third largest domestic manufacturer of manually powered paint applicators in 1969.

21. Paint rollers constitute a significant segment of manually powered paint applicator sales, representing approximately $26.5 million in 1967, and increasing to approximately $31.2 million in 1969. Concentration in this segment is high. In 1969, the top four and top eight manufacturers had in excess of 59.2 percent and 76.7 percent of domestic plant shipments of paint rollers, respectively.

22. In 1969, Tip Top accounted for approximately 3.8 percent of paint roller plant shipments in the United States. In that year, Essex represented approximately 7.2 percent of domestic plant shipments. On the basis of the combined production of these acquired concerns, as aforesaid, Beatrice would become the third largest domestic manufacturer of paint rollers in 1969.

23. The largest segment of manually powered paint applicator sales is in paint and varnish brushes, representing approximately $62.1 million in 1967, and increasing to approximately $68.1 million in 1969. Concentration in this segment is significant. In 1969, the top four and top eight manufacturers accounted for approximately 40.1 percent and 61.7 percent of domestic plant shipments, respectively. In that year, Tip Top was the second largest manufacturer of paint and varnish brushes, with 8.3 percent of domestic plant shipments.

24. Manually powered paint applicators of all types are distributed to hardware, variety, paint and wallpaper, and mass merchandise stores, among others. Recently, these products have been sold in grocery stores, with this latter market expected to be of major significance in the future.

V. EFFECTS OF THE ACQUISITIONS

25. The effect, cumulatively and individually, of the aforesaid acquisition by Beatrice of the stock and assets of Tip Top and Essex may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of manually powered paint applicators in the United States as a whole in the following ways, among others:

(a) Potential competition between Beatrice and each of the aforesaid corporations acquired by it and between Beatrice and all others has been eliminated;

(b) Actual competition between and among the aforesaid corporations acquired by Beatrice has been eliminated;

(c) Producers of manually powered paint applicators may be unable to compete, or will be at a competitive disadvantage in competing, with respondent due to any one, any combination of, or all of the following factors:

(1) Respondent's financial and economic strength;

(2) Respondent's advertising, merchandising, and promotional ability and experience;

(3) Respondent's ability to command acceptance of its products and of valuable store shelf space;

(4) Respondent's ability to offer preferential prices on manually powered paint applicators;

(5) Respondent's ability to offer preferential prices on other products it sells as a condition, implied or explicit, to the purchase of respondent's manually powered paint applicators;

(6) Respondent's ability to combine product distribution;

(d) The leading position of Beatrice has been enhanced and may be further enhanced;

(e) An industry trend toward concentration has been accelerated and further acquisitions may be induced;

(f) The degree of concentration has been increased and may be further increased; and

(g) The entry of new competitive entities has been and may continue to be made more difficult.

26. The effect, cumulatively and individually, of the aforesaid acquisition by Beatrice of the stock and assets of Tip Top and Essex may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of paint rollers in the United States as a whole in the following ways, among others:

(a) Potential competition between Beatrice and each of the aforesaid corporations acquired by it and between Beatrice and all others has been eliminated;

(b) Actual competition between and among the aforesaid corporations acquired by Beatrice has been eliminated;

(c) Producers of paint rollers may be unable to compete, or will be at a competitive disadvantage in competing, with respondent due to any one, any combination of, or all of the following factors:

(1) Respondent's financial and economic strength;

(2) Respondent's advertising, merchandising, and promotional ability and experience;

(3) Respondent's ability to command acceptance of its products and of valuable store shelf space;

INITIAL DECISION BY WILLIAM K. JACKSON, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

OCTOBER 25, 1973

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Federal Trade Commission, on Oct. 1, 1971, issued its complaint in this proceeding charging Beatrice Foods Co., a corporation, by its acquisitions of the stock and assets of Tip Top Brush Co., Inc. and Essex Graham Company, violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. § 18). The complaint alleges that the effect, cumulatively and individually, of the acquisitions may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture and sale in the United States as a whole of (1) manually powered paint applicators, (2) paint rollers, and (3) paint and varnish brushes, in the following ways, among others:

(a) Potential competition between Beatrice and each of the aforesaid corporations acquired by it and between Beatrice and all others has been eliminated;

(b) Actual competition between and among the aforesaid corporations acquired by Beatrice has been eliminated;

(c) Producers of (1) manually powered paint applicators (paint rollers/paint and varnish brushes), may be unable to compete, or will be at a competitive disadvantage in competing, with respondent due to any one, any combination of, or all of the following factors:

(1) Respondent's financial and economic strength;

(2) Respondent's advertising, merchandising, and promotional ability and experience;

(3) Respondent's ability to command acceptance of its products and of valuable store shelf space;

(4) Respondent's ability to offer preferential prices on manually powered paint applicators (paint rollers/paint and varnish brushes);

(5) Respondent's ability to offer preferential prices on other products it sells as a condition, implied or explicit, to the purchase of respondent's manually powered paint applicators (paint rollers/paint and varnish brushes);

(6) Respondent's ability to combine product distribution;

(d) The leading position of Beatrice has been enhanced and may be further enhanced;

(e) An industry trend toward concentration has been accelerated and further acquisitions may be induced;

(f) The degree of concentration has been increased and may be further increased; and

(g) The entry of new competitive entities has been and may continue to be made more difficult.

After being served with the complaint, respondent appeared by counsel, and on Nov. 11, 1971, filed its answer to the complaint denying, in substance, that the mergers were illegal. Thereafter, on Jan. 13, 1972 and Feb. 25, 1972, prehearing conferences were held pursuant to pretrial orders of the undersigned for the purposes of simplification of the issues, obtaining admissions of fact and authentication of documents, discovery of relevant material, exchanging lists of exhibits and names of witnesses, together with a summary of their proposed testimony, to be used at the trial, and the preparation of a concise statement of the contested issues of law and fact. In accordance with the undersigned's pretrial order, both parties prepared and submitted a pretrial memorandum.

Hearings for the presentation of testimony and other evidence by complaint counsel began in Washington, D.C., on Dec. 6, 1972, and concluded on Dec. 18, 1972, with the exception of one witness, Mr. Brown W. Cannon, senior vice president of respondent, whose testimony was deferred until Apr. 24, 1973, in order to accommodate respondent until the commencement of respondent's defense. Pursuant to a request by respondent for further discovery, a 2-month adjournment[1] was granted prior to the presentation of respondent's defense. During this period, respondent presented to the undersigned approximately nine subpoenas duces tecum, all of which were issued. Respondent's defense commenced on Apr. 25, 1973, and was completed on May 21, 1973. Thereafter, on July 9, 1973, complaint counsel commenced rebuttal hearings which were concluded on July 16, 1973. On July 27, 1973, respondent had surrebuttal hearings and the record was closed on July 27, 1973.

The record in this matter consists of 3,553 pages and there were 35 days of hearing. Complaint counsel, for their case-in-chief, noticed 26 witnesses and 19 testified. Complaint counsel originally noticed 101 exhibits, of which 83 were received, one was withdrawn and 17 were omitted. Complaint counsel offered 12 additional exhibits, of which 10 were received. On rebuttal, complaint counsel called 20 witnesses and offered five exhibits, of which four were received and one was rejected.

Respondent's first pretrial submissions were submitted on Nov. 15, 1972, but were rejected as inadequate. Respondent resubmitted its lists of witnesses and documents on Nov. 29, 1972. On Jan. 10, 1973, respondent filed a third submission entitled "Second Revision of List of Witnesses and Documents." On Jan. 31, 1973, respondent filed a final list of documents, and on Apr. 5, 1973, filed a final schedule of witnesses.

Respondent, for its defense, originally noticed 232 exhibits, of which 69 were either offered or identified and 51 were received, 13 rejected, and five withdrawn. Respondent also identified or offered 20 additional exhibits that were not noticed, of which 15 were received, three were rejected, and two were identified but not offered. Approximately 163 of respondent's noticed exhibits were not identified or offered at the hearing. Respondent originally noticed approximately 90 witnesses, which on Apr. 5, 1973, was reduced to approximately 58 named individuals, together with numerous unnamed officials of respondent, of which 34 were actually called to testify in its defense. On surrebuttal, respondent called one witness and offered one exhibit which was rejected.

[1] Due to the illness of the undersigned during this adjournment, respondent's defense was further postponed.

Pursuant to order of the undersigned, complaint counsel filed their proposed findings, conclusions of law, and brief in support thereof on Oct. 16, 1973. On Oct. 31, 1973, respondent filed its proposed findings and conclusions and brief in support thereof. Thereafter, on Sept. 10, 1973, complaint counsel filed their reply brief.

Any motions not heretofore or herein specifically ruled upon, either directly or by the necessary effect of the conclusions in this Initial Decision, are hereby denied.

This proceeding is before the undersigned upon the complaint, answer, testimony and other evidence, proposed findings of fact and conclusions and briefs filed by counsel supporting the complaint and by counsel for respondent. The proposed findings of fact, conclusions and briefs in support thereof submitted by the parties have been carefully considered by the undersigned, and those findings not adopted either in the form proposed or in substance are rejected as not supported by the evidence or as involving immaterial matter.

For the convenience of the Commission and the parties, the findings of fact include references to the principal supporting items in the record. Such references are intended to serve as convenient guides to the testimony and exhibits supporting the recommended findings of fact, but do not necessarily represent complete summaries of the evidence considered in arriving at such findings.

References to the record are made in parentheses, and certain abbreviations, as hereinafter set forth, are used:

Having heard and observed the witnesses and after having carefully reviewed the entire record in this proceeding, together with the proposed findings, conclusions and briefs submitted by the parties, as well as replies, the administrative law judge makes the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. IDENTITY AND BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT AND ACQUIRED COMPANIES

A. Beatrice Foods Company (respondent)

Introduction

1. Respondent Beatrice is and has been, at all times relevant herein, a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its executive office and principal place of business located at 120 S. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. (complaint and answer, Par. 2).

2. Beatrice is today a multinational, multiproduct company, with traditional emphasis on foods and related services (complaint and answer, Par. 3). In this regard, respondent has for many years been a leading producer of consumer food products, generally preselling consumers through intensive advertising, packaging, and promotional efforts (findings 5-15). Included within these products are fluid milk and cream, of which Beatrice is the third largest processor in the United States (CX 50 a); butter, yogurt, and other dairy products; grocery and confectionery items; and consumer convenience and specialty foods (CX 9-15). Some of the better known trade names of respondent's consumer food products are the following: Meadow Gold, Dannon, Louis Sherry, LaChoy, Aunt Nellie's, Ma Brown, Clark, and Holloway (CX 50 b).

It also engages in the agri-products business and has chemical, manufacturing, and international divisions which by 1970 accounted for over 30 percent of its sales. Nonfood products now sold by Beatrice range from house trailers to skis (Beatrice Foods Co., F.T.C. Docket 8814, Sept. 28, 1972)[81 F.T.C. 481].

Growth Through Acquisition

3. Beatrice has become, through acquisition, a manufacturer of a number of consumer nonfood products, including lawn sprinklers, closet accessories, draperies, picture frames, housewares, paint brushes and rollers, travel trailers, and plumbing specialties (CX 2 a-h; CX 13, p. 15). Many of these acquired nonfood manufacturers are leading factors in their respective industries (CX 11, p. 9; CX 19 c).

4. Beatrice has made remarkable progress since its inception; its development has been characterized through the years by substantial and continuous growth. Between 1960 and 1970, all divisions reported record results. Total sales increased by $1.1 billion, or 256 percent; net earnings increased by $43 million, or 413 percent; working capital increased to $218 million from $52 million; and earnings per share of common stock increased 139 percent to $2.03 from 85 cents. By fiscal year ended Feb. 28, 1970, net sales reached approximately $1,576,000,000 and total assets approximated $504,000,000 (complaint and answer, Par. 5; CX 13, pp. 2-3).

5. Acquisitions accounted for a significant portion of Beatrice's growth (complaint and answer, Par. 5). Of the approximate $1.5 billion in sales for fiscal year 1970, slightly under $750 million can be directly attributed to the sales of those companies acquired by respondent during its previous five fiscal periods (CX 9, p. 17).

Marketing and Advertising

6. The success of the Beatrice companies, by its own admission, is largely the result of marketing skill and knowhow (CX 15 1). This is manifested in its advertising, upon which Beatrice relies heavily to promote consumer brand identification in the sale of its products (findings 7-14). Beatrice has won awards for its advertising and promotion skill (CX 11, p. 16; CX 10, p. 18).

7. Beatrice utilizes all major media and means of reaching the consumer public (CX 5-z8) and advertises and promotes its products from coast to coast. Prime time is used on all three national television networks along with spot TV, radio, national magazines and large space newspaper ads. It has sponsored such famous TV shows as "The Girl from Uncle," the "Today" and "Tonight" shows, "Huntley-Brinkley," "Walt Disney's Wonderful World of Color," and the "Dean Martin" and "Carol Burnett" shows (CX 10, p. 19; CX 11, p. 17; CX 11, p. 19).

8. Other means of advertising used by Beatrice include transport ads, contests, recipe folders, trade magazine ads and outdoor signs (CX 10, p. 19; CX 11, p. 17; CX 12, p. 17).

9. Beatrice uses major league athletes and celebrities to endorse its products. Promotions have been conducted in conjunction with the Clyde Beatty-Cole Brothers Circus and through distributions of more than 100 million coupons. Millions of consumers are reached through Beatrice store displays and window signs (CX 10, p. 19).

10. For fiscal year ended Feb. 29, 1968, Beatrice spent approximately $27,000,000 for advertising (CX 5 z). Advertising expenditures reached $38,000,000 in 1971 (CX 15 o).

11. Beatrice has been among the leaders in innovative packaging of many of its products (CX 10, p. 12).

12. Beatrice has a continuing program of improving profit potential through imaginative marketing (CX 10, p. 17; CX 15 l; CX 16 f).

13. The company has successfully marketed its household products through new packages, display materials, coupons, and special promotions (CX 10, p. 19; CX 18 c-d).

14. Major promotional programs have centered on products within the Chemical & Manufactured Products Division, including Melnor sprinklers, Stiffel lamps and Airstream trailers (CX 12, p. 9; CX 11, p. 17; CX 10, p. 19).

15. Some of Beatrice's more famous advertised brands are:

Meadow Gold (Dairy products)
La Choy (Chinese foods)
Holloway Milk Duds (Candy)
Clark (Candy Bars)
Dannon (Yogurt)
Stiffel (Lamps)
Melnor (Lawn sprinklers)
Miracle White (Laundry cleaning agent)
Rosarita (Mexican foods)
Airstream (Trailers)
Charmglow (Outdoor gas lamps and barbeques)
Hart (Skis)
Morgan (Yachts)

(CX 10, pp. 1-27; CX 11, pp. 1-26; CX 12, pp. 1-26).

Marketing and Distribution

16. Beatrice is highly skilled and efficient in marketing and distribution. Realizing that distribution is expensive, it has established distribution centers which increase effectiveness in marketing its broad line of Beatrice grocery products (CX 17, p. 10; CX 15 l; CX 13, p. 11). Distribution centers have been established in and around Los Angeles, Calif., Atlanta, Portland, Oreg., Denver, Dallas, Memphis, Camden, N.J., Fortoria, Ohio, and Boston. These nationwide distribution facilities enable the provision of faster customer service and reduction of costs by consolidating a variety of products into one shipment thereby improving the ready availability of products in major market areas. Other consolidations enabled by Beatrice's distribution center system are for such functions as sales, billing and inventory control (CX 13, p. 11). In 1970, Beatrice owned a nationwide network of 25 warehouses (CX 13, p. 12), and it also had additional warehouse facilities located in other States (Felkay 3514).

Interstate Commerce

17. Beatrice is, and has been, at all times relevant herein, engaged in selling its products to purchasers located in various States of the United States, and caused such products, when sold, to be transported from its facilities in various States of the United States to such purchasers located in various States of the United States. In so doing, Beatrice is engaged in "commerce," as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, and has been continuously so engaged at all times relevant herein (complaint and answer, Par. 4; Stipulation CX 1 a).

B. The First Acquired Company - Tip Top Brush Co., Inc. and Affiliated Companies

Introduction

18. Prior to and until July 31, 1969, Tip Top Brush Co., Inc. and its affiliated companies, Banner Brush Co., Inc.; Best-Set Brush Co., Inc.; United Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc.; First Synthetic Fibre & Brush Co., Inc.; West Side Leasing Corp.; Excello Roller Co., Inc.; and Star Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc. (hereinafter referred to collectively as "Tip Top"), were corporations organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with their offices and principal places of business located at 151 W. Side Ave., Jersey City, N.J., except with respect to Star Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc., which was organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 690 Harrison Ave., Boston, Mass. (complaint and answer, Par. 6).

19. Prior to acquisition by Beatrice, all of the issued and outstanding capital stock of each of the corporations listed in paragraph 18 above, were owned by Miklos Felkay and Madelaine Felkay. Mr. Felkay had been in the brush business in Hungary. In 1948, his business was nationalized by the Communists and he and his family came to the United States (CX 22). Felkay entered the United States' paint brush business in 1948 and began making artist brushes and small consumer, throwaway brushes (CX 22, Felkay 1248). A 1950 balance sheet of Tip Top's shows total assets of $44,000 and a plant and equipment investment of $7,000 (RX 215). These corporations were closely held and operated so as to mutually benefit each other (complaint and answer, Par. 7).

20. On July 31, 1969, Beatrice acquired all of the issued and outstanding capital stock of Tip Top in exchange for up to 85,000 shares of Beatrice's common stock (complaint and answer, Par. 10).

21. At the time of its acquisition by Beatrice and continuously since, Tip Top has been engaged in the manufacture and sale of paint brushes, paint rollers, and paint roller accessories (CX 5 z10-11).

Phenomenal Growth of Tip Top

22. Since its inception, Tip Top has experienced what the company describes as "phenomenal growth" (CX 22). Tip Top began operations in 1949 in New York City, engaging at that time in the manufacture and sale of paint brushes. By 1955, the company had moved to a more spacious location of 20,000 square feet and had opened a west coast warehouse located in Los Angeles, Calif. By that year, Tip Top had 50 employees and its name had become well known throughout the nation. Continuing expansion necessitated the company's move to its current location in Jersey City, N.J., in July 1961, where it occupied a large factory totaling more than 110,000 square feet as of the time of the acquisition and engaged in the manufacture of a complete line of paint brushes and paint rollers (CX 22).

Growth Through Acquisition

23. Prior to its acquisition by Beatrice, Tip Top had acquired several paint brush and roller manufacturers. In the late 1950's or early 1960's, Tip Top purchased the United Brush Manufacturing Company, a long established producer of paint brushes (Felkay 974). In 1967, Tip Top acquired Pitegoff Brothers, Inc., a manufacturer of paint brushes (CX 34-36, Felkay 1327). On July 1, 1969, Tip Top purchased substantially all of the assets of Star Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc., a well-known manufacturer of paint and varnish brushes and distributor of paint rollers (CX 37). During the period prior to its acquisition, Tip Top considered purchasing additional paint brush and roller companies (Felkay 983, 984-85).

For fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1968, Tip Top had net sales of approximately $5,425,000 (CX 5 z-10). In that year, Tip Top was the fifth largest manufacturer of manually powered paint applicators in the United States (CX 108 b).

24. By 1969, due to its acquisitions and internal development, Tip Top had manufacturing facilities in Boston, Mass., and Jersey City, N.J., and warehouses in Los Angeles, Calif., and in Chicago, Ill. (CX 5 j; CX 22; CX 47 b, c.) Its initial employment of 10 had increased to in excess of 250 (Felkay 983). By the end of that year, Tip Top had become the third largest domestic manufacturer of manually powered paint applicators, with sales of approximately $7.4 million (CX 108 c).

25. In 1969, Tip Top had one of the most completely automated manufacturing facilities in the industry (CX 22).

26. In 1969, it was the expressed intention of Tip Top management to become the number one factor in its industry. It was estimated that this goal could be achieved by 1974-75 (Felkay 992-94, Schlytter 1000).

Products and Distribution

27. Tip Top is and has been in the business of making and selling brushes and rollers. In 1958, Tip Top's products were sold throughout the United States directly to drug chains, food chains, lumber yards, variety stores (Felkay 1250) and mass merchandisers (Felkay 1261). Prior to 1958, Tip Top was unable to place its brush line with jobbers since the jobber who sold to small dealers (Felkay 1251) carried only products of the then-established old line brush concerns, i.e., Wooster, Baker, Rubberset and PPG (Felkay 1251). These products were professional paint brushes. Such brushes, in comparison with the Tip Top product, were thicker, heavier brushes with more and longer filaments and were made differently so as to carry more paint to a surface (Felkay 1254). In 1958, such brushes sold at retail from $5-$25, whereas Tip Top's brushes sold from 99 cents to $2.49 (Felkay 1261). Since 1968, Tip Top has sold a full line of paint brushes (Felkay 1327-28).

Tip Top first saw rollers in the market in the mid-50's (Felkay 1258). Ace, EZ Paintr, Bestt and Thomas then sold rollers (Felkay 1258). In response to the advent of the roller, Tip Top introduced a lower priced 4 inch-brush (Felkay 1258). In comparison to earlier Tip Top brushes, this product was smaller and thinner, had a plastic (versus wood) handle and had lower quality filaments (Felkay 1259). The brush retailed for 99 cents (Felkay 1260).

In 1958, Tip Top began selling lower priced rollers (Felkay 1261). It purchased some of these products for resale from Ace Roller Co. (Felkay 1258, 1296). It also created in 1958 the Excello Roller Co. for its roller business (Felkay 976). Tip Top was an assembler of rollers. To 1969, the only part of the roller kit ever manufactured by Tip Top was the roller cover (Felkay 1296). Even as to these, the cores, fabrics and adhesives for covers were purchased elsewhere. These raw materials were not made by Tip Top (Felkay 1296, 1302). Tip Top never made any parts for roller frames (Felkay 1302).

In addition to making covers, Tip Top also purchased some complete covers elsewhere (Felkay 1325). Cheap, throwaway covers were purchased primarily for resale during 1965-70 from Jackson Roller (Felkay 1305), as well as Marshall Tubing Co. and Interstate Roller (Felkay 1304-06).

Tip Top's promotional roller kits (tray, cover and frame in one unit) retail from 59 cents to 99 cents (Felkay 1306).

The bulk of Tip Top's promotional roller kits are distributed on the east coast (Felkay 1315). Tip Top also sells some kits in the South (Atlanta to Florida) (Felkay 1318); as well as in the Western States (Felkay 1318) and in the Southwestern market (Texas and Louisiana) (Felkay 1323). In the Western States and in the Southwestern market, Tip Top's promotional kits are all jobbed (Felkay 1319, 1323).

28. Tip Top sells its products through salesmen and manufacturers' representatives. Prior to its acquisition by Beatrice, its principal outlets were hardware stores, lumber yards, food chains, paint stores, paint manufacturers, hardware wholesalers, drug stores and chains, discount stores, variety stores, variety wholesalers, general wholesalers, and rack jobbers (CX 5 s; Felkay 988, 1250; Edelson 2328). Recently, Tip Top has sold its merchandise to grocery supermarkets, such as Fred Meyers and Thrifty Acres (Zook 338, Edelson 2328).

Merchandising and Marketing

29. At the time of its acquisition, Tip Top was recognized as "the best merchandiser in the industry" (O'Conner 955). Prior to acquisition, it had shown a record of continuous innovation in merchandising, as shown, by being:

(a) first to design a complete merchandising program for different types of outlets retailing brushes and rollers (CX 22);

(b) first to develop both the mass merchandiser and drug store as potential markets for paint applicators (Felkay 973-74);

(c) first to utilize mobile display showrooms (Felkay 976);

(d) first to offer premiums as an incentive to purchase paint applicator products (Felkay 987);

(e) first to display brushes and rollers in relation to the type of paint being used (Felkay 987); and

Research and Development

30. By 1969, Tip Top possessed a reputation as a leader in research and development, and as a pioneer in the development of tapered nylon brushes designed particularly for the application of new, modern water- and rubber-based latex paints (CX 22).

Interstate Commerce

31. Prior to July 31, 1969, Tip Top sold its products to purchasers located throughout the United States and shipped its products to such purchasers from its facilities located in various States as described in findings 18 and 24. In so doing, Tip Top was engaged in "commerce," as defined in the Clayton Act, as amended (complaint and answer, Par. 9).

C. The Second Acquired Company - Essex Graham Company

Introduction

32. Prior to July 1, 1970, Essex Graham Company (hereinafter referred to as "Essex"), was a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business located at 1700 W. Pershing Rd., Chicago, Ill. (complaint and answer, Par. 11).

33. On July 1, 1970, Beatrice acquired substantially all of the assets of Essex in exchange for shares of Beatrice common stock (complaint and answer, Par. 14).

Financial Growth

34. In 1969, the year preceding its acquisition by Beatrice, Essex had net sales of approximately $2,216,000 and its total assets approximated $2,322,000 (complaint and answer, Par. 12). In that year, it was the fifth largest manufacturer of paint rollers in the United States (CX 109 c).

35. In the 6-year period preceding its acquisition by Beatrice, Essex was an economically strong and viable concern. Based upon relatively stable sales during that period, operating income rose steadily each year, increasing from $80,483 in 1964 to $220,093 by 1969, while total assets increased over 273 percent, rising from approximately $510,000 in 1964 to approximately $2,322,000 in 1969 (CX 39 a-c; CX 41 a-c; CX 42 f; CX 43 a-e).

Products and Distribution

36. Essex, at the date of its acquisition by Beatrice, was engaged solely in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of paint rollers and paint roller accessories (CX 5z11-12). Subsequent to the acquisition, it began to distribute paint brushes (CX 32 a, CX 32 l-p).

37. Prior to its acquisition by Beatrice, Essex sold its products through sales representatives and by competitive bids. These sales representatives do not sell exclusively to paint stores but sell to additional kinds of customers such as automotive stores (Greenberg 1459-60, Weiss 540, Zook 451A, Gartner 3207-08). At that time, the principal outlets for its products were paint stores and chains, hardware jobbers, paint and hardware distributors, variety stores and chains, mass merchandisers, department stores, the U.S. Government and other brush and roller manufacturers (CX 5 s-t; Felkay 1385-86; Freund 1415, 1429-30; Greenberg 1462). After its acquisition by Tip Top, Essex Graham supplied all of Tip Top's roller requirements (Strobel 3286). The bulk of these were in the lower priced category (Greenberg 1469).

38. Prior to July 1, 1970, Essex sold its products to purchasers located throughout the United States and shipped its products to such purchasers from its facilities in Illinois. In so doing, Essex was engaged in "commerce," as defined in the Clayton Act, as amended (complaint and answer, Par. 13).

II. NATURE OF THE TRADE AND COMMERCE

41. A paint roller is used for the manual application of paint to a surface. It consists of a paint roller sleeve or cover that applies the paint, the frame which holds the cover, the tray into which the paint is poured, extension handles and miscellaneous accessories such as trim rollers and bucket grids. Other products included in the category are painter's mitts and pad applicators (Zook 233, 262; Weiss 466; Felkay 1302). A pad applicator is a device where roller fabric is cut to size and bonded to an oblong frame (Zook 267-68). It is included in the accounting of rollers because it is made of the same material (Zook 233, Lieberman 681).

Artist Brushes

42. The manufacture and sale of artist brushes differs in many ways from that of paint brushes:

(a) The industry recognizes that the manufacture and sale of artist brushes is a separate industry from that of paint brushes (Zook 230-32, Weiss 465-66).

(b) The manufacture of artist brushes requires a different type of knowledge, equipment, bristles, handles and ferrules than the manufacture of paint brushes (Zook 230-32, Weiss 465-66, Shulman 658).

(c) Different manufacturers produce artist brushes than produce paint brushes (Zook 230-32, Weiss 456-66, Edelson 2293-94).

(d) Artist brushes are distributed differently than paint brushes (Zook 230-32). Artist brushes, when sold in the same store, are displayed in a different part of the store than other paint brushes (Weiss 572).

(e) An artist brush is made of much more expensive filament material than are paint brushes (Zook 230-32, Weiss 465-66, Shulman 658).

(f) An artist brush is designed for a specialized use: to paint pictures or to do hobby work and are not interchangeable with or included among manually powered paint applicators (Zook 230, Shulman 658).

Paint Brushes and Rollers are Part of the Same Overall Market

43. Paint brushes and rollers are interchangeable in use to a very great degree (Weiss 471). Paint brushes and rollers are distributed by the same salesmen to the same buyers, shipped together, and stocked, merchandised and promoted together (Zook 258-59, 291-92; Weiss 462-63; Touchett 581-85, 595-604; Lieberman 672-73).

44. Both customers and salespersonnel exert pressure on manufacturers of manually powered paint applicators to sell both paint brushes and rollers (CX 52, CX 53, CX 54, CX 55, CX 56, CX 57, CX 58, Weiss 463, Touchett 585-96, Lieberman 672-73). These manufacturers believe that they would lose sales and that their businesses would be adversely affected if they did not sell both paint brushes and rollers (Touchett 585; Shulman 635; Felkay 977, 980-81; Gartner 2251; Lieberman 672-73). One industry leader felt it would be a definite threat to his company's position, while another felt that the existence of his business would be threatened if brushes could not be delivered along with paint rollers (Touchett 585, Shulman 635).

45. The overwhelming majority of significant manufacturers of manually powered paint applicators in 1969 each manufactured both brushes and rollers in that year (Findings 46, 47, 48).

46. The eight largest and 13 of the top 15 manufacturers of manually powered paint applicators manufactured both brushes and rollers in 1969. These 13 firms accounted for approximately 75 percent of manually powered paint applicator shipments. The largest firm in the manually powered paint applicator industry which did not manufacture both brushes and rollers ranked 12th with a 2.6 percent market share (CX 108 c, CX 109 c, CX 110 c).

47. In 1969, the largest eight manufacturers of paint brushes also manufactured rollers. These top eight accounted for 58.6 percent of all shipments of paint brushes in that year (CX 109 c, 110 c). Only one of the top 15 did not manufacture paint rollers (CX 109 c, CX 110 c).

48. Every one of the 13 largest manufacturers of paint rollers in 1969 except Essex Graham also manufactured brushes in 1969 (CX 109 c, CX 110 c). These 12 firms accounted for 76.5 percent of shipments of paint rollers in that year (CX 109 c).

49. Both paint brushes and rollers are sold by manufacturers to the same types of retail outlets such as hardware stores, lumber yards, paint stores, department stores, mail order houses, mass merchandisers, and drug and grocery chains (CX 27 d; CX 115 z7, z8; Felkay 973-74, 988; Zook 258-59, 412-17; Lieberman 681; Bready 818-21; Zurawin 843-47; Brumm 1536, 1543; Gartner 2244; Edelson 2328).

Beginning in the latter 1950's and continuing until the late 1960's, competitors in the manually powered paint applicator industry began selling to mass merchandisers. As the number of mass merchandiser outlets increased, a growing number of manually powered paint applicator manufacturers began selling to this retail outlet. As witness Weiss succinctly stated, "* * * the manufacturing and distributing patterns are following the retail pattern" (Weiss 532). By the latter 1960's, "* * * everybody was in the market * * *." (Felkay 1263). As respondent's proposed findings indicate, "virtually all companies identified of record have gotten into this * * * business." (RPF, p. 47). Since this type of retail outlet was growing, it was to be expected that companies in the industry would begin making sales efforts to these outlets. But all companies in the industry, as indicated above, sought this growing business; companies did not specialize in sales to this one type of retail outlet. To characterize selling a new customer as "entry", in an antitrust sense, is illusory. The manufacturers did not "enter" anything; they simply added a new outlet. Nor did manufacturers forego selling other types of retail outlets to specialize in selling to mass merchandisers; the record shows clearly that manufacturers continued to sell to all types of outlets (Zook 258; Weiss 478; Felkay

The reason that companies in the industry sell to all types of customers is because of the wide variety of brushes and rollers carried by these customers. As testified to by respondent's witness Felkay, paint and hardware stores do not carry only the more expensive brushes and rollers; rather they carry both the inexpensive and more costly products (Felkay 1387-88; See also Zook 451; Weiss 529; Cannon 1201). Mass merchandisers such as Sears carry "good, better, and best" paint applicator products (Brumm 1543, Cannon 1137). Mass merchandisers generally carry both more expensive and throwaway brushes (Cannon 1200, Felkay 1387). As a result, distribution channels are intermingled; jobbers and distributors sell to department stores, food stores and variety chains as well as to paint stores and paint contractors (Weiss 529, 534; Cannon 1202). These distributors carry lower priced manually powered paint applicator products (Edelson 2472, Tyler 2103, Felkay 1387), as well as more expensive brushes and rollers (Cannon 1170, 1172). Some paint and hardware stores are sold direct (Weiss 529, 533), as are some variety stores and large retail outlets (Cannon 1202). Both jobbers and mass merchandisers may carry a "professional line" of paint brushes (Weiss 529).

The same salesmen and manufacturer's representatives sell to all types of paint brush and roller outlets (Weiss 540, Zook 451A, Gartner 3207-08).

Pricing

50. Many retail outlets, such as Sears, mass merchandisers, hardware stores, paint stores and drug chains carry both lower priced and higher priced brushes and rollers (CX 27 e, f; Greenberg 1433; Brumm 1540-43; Cannon 1200-01; Zook 450; Felkay 1387).

51. Manufacturers of paint brushes and rollers do not consider the prices of aerosol cans and power spray equipment in setting paint brush and roller prices (Zook 304-05, Weiss 475, Touchett 596-97).

52. Retail outlets do not purchase aerosols to replace paint brushes and rollers, nor do they increase their purchases of aerosols or paint brushes and rollers to the detriment of the remaining category (Weiss 473).

53. The average retail price of both brushes and rollers sold by several major manufacturers and retailers is $5.00 and under (Zook 302; Weiss 473-74; Edwards 711; Silverman 764-65; George 940).

54. In 1969, many leading paint brush and roller manufacturers made and sold both high and low priced brushes and rollers (Brumm 1540; Zook 302; Weiss 473; Shulman 637; Tyler 2125, 2129-30).

Recognition of the Industry

55. The paint brush and roller industry is generally recognized as a separate industry. Beatrice Foods made a study entitled "The Study of the Paint Brush and Paint Roller Market for Beatrice Foods Company" (Schlytter 999). The Bureau of Census categorizes brushes and rollers in the same five-digit SIC category, 39912. This category includes no other products (CX 74).

Other Paint Applicators

56. Other paint applicators consist of power spray equipment and aerosol cans. It has been stipulated in this action that "brushes and aerosols are interchangeable for certain uses" (Tr. 1874). The manufacture, distribution, sale and use of these products differ in many ways from that of paint brushes and rollers.

Aerosols

57. An aerosol paint spray (hereinafter "aerosols") consists of a metal container holding from 8 to 32 ounces of paint and propellant (Felkay 1272, DeGregory 1664). Aerosols apply paint directly to the surface, using the pressure of the propellant to force the paint through an orifice, which atomizes it (Weiss 468).

58. Aerosols are normally manufactured and sold by firms different from those which manufacture and sell manually powered paint applicators (Kerr 1905-06, CX 108 a-b, 109 a-c, 110 a-c).

59. Manufacturers of aerosols often package and sell many aerosol items other than aerosol spray paint (Mulliken 2101, Kerr 1900). Such other aerosol items can be produced on the same equipment used to produce aerosol spray paint (Mulliken 2101, Weiss 468-69, Kerr 1898). The same containers are used to package each type of aerosol product (Mulliken 2100-01, Weiss 468-69, Kerr 1898).

60. Aerosols are manufactured using different technology and machinery from that used to produce manually powered paint applicators (Weiss 468-69, Felkay 1304, Mulliken 2097).

61. Aerosol manufacturers recognize aerosols as a separate industry. There is a specialized trade organization for aerosol producers, the Chemical Specialties Manufacturers Association (Weiss 484; Mulliken 2030, 2033-34) and a specialized trade publication, "Aerosol Age" (Weiss 485). A seller of aerosols considers them to be in a market "completely different from the paint brush and paint roller market." (Weiss 472-73).

62. Aerosols are used for specialized painting applications for which the use of a paint brush or roller would be impractical (Chasen 2368). Aerosols are used for painting small, intricate objects, such as wrought iron chairs or radiators (Weiss 470-71, Touchett 595-602, Bready 821, Kerr 1872, Felkay 1272, Chasen 2368). Aerosols are not used for larger flat surfaces as their cost for such applications would far exceed the cost of applying paint by paint brush or roller (Weiss 470-71, Touchett 595-602).

Spray Equipment

63. Sprayers consist of mechanical equipment for applying paint under force (Zook 262). There are three basic types of such sprayers, conventional, airless and electrostatic (Adams 772, Chasen 2369).

64. A conventional spray system is powered by compressed air generated by an air compressor (Adams 793). Conventional sprayers consist of a spray gun, made up of a container to hold the paint and a nozzle through which the paint is forced, and a compressor (Chasen 2369-70).

65. Airless sprayers use hydraulic pressure to force the paint through a small orifice (Adams 773, 792-93; Chasen 2369-70). The principal components of an airless sprayer are a high pressure pump, an airless spray gun, and the high pressure hoses which convey the paint from the pump to the gun (Adams 773).

66. Electrostatic sprayers apply paint to an object by placing an opposite electrical charge on the item to be coated from the electrical charge of the paint. The paint when released by such sprayers is thereby attracted solely to the object to be painted (Chasen 2369-70).

67. A cross section of witnesses directly involved in the making and/or selling of spray equipment testified on the prices of spray equipment. Their testimony shows that the range of prices of spray equipment is considerably higher than the range of prices for manually powered paint applicators (Findings 53, 68).

68. The least expensive complete spray unit sold by Sears had a list price of $37.95 (Panoessa 2001). A painting contractor testified that the least expensive spray equipment used in his business cost $50 and that some equipment used cost as much as $1500 (Chasen 2376-77). Wooster manufactures spray equipment ranging in price from $895 to $1095 (Zook 262). The entire range of Bink's spray equipment was $75 to $1500 (Adams 778-79). Respondent's witness Salovich testified as to two models of spray applicators sold by Spraytech with suggested retail prices of $50 and $119 (Salovich 1946-53).

69. The manufacture of sprayers is totally different from the manufacture of paint brushes and rollers (Zook 262-68, Weiss 466-67, Touchett 630, Shulman 645-47, Lieberman 675-81). Sprayers are primarily a precision machined metal product. Their manufacture uses processes common to a standard machine and metal working shop (Adams 777).

70. The raw materials used to manufacture sprayers are entirely different from those used to manufacture paint brushes and rollers. The manufacture of sprayers requires special forgings, stampings and steel bar stock while the manufacture of brushes and rollers requires filament, handles, glue, ferrules, fabric, and cardboard tubes (Adams 777, Weiss 466-67, Zook 266-68).

71. With few exceptions, sprayers are manufactured and sold by firms different from those which manufacture and sell manually powered paint applicators (Adams 810; Zook 293-95; Lieberman 673-74; Bready 823; CX 80 d; CX 81 d; CX 86 d; CX 87 g; CX 88 f; CX 90 a; CX 91 d, k; CX 93 g; CX 96 d; CX 97 d; CX 98 d).

72. The government and paint brush and roller manufacturers recognize spray applicators as a separate industry. One paint brush and roller manufacturer stated: "* * * the spray business is a completely different type of business. It requires a much more degree of technical skill, a greater degree of having facilities, a bigger * * * investment, * * *. It takes a completely different selling organization. I don't know of any of our reps * * * that in themselves handle a paint spray line or paint gun line, because they call on different buyers. It is a different animal in business." (Touchett 630-31).

73. A manufacturer of sprayers did not consider any paint brush or roller firm to be a primary competitor (Adams 771-72).

74. Special training is required to achieve good results with a spray gun (CX 77, Adams 816-17). They are difficult to use. There are a multitude of things that can go wrong (Zook 265).

75. Sellers of sprayers must provide repair services and spare parts. Such services are not provided by paint brush and roller manufacturers (Zook 265-66; CX 112; Bready 822). Manufacturers of sprayers do not consider the costs of paint brushes and rollers in setting sprayer prices (Zook 305, Adams 790).

76. Sprayers are used to apply paint on small specialty jobs such as iron work and irregularly surfaced items (Zook 300-01), and by painting contractors for large, outdoor jobs (Chasen 2371, 2378). A painting contractor would not use a sprayer to paint an average sized room or one wall, since it would be more expensive than using a brush or roller (Adams 780-82, Chasen 2377). The large commercial sprayer manufactured by Wooster would be used for large commercial jobs such as factory ceilings and huge projects (Zook 300-01).

Paint Brush and Roller Submarkets

77. The raw materials used to manufacture paint brushes are completely different from the raw materials used to manufacture paint rollers (findings 40, 41).

78. The machinery used to manufacture paint brushes is completely different from the machinery used to manufacture paint rollers (Brumm 1522; Linzer 3355, 3361; Shulman 646; Lieberman 675; Cantonis 2146).

79. The technology required to manufacture paint brushes is completely different from the technology required to manufacture paint rollers (Benson 3427-28, 3432; Freund 1428-29).

80. Paint brushes and rollers have specialized characteristics and uses. Paint brushes are preferred to rollers for smaller flat surfaces and trim work while paint rollers are preferred to brushes for medium and larger flat surfaces (Bready 821, Weiss 471). Brushes are normally used for applying paint to furniture (Weiss 471, Touchett 613), and are preferred for outdoor walls of houses (Touchett 614).

81. Paint brush manufacturers are represented by their own trade association. Continual efforts to include roller manufacturers within the American Brush Manufacturer's Association have met with defeat (Weiss 482-84).

Conclusionary Findings Re Nature of the Trade and Commerce

82. The manufacture and sale of artist brushes, power spray equipment and aerosol cans are not included in the manually powered paint applicator line of commerce (findings 42, 56-79).

83. The relevant line of commerce in this proceeding consists of the manufacture and sale of manually powered paint applicators (findings 39-76).

84. A relevant submarket in this proceeding consists of the manufacture and sale of paint brushes (findings 77-81). An additional relevant submarket in this proceeding consists of the manufacture and sale of paint rollers and accessories (findings 77-81).

Size and Concentration of the Manually Powered Paint Applicator Industry

85. In 1967, total shipments of manually powered paint applicators were $88.6 million (CX 74, p. 39D-15).[2] Such shipments amounted to $96.4 million in 1968 and $98.2 million in 1969 (CX 75, p. 35).

86. The four largest manufacturers of manually powered paint applicators accounted for 36.6 percent of shipments in 1967, 38.1 percent in 1968 and 41.3 percent in 1969. The eight largest manufacturers of manually powered paint applicators accounted for 52.8 percent of shipments in 1967, 55.6 percent in 1968 and 62.5 percent in 1969 (CX 108 a-c).

87. Since 1967, concentration in the manufacture and sale of manually powered paint applicators has been increasing. Between 1967 and 1969, the four firm concentration ratio increased 4.7 percent, and the eight firm ratio increased 9.7 percent. Calculated on a pro forma basis for 1969 to account for acquisitions made subsequent to 1969, the four firm concentration ratio increased to 47.4 percent, or a gain of 10.8 percent. Calculated on a similar pro forma basis, the 1969 pro forma eight firm ratio was 68.5 percent, or a gain of 15.7 percent over 1967.[3] (CX 108 a-d).

[2] Respondent states that the use of "value of shipments" for SIC product category 39912, "paint and varnish brushes and paint rollers" (CX 74, p. 39D-15), is invalid (RPF 16-31). The Census data was used solely to corroborate other market share data (see findings 39-92), and the undersigned finds that the figures for the firms listed on CXs 108, 109, 110 represent the major known competitors in the industry. (See footnote to Finding 87, infra.) The Commission has repeatedly held that Census data may be used for the purpose of corroboration where there is independent evidence and identification of the major competitors in the market (Papercraft Corp., Docket No. 8779, 3 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 19,725, pp. 21,779-80 (F.T.C. 1971) [78 F.T.C. 1352]; Avnet, Inc., Docket No. 8775, 3 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 20,252, at p. 22,275 (1973) [82 F.T.C. 391].

In 1967, total shipments of paint brushes were $62.2 million (CX 74, p. 39D-15). Such shipments amounted to $68.9 million in 1967 and $73.5 million in 1969 (CX 110 a, c).

88. The four largest manufacturers of paint brushes accounted for 35.5 percent of shipments in 1967, 36.0 percent in 1968, and 39.0 percent in 1969 (CX 110 a-c). The eight largest manufacturers of paint brushes accounted for 55.0 percent of shipments in 1967, 55.9 percent in 1968, and 58.6 percent in 1969 (CX 110 a-c).

89. Since 1967, concentration in the manufacture and sale of paint brushes has been increasing. Between 1967 and 1969, the four firm concentration ratio increased from 35.5 percent to 39.0 percent, or a gain of 3.5 percent. The eight firm concentration ratio increased 3.6 percent over 1967 (CX 110 a-c).

90. In 1967, total shipments of paint rollers were $26.5 million (CX 74, p. 39D-15). Such shipments amounted to $30.2 million in 1968 and $32.1 million in 1969 (CX 109 b-c).

91. The four largest manufacturers of paint rollers accounted for 59.0 percent of shipments in 1967. Attributing the 1969 shipments of Essex Graham to Beatrice, the four largest manufacturers in 1969 accounted for 61.6 percent of shipments. The eight largest firms in 1967 accounted for 80.1 percent. Attributing the 1969 shipments of Essex Graham to Beatrice, the eight largest in 1969 accounted for 80.8 percent (CX 109 a-c).

Concentration in the manufacture and sale of paint rollers is high and rising. On the above basis of attributing Essex Graham 1969 shipments to Beatrice, the four firm concentration ratio rose 2.6 percent over the 1967 figure, and the eight firm concentration ratio rose 0.7 percent over the 1967 figure (CX 109 a-c).

Prior to 1969, the vast majority of leading producers of manually powered paint applicators were small firms whose products consisted primarily of manually powered paint applicators (CX 108 a-c; CX 109 a-c; CX 110 a-c; Zook 229; Weiss 460; Shulman 634; Touchett 581-82; Lieberman 671; Silverman 715; Blum 898; Gallegher 900-01; Cantonis 2140; Edelson 2428; Leichter 3321; Rose 3406; Waksman 3462; findings 21, 36).

[3] Respondent's attempt to impugn complaint counsel's concentration figures was notably unsuccessful. From 10 subpoenas duces tecum granted to respondent for the purpose of obtaining manufactured sales of manually powered paint applicators, respondent, with all its industry knowledge, could find no manufacturer remotely approaching complaint counsel's top eight competitors in its market and submarkets. Manufactured sales of the two largest firms introduced by respondent ranked 15th and 17th among manufacturers of manually powered paint applicators in 1969 and 14th and 15th among manufacturers of paint brushes in that year. No roller manufacturers of any substance were produced for the record (CX 108 c; CX 109 c; CX 110 c; RX 238, in camera; RX 239, in camera; RX 242, in camera; RX 243, in camera).

92. The record shows 21 acquisitions of firms producing manually powered paint applicators, 11 of which occurred between 1969 and December 1972, and 14 of which have occurred since 1967.

93. The following acquisitions took place between 1969 and December 1972:

Conclusions

The Relevant Line of Commerce

The Manually Powered Paint Applicator Industry

The manually powered paint applicator industry is an appropriate line of commerce to analyze the anticompetitive effects of this acquisition. In Brown Shoe, the Supreme Court gave guidelines for determining the appropriate product market and submarkets as follows:

> The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. * * * [W]ithin this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which * * * constitute product markets for antitrust purposes.
> * * * The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining * * * industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes and specialized vendors. Because § 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits any merger which may substantially lessen competition "in any line of commerce" (emphasis supplied), it is necessary to examine the effects of a merger in each such economically significant submarket to determine if there is a reasonable probability that the merger will substantially lessen competition. If such a probability is found to exist, the merger is proscribed. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325 (1962).

It is not necessary for each of the seven criteria set forth in Brown Shoe to be present in every merger case in order to establish a market. A relevant market has been found to exist where three or less of the Brown Shoe criteria were present. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, 353 U.S. 586, 593-95 (1957); General Foods Corporation v. FTC, 386 F.2d 936, 941 (1967); Reynolds Metals Co. v. FTC, 309 F.2d 223 (D.C. Cir. 1962).

The above analysis when applied to the facts at hand shows that manually powered paint applicators is the relevant line of commerce. Manually powered paint applicators have the following common elements which distinguish them from all other products:

a. Manually powered paint applicator products are used for the same purposes and are interchangeable in use to a very great extent (finding 43). However, there is minimal interchangeability between manually powered paint applicators and other paint applicators because of differences in purpose, uses, skills required for application and convenience (findings 62, 74, 76, 80).

b. Manually powered paint applicators have uses for which there are no practical substitutes. The great majority of companies in this record which manufacture manually powered paint applicators make both paint brushes and paint rollers and no other type of applicator (CXs 80, 81, 86, 87, 88, 90, 96, 97, CX 108 c, CX 5z10-12).

c. No cross-elasticity of demand exists between manually powered paint applicator products and other paint applicator products. Manufacturers of manually powered paint applicators do not take into account prices of aerosols and spray equipment when pricing their products (finding 51). Retailers purchase manually powered applicators independent of their purchases of other paint applicator products (finding 52).

d. Respondent and the government recognize that the manufacture and sale of manually powered paint applicators constitutes a separate market (finding 55). The aerosol and spray industries are also recognized as economic entities separate from the manually powered paint application industry (findings 61, 75).

e. Manually powered paint applicators are distinguished in price and cost of application from other methods of applying paint. The average brush and roller generally retails for under $5. Spray equipment is priced as high as $1500 (findings 53, 68). For any substantial surface, aerosols are by far a more costly means of application than manually powered paint applicators (finding 62).[4]

f. The mere fact that brushes and aerosols (spray equipment) may be interchangeable for certain uses (finding 56) does not vitiate the fact that for other reasons brushes possess sufficient differences because of their peculiar uses, characteristics and prices to support the finding that they constitute a distinct product line (see American Brake Shoe Co., 73 F.T.C. 658, 669, 671).

g. Manufacture of manually powered paint applicators requires specialized know-how experience, and a trained labor force (findings 61, 69, 78). The facilities and raw materials for manufacturing manually powered paint applicators are completely different from those needed to manufacture other types of paint applicators (findings 40, 41, 60, 69, 70).

h. Manually powered paint applicators are grouped together for distribution, promotion and sales (finding 43).

By the above test, the relevant market for consideration in this matter is clearly the manually powered paint applicator industry.

Submarkets

Paint Brushes and Paint Rollers are Relevant and Appropriate Submarkets in this Proceeding

Applying the Brown Shoe criteria, the paint brush submarket can be distinguished from the paint roller (and paint roller accessories) submarket as follows:

[4] The courts have repeatedly emphasized that price differentials are important in separating markets for antitrust purposes. Judge (now Chief Justice) Burger stated in Reynolds Metal Company v. FTC, 309 F.2d 223, 229 (D.C. Cir. 1962):

> * * * We think price differentials have an important if not decisive bearing in the quest to delimit a submarket. * * * Such a difference in price as appears on this record must effectively preclude comparison, and inclusion in the same market, of products as between which the difference exists, at least for purposes of inquiry under Sec. 7 of the Clayton Act.

Two years after Brown Shoe, the Supreme Court stated:

> * * * to ignore price in determining the relevant line of commerce is to ignore the single, most important, practical factor in the business. (United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 276 (1964))

a. Paint brush manufacturers are represented by a separate trade association, and repeated attempts of roller manufacturers to join that association have met with failure (finding 81).

b. Paint brushes and rollers have peculiar characteristics and uses. Brushes are usually used for certain applications, and rollers for others. In certain situations, only one of the products may be used (finding 80).

c. Paint brushes and paint rollers have separate and distinct production facilities. Production machinery is entirely different, as is the technology (findings 78, 79). Completely different raw materials and component parts make up brushes and rollers (finding 77).

The above facts illustrate that paint brushes and paint rollers are appropriate submarkets. While an overall line of commerce including these products does exist, each can be distinguished from the other. Therefore, for purposes of analysis in this matter, paint brushes and rollers constitute separate submarkets.

III. The Geographic Market

95. The geographic market with respect to each of the relevant lines of commerce shown in Part II, supra, is the United States as a whole. Many firms, including each of the major factors in the relevant lines of commerce, compete and distribute their products on a nationwide basis (CX 5 t-u; Zook 309, 445; Weiss 486; Touchett 602; Lieberman 672; Silverman 718; Zurawin 843; Blum 899; Gallegher 903; Felkay 1250, 1318, 1323; Greenberg 1431, 1462-63; Edelson 2290). One manufacturer who did not sell nationally plans to do so in the immediate future (Cantonis 2177). In 1968 and 1969, there were no imports of paint brushes into the United States (Felkay 1365).

IV. The Tip Top Acquisition

A. Beatrice as a Potential Entrant

Beatrice's Expansion into the Home and Garden Accessory Field

96. Beatrice has followed a policy over the years of growth by acquisition (findings 3, 4 and 5). During the period 1965-70, the company's sales almost doubled. Almost one-half total corporate sales in 1970 were accounted for by firms acquired by Beatrice during that period (CX 9, p. 17).

97. Respondent has no overall plan as to the kinds of concerns it will acquire (Karnes 1211). The basic guides followed by respondent in considering and making acquisitions are (1) is the subject company a going, viable, profitable concern situated in a growing industry, (2) will the company's management continue in the business, and (3) will the company contribute to, and not dilute, respondent's earnings per share ratio (Karnes 1210). Respondent's business is operated on an individual profit center basis with decentralized management (Karnes 1212). Its companies must stand on their own feet (Karnes 1212).

98. In the years immediately preceding the Tip Top acquisition, Beatrice diversified into a number of nonfood fields appraised as having exceptional potential for growth of sales and profits (CX 11, p. 9; CX 13, p. 15). Included within such nonfood fields was the home and garden accessory field (CX 21, p. 9; CX 13, p. 15).

99. In 1964, Beatrice began demonstrating an interest in "leisure-time companies, home-and-garden companies-things for home and garden" (Karnes 1213). Following extensive research by management and market specialists (CX 12, p. 9), Beatrice began diversifying in 1965 into the home and garden accessories field by acquiring the Stiffel Company, a manufacturer of lampshades and decorator lamps (CX 2 f; Cannon 1144; CX 10, p. 6). Stiffel doubled its production capacity during the year following its acquisition (CX 10, p. 6).

100. Beatrice's continued interest in the home and garden accessory field led to a study of "the do-it-yourself market for the home consumer * * *" (Karnes 1213). This study was made in 1967 because of Beatrice's interest in Melnor Industries (Karnes 1213). This area was considered one of "very rapid growth and potential great profit" by Beatrice (Cannon 1163).

101. Beatrice made its second acquisition in the home and garden accessory field through its 1967 acquisition of Melnor Industries (CX 2 e), a manufacturer of water sprinkling equipment, garden supplies and lawn and garden care tools (Cannon 1136; CX 10, p. 8). Melnor distributes its products through department stores, drug stores, mass merchandisers, specialty stores, grocery stores, hardware stores, and variety stores (Cannon 1136-37).

102. During fiscal 1968, Beatrice continued its acquisitions in the home and garden accessory field by acquiring six additional companies. Companies acquired were World Dryer Corporation, Charmglow Products, Inc., Max Kahn Curtain Corporation, Indiana Moulding & Frame Co., Vogel-Petersen Co., and the Farboil Company (CX 11, p. 9; CX 2 c, d, f, h). As of the end of fiscal 1968, those companies manufactured the following home and garden accessory products:

World Dryer - small household electric appliances (CX 2 h).

Charmglow - electric and nonelectric lighting equipment (CX 2 c), gas fired barbeques (Cannon 1144), gas patio lamps (Cannon 1144).

Kahn Curtain - curtains and drapes (CX 2 d; CX 11, p. 9).

Indiana Moulding - wood moulding, mirrors, picture frames (CX 2 d; CX 11, p. 9).

Farboil - speciality coatings and paints (CX 11, p. 9).

103. During 1969, Beatrice acquired Tip Top and five companies in the home and garden accessory field. These were Beneke Corporation, Hekman Cabinets, Inc. and Hekman Furniture Co., Vatco Companies, A. H. Schwab Company, and Walton Laboratories (CX 2 a, f, g, h). These companies manufacture the following home and garden accessory products:

Beneke Corporation - wood and plastic products (CX 2 b).
Hekman - wood household furniture (CX 2 c).
Vatco - house furnishings, including carpets, rugs, mats (CX 2 f).
Schwab - infants' and children's wood furniture (CX 2 g).
Walton - small household electric appliances (CX 2 h).

104. In 1969, Beatrice established Beatrice Manufacturing Company, which manufactures electric barbeque grills (CX 2 c). Beatrice Manufacturing Company distributes its products to speciality patio and swimming pool supply stores, outdoor living stores and departments, and anyone that sells barbeques (Cannon 1144, 1146).

105. After it had acquired Essex Graham in 1970, Beatrice acquired two additional companies in the home and garden accessory field in 1971. These were Chicago Specialty Manufacturing and Homemaker Industries (CX 2 c, d). Chicago Specialty distributed plumbing specialites (CX 2 c) and Homemaker Industries made bedspreads, sheeting and other allied products (CX 2 d).

106. Prior to the Tip Top acquisition, Beatrice conducted a study of the "paint brush and paint roller market" (Schlytter 999; Karnes 1219; Cannon 1178-79, 1181). Beatrice acquired Tip Top because it passed respondent's guides for acquisitions (Karnes 1163). Beatrice viewed the "paint brush and paint roller market" as a growth market (Cannon 1173, Karnes 1218), and it was interested in this market because of its growth and profit potential (Cannon 1163, 1178; Karnes 1219). Beatrice also viewed Tip Top as being in the "do-it-yourself consumer home improvement market" (Cannon 1163, 1213) which was "in the same general field selling to the same general customers" as Melnor (Karnes 1213, 1220).

107. Beatrice considered entry de novo into the paint brush and roller industry by building a plant, etc. (Karnes 1235, 1240). The company decided not to enter de novo because of the costs and because it would have taken a long period of time to become profitable (Karnes 1240).

108. Immediately prior to the Tip Top acquisition, there were numerous small brush and roller manufacturers available for acquisition as shown by their having been acquired in the period since 1969. Firms available for acquisition by Beatrice in 1969 included Ideal Brush (Weiss 439), American Brush Corp. (Touchett 584), King Paint Rollers (Touchett 608), Maendler Co. (Shulman 635), Benzinger Bros. (Paley 2575), Bestt Roller (Lieberman 672, 673, 686), and Adams Products (RX 239).

109. Beatrice possessed the ability to expand a toehold acquisition (findings 4, 5-14, 113).

110. One of the principal needs of a toehold manufacturer of paint brushes and rollers is financing (Weiss 574-79, Walsh 2400-01). Beatrice had financial assets in excess of $500 million (finding 4) and made substantial capital investments in its subsidiaries (finding 113).

111. When Tip Top decided to sell its business to another company, an acquisition specialist was hired to find a buyer (O'Connor 953-54). This acquisition specialist was also a former executive in the manually powered paint applicator industry (O'Connor 952-53). The specialist made formal presentations to only five companies, three of which were Beatrice, Consolidated Foods, and Borden (O'Connor 956). These were considered "similar" companies by the specialist in that they were large food companies which also carried nonfood items (O'Connor 956-58). The specialist's judgment was borne out by Beatrice and Consolidated Food's subsequent entry (finding 93).

112. On two other occasions when paint brush and roller companies decided to sell their businesses, the merger specialist made a presentation to a very limited number of possible acquirers, including Beatrice and Consolidated Foods (O'Connor 962, 964, 965).

113. Beatrice has made frequent and substantial capital improvements to the companies it has acquired in the home and garden accessory field so that it may continuously expand its product lines, services, distribution and sales in that field (CX 15 m; CX 17, p. 11; CX 10, p. 7; CX 11, pp. 1, 9; CX 12, pp. 4, 9; CX 13, p. 15; CX 14, p. 11).

114. Many products of Beatrice's home and garden accessory group are sold by Beatrice to common customers and distributed to similar outlets such as variety, hardware, grocery and mass merchandise stores, as follows:

116. Beatrice has a nationwide warehousing and transportation system (Cannon 1140-41; CX 13, p. 12; finding 16). However, Tip Top does not use Beatrice warehouses (Felkay 3519). On one isolated occasion, Tip Top used the Soo Terminal in Chicago (Gartner 3158, Strobel 3289-90) and was billed for use of the space (Felkay 3506). Beatrice's non-food products if shipped on Beatrice trucks are charged the same rate as if they used outside commercial carriers (Cannon 1141). The use of Beatrice trucks to deliver roller fabric from a Milwaukee supplier was an isolated instance (Gartner 3158). In any event, Tip Top as a Beatrice subsidiary may not use Beatrice trucks because of ICC regulations (Cannon 1148-49).

117. Grocery supermarkets and chains are becoming outlets for home and garden accessories, including paint brushes and rollers. Industry leaders believe food stores will become an increasingly more significant outlet for manually powered paint applicators in the near future (Weiss 478, Zook 258, Shulman 638-39, Edelson 2328, Gartner 2212).

118. Food brokers are an important method of distribution to food stores. A food broker is a manufacturer's representative selling food and nonfood products primarily to grocery stores (Zurawin 845-50). Beatrice has the largest team of food brokers of any company in the nation (CX 17, p. 10).

119. One paint brush and roller manufacturer testified that approximately half of his sales representatives were food brokers (Zurawin 847). A few other witnesses stated that they too were exploring this sales method (Baker 638, Weiss 478). There is no evidence that Tip Top uses food brokers, although Tip Top has sold to food stores for many years (Felkay 1250).

120. After Beatrice's acquisition of Essex Graham, it engaged in an isolated joint promotional effort with Chicago Specialty Manufacturing Company, another Beatrice subsidiary. However, the joint venture was unsuccessful and discontinued (Cannon 1160-61, CX 32 a-v). The record contains no evidence of any joint promotions by Tip Top with other Beatrice subsidiaries.

121. Corporate discounts are against respondent's company policy (Karnes 1224, Cannon 1155). A corporate discount is injurious to Beatrice's theories of permitting each company to price its own products and it deteriorates the profitability of these companies (Cannon 1156-58). Essex Graham never gave a discount to City Products (Cannon 1159). City Products in a negotiation with Beneke management was given a discount by Beneke "based on a local competitive situation at the time." (Cannon 1159). Felkay of Tip Top had no authority to offer discounts for other Beatrice companies (Cannon 1159). No corporate discount was ever offered to City Products by Beatrice (Karnes 1224).

122. During the period 1968-70, many major paint manufacturing companies commenced distribution and sale of paint brushes and rollers together with other paint products (Felkay 1266). These paint companies market their brushes and rollers together with paint through the same channels served by paint brush and paint roller manufacturers (Bechtel 2280-81). The major paint manufacturing companies have extensive marketing networks (Bechtel 2281). Large paint manufacturing companies sometimes label their applicators with the company name and sometimes they private label them (Bechtel 2281, Earle 2485, Felkay 1276). Paint manufacturers' salesmen handle all of the paint and related products that a company offers for sale (Bechtel 2282). Paint companies compete against paint brush and roller companies for sale of these items (Bechtel 2282, 2284; Felkay 1283-84; Weiss 567; MacIver 2553). Large consumer paint companies have historically jointly promoted the use of paint sundries and brushes and rollers together (Wilson 1818). Large paint companies have provided Tip Top with its strongest competition in recent years (Felkay 1294, Cannon 1201-02). Other competitors have felt the competition from paint companies (Weiss 567).

123. Brooklyn Paint Co. has promoted brushes and rollers with its paint (Wilson 1818). Glidden-Durkee Division of SCM Corp. sells paint and a complete line of sundry closely related products such as paint applicators, brushes, rollers, aerosol products (Bechtel 2280). Glidden's applicators are sold through its own outlets as well as independent dealers. It has leased departments within mass merchandising stores (Bechtel 2281). Some applicators are labeled with the Glidden identification (Bechtel 2281). Sherwin-Williams sells paint, paint applicators and allied products (Earle 2482). These products are sold through Sherwin-Williams' branch stores and directly to dealers (Earle 2484). Sherwin-Williams' sales to the outside are by its Rubberset Company (Earle 2485). Colonial Brush Manufacturing Co. is owned by Tobias Paint Co. (Kalman 2262). Elder & Jencks Brush Co. is owned by Muralo Paint Co. (Tr. 2778). Paint manufacturing companies operating retail paint stores exert a strong influence in the markets for the products sold by Tip Top and its competitors (Bechtel 2280-81, Felkay 1284-85).

124. Media advertising is insignificant in and to the paint applicator industry (Zook 450, Weiss 527). Applicator customers do not buy based on such advertising (Bready 828). One industry competitor had no understanding of the term consumer advertising (Zurawin 877). One competitor testified that a large portion of its advertising expenses was of the display-type or promotions (Zook 450). Another competitor testified that he began an advertising campaign in the late 1940's and discontinued it because it was not worthwhile (Shulman 639-40). Competitors of Tip Top testified that private labeling is used extensively in paint brush and roller selling (Zook 450, Weiss 535-36). Wooster's business is between one-quarter and one-third in private label and this percentage has increased significantly over the years (Zook 449). Private label branding has paralleled the growth of sales to mass merchandisers who request private label items (Zook 450). An industry with heavy private labeling is not generally engaged in advertising.

Conclusions

The complaint alleges the elimination of potential competition between Beatrice and Tip Top in the manufacture and sale of (a) manually powered paint applicators, (b) paint rollers, and (c) paint and varnish brushes. The leading cases dealing with potential competition in mergers found invalidity in situations where the merging firm was virtually the only likely or potential entrant. United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (1964); FTC v. Procter & Gamble ("P&G-Clorox"), 386 U.S. 568 (1967). These decisions and subsequent authorities have developed the applicable principles, so that for a merger to be barred because of its effect in eliminating potential competition between the merging companies, the following four factors must be established: (1) the particular market must be shown to be substantially concentrated; (2) the merging firm within the market must be shown to be a leading or major factor in that market; (3) the merging firm outside the market must be shown to be a likely entrant by internal growth or by a relatively small acquisition as an alternative to the proposed merger; and (4) the latter must be shown to be the most likely entrant, or one of few such likely entrants. United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (1964); United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 (1964), 389 U.S. 308 (1967); FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967); Bendix Corp., 3 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 19,288, F.T.C. Opinion, June 18, 1970 [77 F.T.C. 731], remanded on other grounds, 450 F.2d 534 (6th Cir. 1971); Department of Justice Merger Guidelines, Sec. 18.

To expand on the factors principally relevant here, the firm within the market must be a leading or major factor, so that the merger cannot be justified as entry by a valid "foothold" or "toehold" acquisition. See Bendix-Fram, supra. A company outside the market will be viewed as a likely or potential entrant if it is shown to have distinctive capabilities, resources, incentives, and interests to enter the particular market. Thus, in United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. at 651, 660, the Supreme Court called for an assessment of a company's "nearness" to the market, its "eagerness" to enter that market, its "resourcefulness," and so on. In United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 175 (1964), the Court in remanding directed attention to such factors as the outside company's resources and know-how, its capacity to enter, its long-sustained interest in entering and its competitive and economic reasons to do so. Furthermore, it is essential to show that the merging firm's resources and incentives are distinctive and unusual, to establish that it is one of few likely entrants. If there were many firms similarly situated, the elimination of only one (who entered by merger) would not significantly reduce the number of potential entrants or the likelihood of such entry. United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., Bendix Corp., supra. See also United States v. Ford Motor Co., 286 F. Supp. 407 (E.D. Mich. 1968); United States v. Crocker-Anglo National Bank, 277 F. Supp. 133 (N.D. Cal. 1967).

The Commission has set out the governing law quite clearly in P&G-Clorox and Bendix-Fram. Procter & Gamble Co., 63 F.T.C. 1465 (1963), aff'd 386 U.S. 568 (1967); Bendix Corp., supra. In P&G-Clorox, the Commission found that Procter & Gamble was a potential competitor in liquid bleach, in fact, "virtually the only such prospect" because it was "a progressive and experienced manufacturer of many products in the same product line as liquid bleach", it actually considered independent entry and "by reason of its proximity, size, and probable line of growth", it was perceived as a likely entrant and it already exerted influence on the market (63 F.T.C. 1577-78). As the Supreme Court noted, liquid bleach was "a natural avenue of diversification since it is complementary to Procter's products, is sold to the same customers through the same channels, and is advertised and merchandised in the same manner." It also noted that "Procter's management was experienced in producing and marketing goods similar to liquid bleach," "Procter had considered the possibility of independently entering" and there was substantial evidence to support the Commission finding that it was "the most likely entrant" (386 U.S. 580-81).

In Bendix-Fram, the Commission found that Bendix was a likely entrant by acquisition (not by internal growth) into the relevant market on the basis of "objective evidence" of its major involvement in the automotive parts business, its manufacturing and sale of automotive filters, and its actual examination of the market with a view toward entering. It found that "only one conclusion is possible: the whole logic of Bendix's corporate development, its size, resources, and direct proximity to the passenger car filter aftermarket, and the unambiguous direction of its business growth, all pointed to expansion into the passenger car filter aftermarket." Bendix, supra, 3 Trade Reg. Rep. p. 21,444.

Recently, in United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corporation, 5 Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 74,377, 93,739, Feb. 28, 1973, Justice Marshall in his concurring opinion stated:

> Thus, mere entry by acquisition would not prima facie establish a firm's status as an actual potential entrant. For example, a firm, although able to enter the market by acquisition, might, because of inability to shoulder the de novo startup costs, be unable to enter de novo. But where a powerful firm is engaging in a related line of commerce at the fringe of the relevant market, where it has a strong incentive to enter the market de novo, and where it has the financial capabilities to do so, we have not hesitated to ascribe to it the role of an actual potential entrant. 5 Trade Reg. Rep. p. 93,752.

Judge Marshall also noted that "the proper test is whether Falstaff would have entered the market de novo if the preferable alternative of entry by acquisition had been denied it." 5 Trade Reg. Rep. p. 93,756.

Both complaint counsel and respondent in their proposed findings and briefs fail to address themselves to the question of whether or not Beatrice was a likely entrant into the manually powered paint applicator, roller, or paint and varnish brush markets. Instead, the main thrust of complaint counsel's argument is that Beatrice's expansion was into the "home and garden accessory field," an undefined and much broader line of commerce than that referred to in the complaint herein and for which complaint counsel submitted no market data.

However, using the tests laid down by the courts, there has been no showing that Beatrice possessed distinctive capabilities, resources, incentives and interests to enter the manually powered paint applicator market, roller or paint and varnish brush submarkets. At best, complaint counsel have demonstrated that Beatrice was interested generally in any firm in the "home and garden accessory field," sometimes referred to as the "do-it-yourself home improvement market." In this connection, Beatrice acquired Melnor garden sprinklers, Charmglow gas fire barbeques, Kahn curtains and drapes, Indiana Moulding wood molding, mirrors and picture frames, Vogel-Petersen wardrobe racks, and World Dryer small household electric appliances, etc. There is no showing that the resources and know-how to manufacture these items could be used in any way in the manufacture and sale of paint brushes and rollers, etc. Complaint counsel have suggested that many of these products are sold to the same mass merchandisers, drug chains, food stores, etc., but this in and of itself certainly is not sufficient to satisfy the criteria set forth above. Moreover, there has been no showing that Tip Top was the dominant or leading firm in the manually powered paint applicator industry since, at best, it ranked third in 1969 with 7.6 percent of the market (CX 108 c).

As found above, many major paint companies, given their financial capabilities and resources and their nearness to the market, were the most likely entrants by virtue of the fact that they distribute brushes and rollers together with the paint they manufacture (findings 122, 123). Although the record shows that the manually powered paint applicator market is substantially concentrated, it certainly is not as highly concentrated as that for Clorox.

Due to the many factual distinctions between the instant case and those cited above, the undersigned finds that Beatrice was not a potential entrant de novo into the manually powered paint applicator market, if the preferred alternative of entry by acquisition had been denied it. Furthermore, the undersigned finds that Beatrice was not a likely entrant by acquisition into the relevant market on the basis of objective evidence, since it was merely interested in the general overall "home and garden accessory field" which, due to its broad and undefined nature, cannot be said to constitute "the same or a related line of commerce."

Complaint counsel also seek to strike down the acquisition of Tip Top by Beatrice on the grounds that it constitutes entrenchment of a leading firm. FTC v. Procter & Gamble, supra, and General Foods v. FTC, 386 F.2d 936 (3d Cir. 1967), cert. denied 391 U.S. 919 (1968). In the above-cited cases, the acquired company was the manufacturer of the leading product in its field; large advertising expenditures were necessary in the industry and the industry was highly concentrated. In the instant case, national advertising expenditures for manually powered paint applicators are practially nonexistent, the degree of concentration in the industry nowhere approaches that found in the Procter & Gamble and General Foods cases, and Tip Top with only 7.6 percent of the market and ranking number 3 could hardly be equated to Clorox and SOS. Moreover, the evidence adduced fails to show that any economies of distribution and sale were taken advantage of by Tip Top after its acquisition by Beatrice. As a matter of fact, only isolated instances of joint warehousing and transportation were revealed. On the basis of the foregoing, the undersigned finds that it has not been established that entrenchment of Tip Top will occur to the detriment of its competitors solely from its acquisition by Beatrice. The acquisition subsequently by Beatrice of Essex Graham will be dealt with hereinafter.

V. THE ESSEX GRAHAM ACQUISITION

Essex Graham was Eliminated as a Direct Competitor of Beatrice (Tip Top)

125. Tip Top perceived Essex Graham as its competitor before the acquisition. Elimination of Essex as a competitor to Tip Top was one of the reasons cited by the vice president of Excello Roller Division of Tip Top in a memo he wrote for Mr. Felkay which recommended the acquisition (Gartner 3128, 3132).

126. Other reasons cited in this memo were as follows:

(a) it would expedite the acquisition of additional capacity;

(b) certain cost advantages would be brought about by the integration of the roller manufacturing facilities of Essex Graham and Tip Top; and

(c) elimination of duplicate sales efforts (Gartner 3131-33).

127. The reasons Tip Top believed the acquisition of Essex Graham should be made were discussed with at least three high ranking Beatrice officials, including Beatrice's acquisition specialist and group manager, concerning Tip Top's operations (Gartner 3133).

128. Since the acquisition of Essex Graham, Tip Top has ceased manufacturing rollers (Greenberg 3343; Strobel 3300-01). Essex Graham now provides all of Tip Top's roller requirements (Strobel 3286).

129. Tip Top purchases rollers from Essex Graham with the trade names "Tip-Top," "Best Set," "G. C. Murphy," "Star," "Pitegoff." It currently purchases no rollers from Essex Graham under the Excello label (Strobel 3305-06).

130. In 1969, Tip Top manufactured approximately 7.6 percent of the manually powered paint applicators shipped in the United States, and ranked third in such shipments (CX 108 c).

131. In 1969, Essex manufactured approximately 2.3 percent of the manually powered paint applicators shipped in the United States, and ranked 13th in such shipments (CX 108 c).

132. On the basis of the combined shipments of manually powered paint applicators of Tip Top and Essex in 1969, Beatrice manufactured and sold 9.9 percent of the manually powered paint applicators shipped in the United States (CX 108 c, d).

133. In 1969, Tip Top manufactured approximately 3.7 percent of the paint rollers shipped in the United States, and ranked eighth in such shipments (CX 109 c).

134. In 1969, Essex manufactured approximately 7.0 percent of the paint rollers shipped in the United States, and ranked fifth in such shipments (CX 109 c).

135. On the basis of combined roller shipments of Tip Top and Essex in 1969, Beatrice manufactured 10.7 percent of paint rollers shipped in the United States, and ranked third in such shipments (CX 109 c).

136. On the basis of the foregoing, it is found that actual competition was eliminated between Beatrice and Essex, in both the manually powered paint applicator market and roller submarket, by the acquisition of Essex Graham (findings 21, 28, 36, 37, 125-135).

Respondent's argument that Tip Top and Essex Graham sold in separate markets and did not compete is not supported by the record. Tip Top sold, at the time of the acquisition, to all types of brush and roller customers (Felkay 1389; CX 115 z7; Cannon 1166; CX 5, pp. T-U). Essex Graham sold lower priced as well as higher priced rollers (Greenberg 1469) to a variety of customers (CX 5, p. U), including mass merchandisers (Karnes 1234) and drug chains (see also findings 21, 28, 36, 37, 49, 126).

A former Tip Top executive testified that the two companies competed prior to the acquisition (Gartner 3128, 3132), and respondent's documents so indicate (CX 5, pp. T-U; see also Karnes 1233-34). If the two companies did sell to "different markets," the best indication of that would have been a sales breakdown into the alleged "markets" by volume. Significantly, no such sales breakdown was ever introduced into evidence by respondent. Actually, Felkay's testimony concerning Tip Top's competition with the "professional line" of Pitegoff graphically refutes any such contention:

> Q. Would you identify the Pittegoff Company?
> A. It is a brush manufacturer.
> Q. What products did that company manufacture from 1965, for example?
> A. Professional paint brushes.
> Q. What connection, if any, did you have with that company at any time, if any?
> A. Prior to 1966 or '67, they were competitors.
> Q. What connection, if any, did you have with them thereafter?
> A. We acquired this company. (Felkay 1327) (emphasis supplied)

Barriers to Entry Have Been Heightened

Prospective entrants into the manually powered paint applicator industry will find it more difficult to obtain customers for their products. Customers in this industry will now give preference to Essex Graham because of Beatrice's size and stature (findings 2, 3, 4, 5, 10) and because Essex is now combined with Tip Top, a manufacturer of brushes. These customers prefer to deal with large established companies (Weiss 575), and with those who can supply both brushes and rollers. Essex, which was formerly an independent company and which previously did not manufacture brushes, now possesses these advantages over prospective entrants into roller manufacturing (findings 32-38).

The above facts confirm that entry of new competitive entities has been and may continue to be made more difficult, and that preexisting barriers have been made even higher in the manually powered paint application industry and submarkets by the acquisition of Essex by Beatrice (see also findings 146-158, infra).

Conclusions

The record confirms that Tip Top (as a Beatrice subsidiary) and Essex Graham were competitors in the manufacture and sale of manually powered paint applicator products. Tip Top considered Essex Graham a competitor prior to the acquisition, citing that the acquisition would "eliminate a competitor" as a reason for recommending the acquisition to Beatrice officials (findings 125, 126).

Tip Top and Essex Graham manufactured the same products, sold to the same types of outlets, and met head on at certain accounts (findings 21, 28, 36, 37, 136). The companies had similar marketing programs. Combining teamwork in marketing to eliminate duplicate sales effort was another reason that Tip Top recommended the acquisition (finding 126).

Tip Top and Essex manufactured products that required similar facilities. When Tip Top required expanded production capacity in rollers, it could turn to Essex Graham in that Essex had equipment that performed the same manufacturing operations as Tip Top's equipment (finding 126).

Subsequent to the acquisition, Tip Top ceased to exist as a roller manufacturer, instead purchasing its roller requirements from Essex Graham. The "Excello" label no longer is used for roller sales by Tip Top (findings 128, 129).

The attitude of the Supreme Court, in cases such as this, has been made explicit in its holdings on horizontal mergers.

In Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra;[5] American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co.,[6] 259 F.2d 524 (2d Cir. 1958); United States v. Von's Grocery Co.,[7] 384 U.S. 270 (1966); United States v. Pabst Brewing Co.,[8] 384 U.S. 546 (1966); United States v. Atlantic Richfield Co.,[9] 297 F. Supp. 1061 (S.D.N.Y. 1969) (preliminary injunction granted); mergers which eliminated actual competition and involved similar or lesser market shares in analogous lines of commerce were prohibited.

In Brown Shoe, the Court stated as follows:

> If a merger achieving a 5% control were now approved, we might be required to approve future merger efforts by Brown's competitors seeking similar market shares. The oligopoly Congress sought to avoid would then be furthered and it would be difficult to dissolve the combinations previously approved. Brown Shoe, supra, at 343, 344.

Similarly, the Court in Alcoa stated:

> * * * If concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration * * * is correspondingly great. United States v. Aluminum Company of America, supra, at 279.

The analysis applied by the Commission In the Matter of Litton Industries, Inc. is determinative in the acquisition of Essex Graham,

> This is a classic horizontal merger between two direct competitors. In a highly concentrated industry, the effect of such a merger is direct and immediate. No extensive economic analysis is required in such cases. Docket 8778, slip opinion, p. 36, dated Mar. 13, 1973.

Since these same factors apply to the manually powered paint applicator industry and its submarkets, this merger should also be condemned.

Essex Graham was Eliminated as a Potential Competitor in the Manufacture of Paint Brushes

137. Paint rollers and paint brushes are used for the same purpose and distributed by the same salesmen to the same buyers (Zook 291-92).

138. Paint roller customers prefer to buy paint brushes from the same supplier from whom they purchase rollers (Weiss 462-63).

139. From the early 1960's to the present, there has been a trend for paint roller manufacturers to expand into paint brush manufacture (Zook 268-69, 291-92; Weiss 463-64).

140. The leading paint roller manufacturer in 1969 entered into paint brush manufacture by acquisition in 1969 (Touchett 585, CX 109 c). Similar roller firms recently have entered into brush manufacturing (Cantonis 2144, Zook 268-69).

141. In 1969, Essex Graham was the largest manufacturer of paint rollers who did not manufacture brushes (CX 109 c). In that year, it was the only manufacturer of paint rollers among the 13 largest manufacturers of rollers which did not manufacture brushes (finding 47).

142. From 1963 onward, Essex Graham considered acquiring a paint brush company (Freund 1416). Essex had considered acquiring at least four paint brush manufacturers, three of which could be considered toehold acquisitions (Freund 1417, CX 108, CX 109, CX 110). In addition, the company hired an acquisition specialist for the purpose of acquiring a brush company (O'Connor 960). The company gave slight consideration to de novo entry into brushes during the period 1965 to 1970, but was forestalled because of lack of technology intracompany (Freund 1428-29).

143. On the basis of the foregoing, it is found that potential competition between Beatrice (Tip Top) and Essex Graham was eliminated in the paint brush submarket by the acquisition of Essex Graham (findings 137-142).

The Trend of Concentration in a Highly Concentrated Industry Has Been Accelerated 144. In 1969, the four and eight firm concentration ratios in the manually powered paint application industry and roller submarket were high and rising (finding 86).

145. The acquisition of Essex by Beatrice accelerated this trend of rising concentration and reduced the possibility of decreasing the high concentration in the already highly concentrated paint brush submarket by eliminating Essex as a possible future entrant (findings 137-143).

The Supreme Court has often cited high concentration and a trend to rising concentration as factors which cause mergers to be condemned under the Clayton Act. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra; United States v. Von's Grocery Co., supra; United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441 (1964); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, supra; United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., supra.

Conclusions

Essex Graham was the most likely entrant into the highly concentrated paint brush manufacturing industry (finding 88). Essex had considered entry into this market for seven years prior to its acquisition (finding 142). Customers and salesmen pressured roller manufacturers to sell paint brushes and paint brush manufacturers to sell paint rollers (finding 44). All of Essex Graham's leading 12 competitors had entered into paint brush manufacturing by the end of 1969 (finding 48).

No firm stood closer to the edge of the paint brush market than Essex Graham. The company was going into brush manufacturing. The only question was how. When it was acquired by Beatrice, it was removed as the most likely entrant into the highly concentrated paint brush submarket and as the most significant roller manufacturer that might still have entered that industry de novo or by toehold acquisition. No paint roller manufacturer who entered into paint brush manufacturing after Essex Graham is indicated in this record to have had as much as a 0.3 percent share of the paint roller market in 1969 (CX 109 c). Entry of such a competitively insignificant firm into brush manufacturing would be of dubious competitive significance as regards effectively competing with significant paint brush manufacturers.

Essex Graham had the capability and incentive to enter the paint brush market, either by internal expansion or by toehold acquisition. It was the only substantial company in the paint roller industry not manufacturing paint brushes. Concentration in the paint brush industry was high and increasing (findings 48, 88, 137-145).

Barriers to entry into paint brush manufacture did exist (findings 146-158, infra; CX 109 c). Such barriers could have been surmounted by Essex Graham. The company already was a major factor in rollers and could have acquired a toehold brush company or the technological know-how necessary for entry de novo from another firm in the brush industry.

On the basis of the above facts, the removal of Essex Graham as a potential entrant violates Section 7 of the Clayton Act. VI. Barriers to Entry into the Manually Powered Paint Applicator Industry

146. The capital investment to begin initial manufacture of paint brushes and paint rollers is not great. Felkay testified that he entered the brush business in 1948 making small artist brushes and small consumer throwaway brushes with a capital investment of $4,400 (Felkay 1248, CX 22). A 1950 balance sheet for Tip Top shows total assets of $44,000 and plant and equipment investment of $7,000 (RX 215). In general, initial capital requirements for entry into the paint brush and paint roller industry are not high (Felkay 1376, 1381; Weiss 519). Felkay testified that production of approximately $1 million worth of brushes a year can be accomplished with an investment in equipment of less than $2,000 and a total working capital investment of $10,000 to $12,000 (Felkay 1381-96). Felkay also testified that he could produce $4,000 to $5,000 worth of brushes per day with a relatively modest amount of equipment and with about 12 to 15 employees (Felkay 1376, 1381, 1391-93). Felkay further testified that a total investment of $10,000 to $12,000 would be sufficient to sustain operations (Felkay 1396). However, another witness testified on rebuttal that approximately twice as many people would be needed to obtain the production to which Felkay testified (Edelson 3052). Another one of complaint counsel's witnesses estimated that $25,000 worth of equipment would be sufficient to begin the manufacture of rollers (Weiss 519). Greenberg of Essex Graham testified, based on actual experience, that the equipment necessary for a roller plant would cost approximately $7,000 (Greenberg 1468).

147. Another one of complaint counsel's witnesses testified that a paint brush plant with annual sales of $2.5 million would require $250,000 worth of machinery and $5,000 for initial supplies (Lieberman 677-81). Another witness for complaint counsel testified that the construction of a new plant which would produce sales of $3.5 million (primarily in brushes and also some in rollers) would cost one-half million dollars for machinery alone (Shulman 645, 647). In addition, a substantial amount of cash is required if a manufacturer is to make a successful entry into a new region (Weiss 575). Both of these witnesses, however, were testifying about duplicating existing plants or construction on a level much greater than that needed to make a meaningful entry (Lieberman 680, Shulman 645, 647).

148. One of complaint counsel's witnesses who was already a large manufacturer of brushes testified that he commenced the manufacture of rollers with two part-time employees (Linzer 3358), that the production of rollers consisted of 2,000 to 3,000 square feet, located in the basement of his plant (Linzer 3360), that he utilized only two pieces of equipment in the manufacture of rollers, a winder and a trimmer and comber (Linzer 3360-61), and that with this plant equipment and personnel, he produced approximately $25,000 worth of rollers the first year (Linzer 3367). Another witness testified that he was a manufacturer of brushes and was able to enter the manufacture of rollers on a modest scale (Waksman 3463).

149. A new entrant into the manually powered paint applicator industry, to be a significant competitive factor, must enter into both the manufacture of brushes and rollers. There is considerable pressure by customers on manufacturers to sell both paint brushes and rollers, and manufacturers feel they will lose sales and market position unless they sell both products (finding 44). Significant manufacturers of manually powered paint applicators in 1969 each produced both paint brushes and paint rollers in that year. The largest firm in the manually powered paint applicator industry which did not manufacture both brushes and rollers ranked 12th with a 2.6 percent of market share in 1969 (finding 46).

150. There have been no de novo entrants into the manufacture of paint brushes in the last 10 years (Lieberman 686). There have been no significant entrants de novo in the manufacture of paint rollers since 1965 (finding 151, infra).

151. Of seven companies characterized as new entrants into the roller business since 1965 by respondent's witness Pereles, who was neither a manufacturer nor seller of rollers, one denied ever having made rollers, one was a remnant of a previous manufacturer, one entered by acquiring assets and accounts of a company previously in business, and at least two others were producing on an insignificant scale in 1972. Combined sales of the latter two firms were less than $150,000 in 1972 (Pereles 1577; Wolf 3269; Leichter 3321, 3325, 3375; Edelson 3076; Waksman 3463; Linzer 3366). Neither would have equaled the 13th largest manufacturer of rollers in 1969, which had 0.3 percent of industry shipments (CX 109 c).

152. The chairman of the board of Beatrice, Karnes, indicated the difficulty of entering into the manufacture of paint brushes de novo as follows:

> * * * this [entry de novo] would have been very costly to us and would have been a long period of time getting it into a profitable position * * * (Karnes 1240).

Instead, Beatrice chose to enter by acquisition of Tip Top (CX 54).

153. Similarly, a roller manufacturer decided against manufacture of brushes because of the need to commit large resources and "the question of feasibility and profitability * * *." (Gartner 2254).

154. Independent companies such as Ideal, Praeger, Tip Top and Essex Graham have been replaced by congolmerates such as Consolidated Foods, Pacific Lumber and Beatrice (finding 93). These conglomerates possess advantages over new entrants in having a "deep pocket," expensive promotion programs, large-company merchandising and marketing know-how, and distribution systems (findings 1-16).

155. Such companies have a competitive advantage in obtaining new customers. Paint brush and roller outlets are reluctant to deal with small firms or those firms which "lack a track record." (Weiss 575). It is Ideal's opinion that large customers prefer to buy from a brush or roller company with a large, financially strong parent (Weiss 575).

156. There is very little used machinery available for brush manufacturing, there is no machinery available for lease, and financing terms for brushmaking machinery are not available (Lieberman 691-92). Shortage of qualified personnel necessary to successfully manufacture paint brushes has discouraged entry de novo (Freund 1429). Also, equipment necessary for the manufacture of paint rollers is not readily available (Benson 3427, 3452).

157. There is a shortage of personnel required to manufacture paint brushes and rollers at the management, foremen and skilled labor levels. Plant managers and foremen are not available (Schulman 2947, 2950, 2951). Because skilled laborers cannot be obtained from other industries (Schulman 2967-68), manufacturers pirate them from other companies in the industry (Schulman 2962).

158. Upon the basis of the foregoing, the undersigned finds that substantial barriers to new entry exist in the manually powered paint applicator market, that entry of new competitive entities have been and may continue to be made more difficult, and that preexisting barriers have been made even higher in the manually powered paint applicator industry and submarkets by the acquisition of Essex by Beatrice.

Mergers having the effect of raising barriers to entry similar to those which occurred in this case were held to violate Section 7 in FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra; General Foods Corp. v. FTC, 386 F.2d 936 (3d Cir. 1967), cert. denied 391 U.S. 919; and United States v. Wilson Sporting Goods Co., 288 F. Supp. 543 (N.D. Ill. 1968) (preliminary injunction granted).

The fact that the capital investment to begin initial manufacture of paint brushes and paint rollers may not be great, in and of itself, is not particularly significant. It is only one of many factors to be considered in appraising barriers to entry. But even if it were the sole factor in determining ease of entry, the Commission has repeatedly held that the difficulty of entry factor is not indispensible to a finding of illegality under Section 7. See American Brake Shoe Co., supra, 684; Ekco Products Company, 65 F.T.C. 1163, 1209.

VII. The Matter of EZ Paintr Corp.

Respondent argues that the consent settlement In the Matter of EZ Paintr Corp. (F.T.C. Docket C-2106) [79 F.T.C. 805] establishes the legality of the mergers by Beatrice which are the subject matter of this proceeding. In support of this, respondent cites the initial decision In the Matter of Sterling Drug, Inc., Docket 8797 [80 F.T.C. 477], wherein reference was made to Sterling's reliance on the decision of the Commission in the divestiture phase approving the acquisition by Miles Laboratories of SOS after a full adjudication on the merits before the Commission and review by the courts (In the Matter of General Foods Corp., Docket 8600, 69 F.T.C. 380 (Mar. 11, 1966), aff'd 386 F.2d 936 (3d Cir. 1967), cert. denied 391 U.S. 919 (1968)).

It is well settled that a decision approving an acquisition in a divestiture context amounts to a holding that the acquisition clearly does not violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act. See United States v. Kennecott Copper Corp., 249 F. Supp. 154, 163 (S.D.N.Y. 1965). Indeed, it has been held that a divestiture would be rejected if it had any significant anticompetitive effects, even if not amounting to a violation of Section 7. United States v. Aluminum Company of America (Alcoa-Rome), et al., 1967 CCH Trade Cases ¶ 71,973 (N.D.N.Y. 1966).

In contrast to the procedures in a divestiture order, a consent order entered into by the Commission is not an adjudication on the merits of a matter and is not binding. The Commission in such a proceeding does not determine the legality or illegality of the conduct involved, consent orders contain no complete findings of fact, and many of the factors considered are known only to the Commission and are not a part of the public record. The courts and the Commission have consistently held that a consent decree is not a binding judicial precedent because of these factors, as well as the fact that they are based entirely upon the bargaining of the parties (United States v. DuPont Co., 366 U.S. 316, 330, n. 12 (1961); Oxwall Tool Co., Docket 7491, 64 F.T.C. 240, 243 (1959)). Moreover, a determination that consent orders are controlling precedents would severely limit the use of the consent settlement process.

In the absence of sufficient factual information and in view of the legal precedents cited above, any comparison or analysis of the EZ Paintr consent settlement to the instant case would be inappropriate.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of and over respondent and the subject matter of this proceeding.

2. At all times relevant to this proceeding, respondent Beatrice, Tip Top and Essex Graham were corporations engaged in "commerce" as defined by Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. § 18).

3. The entire United States is the appropriate geographic market, or "section of the country," within which to consider the alleged competitive effects of the mergers of Beatrice and Tip Top and Beatrice and Essex Graham under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended.

4. The manufacture and sale of manually powered paint applicators, paint and varnish brushes and paint rollers are appropriate product markets and submarkets, or lines of commerce, within which to consider the alleged competitive effects of the mergers of Beatrice and Tip Top and Beatrice and Essex Graham under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended.

5. Counsel supporting the complaint have failed to sustain the burden of establishing, by substantial, reliable and probative evidence, that the effect of the acquisition by respondent Beatrice of Tip Top has been, or may be, substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce alleged in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended.

6. The acquisition by Beatrice of Essex Graham eliminated a direct competitor of Beatrice in the manually powered paint applicator market and paint roller submarket, and a potential competitor of Beatrice in the paint brush submarket.

(a) Beatrice, through its Tip Top subsidiary, and Essex Graham manufactured the same products which were distributed to the same outlets at the time Essex was acquired. Beatrice and Essex were direct competitors.

(b) The acquisition of Essex eliminated Essex as the most likely potential entrant into the paint brush submarket.

(c) The acquisition of Essex increased concentration and entry barriers into these lines of commerce.

7. The effect of the acquisition by respondent Beatrice of Essex Graham has been, or may be, substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended.

The Remedy

It is well settled that the choice of the remedial order is committed to the discretion of the Commission. FTC v. Mandel Bros., 359 U.S. 385, 392-93 (1959); Niresk Industries, Inc. v. FTC, 278 F.2d 337, 343 (7th Cir. 1960), cert. denied 364 U.S. 883 (1960); L. G. Balfour Company v. FTC, 442 F.2d 1 (7th Cir. 1971). The Commission has the power to order divestiture to restore competition to the state of health it might be expected to enjoy but for the acquisition. FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597, 606 n. 4 (1966); see Pan American World Airways Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 312-13 nn. 17 and 18 (1963); Ekco Products Company, 65 F.T.C. 1204, 1214-17 (1964). The remedial phase of antitrust cases is crucial and the primary focus of inquiry as to remedy is whether the relief adequately redresses the economic injury arising out of the violation. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 326, 327. Moreover, "once the government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of law all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor." United States v. du Pont, supra, at 334. Generally, the most appropriate remedy to redress a Section 7 violation is divestiture. FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967). Based upon the findings and conclusions of law set forth above, divestiture is the appropriate remedy in this proceeding.

I

It is ordered, That, subject to the prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission, respondent Beatrice, through its officers, directors, agents, representatives, employees, subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns, shall as soon as possible and in any event within one (1) year from the date this order becomes final, divest absolutely and in good faith all assets, rights, property and privileges, tangible and intangible, including all plants, equipment, machinery, raw material reserves, inventory, customer lists, trade names, trademarks, good will and other property of whatever description acquired by Beatrice as a result of its acquisition of Essex Graham Company (hereinafter referred to as Essex), including all additions and improvements thereto, which are necessary to restore Essex as a separate independent and viable going concern in the lines of commerce in which it was engaged prior to said acquisition.

II

It is further ordered, That, pursuant to the requirement of Paragraph I above, none of the stock, assets, rights or privileges, tangible or intangible, acquired or added by Beatrice shall be divested directly or indirectly to anyone who is, at the time of the divestiture, an officer, director, employee, or agent of, or under the control, direction or influence of Beatrice or any of Beatrice's subsidiaries or affiliated corporations or who owns or controls more than one (1) percent of the outstanding shares of the capital stock of Beatrice.

III

It is further ordered, That, pending divestiture, respondent Beatrice shall not make or permit any deterioration in the value of any of the plants, machinery, parts, equipment, or other property or assets of the corporations to be divested which may impair their present capacity or market value unless such capacity or value be restored prior to divestiture.

IV

It is further ordered, That respondent Beatrice shall cease and desist for ten (10) years from the date this order becomes final from acquiring directly or indirectly, through subsidiaries or otherwise, without prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission, any part of the assets, stock, share capital, or other actual or potential equity interest or right of participation in the earnings of any domestic concern, corporate or noncorporate, which is engaged in the manufacture or sale of manually powered paint applicators or engaged in the manufacture or sale of raw materials to companies engaging in the manufacture or sale of manually powered paint applicators, or from entering into any arrangements or understandings with such a concern through which respondent Beatrice becomes possessed of that concern's market share.

For the purposes of this order, manually powered paint applicators are defined as: paint and varnish brushes; paint rollers, including pans, covers, handles, and other accessories sold separately, or as part of a paint roller kit; and miscellaneous paint applicators other than spray equipment and aerosol cans.

It is further ordered, That respondent Beatrice shall within sixty (60) days after date of service of this order, and every sixty (60) days thereafter until respondent Beatrice has fully complied with the provisions of this order, submit in writing to the Federal Trade Commission a verified report setting forth in detail the manner and form in which respondent Beatrice intends to comply or has complied with this order. All compliance reports shall include, among other things that are from time to time required, a summary of contracts or negotiations with anyone for the specified stock, assets and plant, the identity of all such persons, and copies of all written communications to and from such persons.

It is further ordered, That respondent Beatrice notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

Opinion of the Commission

JULY 1, 1975

By Lewis A. Engman, Commissioner:

This matter is before the Commission on cross-appeals by both the respondent and counsel supporting the complaint from the Initial Decision of the administrative law judge.

The complaint in this matter alleges that Beatrice Foods Company ("Beatrice") violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act in two respects; first, when it acquired the stock and assets of Tip Top Brush Company and its affiliated companies[1] (hereinafter referred to collectively as "Tip Top") in July 1969 and, second, when it acquired the Essex Graham Company ("Essex Graham") in July 1970. The complaint alleges that these acquisitions may result in a substantial lessening of competition in the manufacture and sale (1) paint and varnish brushes, (2) paint rollers, and (3) a market encompassing both paint and varnish brushes and paint rollers. (The latter market is given the infelicitous name "manually powered paint applicator" in the complaint. We refer to it here as simply the "brush-and-roller market." The two alleged submarkets will be referred to as the "paint brush" and "paint roller" markets or submarkets.)

At the time of the first acquisition-the acquisition of Tip Top-the parties agree that Beatrice was not then engaged in the manufacture or sale of any of the product lines involved in this case, so there is no question of a competitor being eliminated as a result of that merger. Rather, complaint counsel argue that Beatrice was a potential entrant into the brush-and-roller market and that by acquiring Tip Top a

[1] Banner Brush Co., Inc.; Best-Set Brush Co., Inc.; United Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc.; First Synthetic Fiber & Brush Co. Inc.; West Side Leasing Corp.; Excello Roller Co. Inc., and Star Brush Manufacturing Co., Inc. Banner Brush, Best-Set, and United Brush were not operating corporations but their names were used for private label business.

"leading manufacturer" of paint brushes and rollers, it chose a method of entering the market that removed the likely pro-competitive effects that would have ensued had it entered by way of a "toehold" acquisition and subsequently sought to expand the operations of such a smaller company. Complaint counsel further allege that the acquisition has "entrenched" Tip Top as a market leader to the detriment of competition.

As to the subsequent acquisition of Essex Graham-a manufacturer of paint rollers, but not of paint brushes-complaint counsel argue that this transaction was a horizontal merger between two substantial competitors in the brush-and-roller market and the paint roller submarket. In addition to eliminating a significant competitor in those markets, it is alleged that the acquisition also eliminated Essex as a potential entrant into the paint brush submarket.

The administrative law judge, after extensive hearings, found that the acquisition of Essex Graham transgressed Section 7 of the Clayton Act as alleged in the complaint. However, he dismissed the complaint as to the Tip Top acquisition. Divestiture of Essex Graham only was therefore ordered.

Complaint counsel appeal from the law judge's dismissal of the challenge to the Tip Top acquisition. Respondent appeals from his decision insofar as the Essex Graham acquisition was found unlawful. Since respondent's challenge to the appropriateness of the product lines adopted in the initial decision is relevant to both appeals, we will take that question up first.

I. The Relevant Product Markets

The administrative law judge found that "paint brushes" (which includes varnish brushes) constitute a line of commerce for purposes of Section 7, and that "paint rollers" (which includes accessory products such as paint roller covers, handles, trays, trimmers, and flat pad applicators) constitute an appropriate line of commerce.

The law judge found that paint brushes and rollers taken together also constitute a line of commerce for purposes of this case.

Respondent contends that there are a number of errors in the definitions of lines of commerce. It argues that the traditional brush or roller manufacturer sells products in two distinct lines of commerce-a higher priced "professional" brush or roller and a cheaper "throwaway" version for the "do-it-yourself" buyer.[2] Respondent also argues that

[2] Respondent's briefs do not suggest what criteria should be used to distinguish these two lines of commerce. In its statement of the issues it says "a professional brush may sell for $30 or more and a throwaway brush may sell for 99 or less" (appeal brief pp. 2,4). This hardly answers the question in which of the two lines belong products that retail aerosol and power spray equipment should be included in any paint applicator market.

It may well be that paint brushes and rollers could be divided into product submarkets according to quality-derived price distinctions. However, the question presented by respondent is whether brushes and rollers must be segregated into entirely separate product markets according to price/quality distinctions. We find that any such division into separate product markets is unwarranted. Unless articles within a product classification are sold in clearly separated price groupings that have little price sensitivity between them, there will always be the problem of just where market divisional lines should be drawn along the price/quality spectrum. As the Court observed in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 326 (1962). "It would be unrealistic to accept Brown's contention that, for example, men's shoes selling below $8.99 are in a different product market from those selling above $9.00."

At the time the hearings were held, the bulk of rollers and paint brushes were sold at retail prices below $5.00 (Tr. 474, 637, 656, 711, 764). As indicated in the preceding footnote, retailers offer a range of painting utensils of differing quality and price with considerable overlap between paint applicators listed by manufacturers as "professional" in quality and those promoted to the "homeowner." (See also Tr. 302, 473-74, 637, 764-65, 1387, CX 27H-Z, CX 32Q, CX 33B.) As in Brown Shoe, we think it would be unrealistic to divide the brushes and rollers into separate product markets at some arbitrary point such as $2.49. The fact that Tip Top specialized in selling and promoting rollers that were lower in quality and price than most of the rollers sold by Essex Graham is a factor that should be considered in weighing the effects of the merger between those companies, not in defining market boundaries, Brown Shoe, supra, 326.[3]

We also find that the law judge was correct in determining that sales of aerosol paint cans and power spray equipment need not be included between 99 cents and $30. At another point respondent suggests that "throwaway" brushes and rollers are those that sell for "no more than $2.49" (id. at 34). Yet its own exhibits show that both higher- and lower-priced brushes and rollers are promoted to homeowners and their prices substantially overlap with brushes advertised as "professional" paint brushes. For instance, Respondent's Exhibit 8-I, a page from a Sears catalogue, shows "Homeowner Brushes * * * Nickel plated ferrule * * * Plastic handles" ranging from $4.55 for 4-inch nylon-bristle brushes to $1.70 for 2-inch nylon-bristle brushes. On the same page are listed "Professional Brushes * * * Hardwood handles * * * Copper-plated ferrules" that range from $5.67 for 4-inch nylon-bristle brushes to $2.55 for 2-inch nylon brushes. "Professional" sash and trim brushes are priced from $1.49 to $2.10. Sears also offers low, medium, and high quality paint rollers (Tr. 1543).

[3] Furthermore, if a manufacturer of more expensive brushes or rollers can easily shift his production facilities to make a cheaper version in response to increased demand for such products, then the market may be defined broadly to include "all brushes" and "all rollers" and market shares based on firms' total output. Brown Shoe, supra, at 325 n. 42; Sterling Drug Co., 80 F.T.C. 477, 585, et seq. (1972). The record indicates that such "cross-elasticity of supply" exists throughout the price/quality continuum with respect to the manufacture of rollers (Tr. 646, 1303-04, 1526-28). Thus, after its acquisition by Tip Top, much of Essex Graham's production of paint rollers was converted to supply lower priced rollers whereas previously that company made higher quality rollers for the most part. Although more hand labor and better material are used in manufacturing finer brushes than cheaper ones, it appears that similar production interchangeability exists. (Tr. 266-67, 466, 451A, 2472, RX179).

along with brush and roller sales in measuring market concentration. Clearly his conclusion on this point is correct insofar as the "submarkets" in this case are concerned. Paint brushes have their own peculiar characteristics and uses that distinguish them from all other paint applicator devices such that buyers will prefer them for certain uses. Paint rollers likewise have their own peculiar advantages for certain paint jobs because of the ease and speed with which they can apply paint.

A closer question is whether sales of brushes and rollers combined constitute a separate product market. Although sales of some paint brushes are complementary to paint roller sales such that the buyer will often buy both products rather than one for the other, respondent does not dispute that rollers and brushes also compete in sales for certain end uses. Respondent agrees, for instance, that rollers compete with 4-inch brushes for large flat area paint jobs and that with the introduction of the roller in the market in the 1950's brush manufacturers were compelled to develop lower priced 4-inch brushes to compete with rollers. However, since aerosol paint cans and power spray equipment also "apply" paint and sales of these products collectively are acknowledged to be substantial by complaint counsel, respondent contends that their sales should also be included in measuring any of the markets involved.

In determining the outermost boundaries of a product market, analysis should be guided by examination of the "reasonable interchangeability of use" or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product and substitutes for it. Brown Shoe v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at 325; United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377 (1956). A market definition that combines paint rollers with paint brushes is a proper market in our opinion as it defines products that are to a large degree interchangeable for an important use, namely the application of paint to large flat areas such as walls, ceilings, exteriors of buildings, etc. As previously noted, it is with regard to this type of application that paint rollers have made inroads on sales of brushes and forced the appearance of competitively priced brushes.

Aerosol paint cans, on the other hand, are convenience items used mainly around the home where only a small amount of paint is required. The record establishes that aerosols are most commonly used to paint small pieces of furniture, decorative ironwork, craft projects, automobile touch-ups, and so forth (Tr. 300, 596, 821, 826). The cost factor, among other things, makes them too expensive for extensive paint application on most architectural surfaces where rollers and brushes are more suitable (Tr. 471, 2368). Once the paint is used up, the aerosol can is not re-usable. Also the range of colors and types of paint offered in aerosol cans is limited (Tr. 704). In contrast, rollers and brushes can be used many times, are clearly more suitable for large paint jobs, and can be used with a wider variety of paints.

It was also proper for the law judge to exclude sales of power spray equipment. Although professional painters do sometimes use power spray equipment to paint architectural structures, such use is usually limited to industrial buildings such as warehouses and factories, not houses or apartments where fall-out from the overspray would create a problem (Tr. 300-01, 596, 780-82, 814, 833-34, 2377-78). Furthermore, these devices are not competitively priced with rollers and brushes and require skills and maintenance (not to mention purchase price) that do not ordinarily appeal to consumers. For that reason many paint stores, hardware stores, and other retail outlets do not carry power spray equipment, although all retail outlets that sell interior and exterior house paint consider it necessary to carry a full line of both brushes and rollers (Tr. 479-699). The bulk of power spray equipment is sold and used for industrial purposes or specialty jobs where brushes and rollers would not be suitable (Tr. 300, 451-A, 779, 1990-91).

Arguably, in measuring the size of the brush-and-roller market, the "brush" segment could be limited to sales of large brushes-e.g. 4-inch brushes-that are most commonly used for large paint jobs and are most competitive with paint rollers. However, such "fine tuning" of brush sales to "end use" seems entirely unnecessary here. In the first place, many paint purchasers do in fact buy smaller paint brushes along with paint rollers to do edging and trimming work on interior walls and ceilings. Interchangeable and competitively priced with such brushes are trimming roller devices that are also designed to perform that function (Tr. 821, 833). Secondly, the inclusion of "all brush sales" in the combined market-as distinguished from some portion of total brush sales or sales of particular size brushes-would make little difference in the final picture of market concentration. Major paint brush manufacturers sell a full line of brush sizes to redistributors or directly to retailers. There is no reason to believe that one brush manufacturer sells, for example, more 4-inch brushes proportional to his line than any other full line manufacturer. Furthermore production interchangeability exists among brush sizes. We fail to see how the picture of market concentration would be changed were the brush segment of this market limited to sales of only 4-inch brushes, as respondent seems to suggest.[4] Indeed, since concentration ratios are considerably lower in sales of paint brushes than in sales of rollers (CX 109, 110), any bias in concentration figures resulting from using "all brush sales" in the product mix favors respondent.

[4] Cf. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at 327:

"Brown's sharpest criticism is directed at the District Court's finding that children's shoes constituted a single line of commerce. Brown argues, for example, that 'a little boy does not wear a little girl's black patent leather pump' and that '[a] male baby cannot wear a growing boy's shoes.' * * * Assuming, arguendo, that little boy's shoes for example, do have sufficient peculiar characteristics to constitute one of the markets to be used in analyzing the effects of this

That paint rollers and paint brushes combined can properly constitute a line of commerce which is measured by the total sales of both products, and excluding more distant substitute products such as aerosols and power spray equipment, is supported by United States v. Continental Can Company, 378 U.S. 441 (1964). In that case, involving a merger between a glass container manufacturer and a metal can manufacturer, the Court determined that since there was considerable interchangeability for some end uses between glass containers and metal cans that "quantitywise [were] very substantial," the district court should have recognized the existence of a "glass and metal container" market. The Court held that complete overlap in end use need not be present and stated: "[N]or are we concerned by the suggestion that if the product market is to be defined in these terms it must include plastic, paper, foil and any other materials competing for the same business. That there may be a broader product market made up of metal, glass and other competing containers does not necessarily negative the existence of submarkets of * * * cans and glass together, for 'within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes' [citing Brown Shoe]." id. 457-58. See also United States v. Connecticut National Bank, 418 U.S. 656, 663 n. 3 (1974). Similarly, the fact that aerosols and other spray equipment are interchangeable with brushes or rollers for some limited end uses does not negative the existence of a separate brush-and-roller market.

In conclusion, we affirm and adopt the law judge's conclusions that "paint brushes" and "paint rollers" each constitute a line of commerce and that paint brushes and rollers combined properly constitutes an overall line of commerce for purposes of this case.

II. Section of the Country

The administrative law judge found the relevant geographic market to be the United States as a whole. Although disputed by respondent, this finding is amply supported by the record. Many manufacturers of paint brushes and rollers testified in this case. Nearly all stated that merger, we do not think that in this case the District Court was required to employ finer 'age/sex' distinctions than those recognized by its classifications of 'men's,' 'women's,' and 'children's' shoes. Further division does not aid us in analyzing the effects of this merger. * * * Appellant can point to no advantage it would enjoy were finer divisions than those chosen by the District Court employed. Brown manufactures significant, comparable quantities of virtually every type of nonrubber men's, women's and children's shoes, and Kinney sells such quantities of virtually every type of men's, women's and children's shoes. Thus, whether considered separately or together, the picture of this merger is the same."

they ship their products for sale throughout the United States. Respondent cites instances where some manufacturers testified that freight costs are a significant factor and give local manufacturers, i.e. firms with factories in a given area, a competitive advantage. However, none with the exception of a witness from Beatrice claimed that freight was so prohibitive as to foreclose firms from selling in any particular section of the country. Even here the item in question was a "promotional roller kit"-a cheap and relatively bulky item for which freight is obviously a more significant factor than it is for other paint applicator products. The majority of products involved in this proceeding are distributed nationally and the major firms compete with others throughout the United States, a fact that compels finding that the nation as a whole constitutes the relevant market.

III. The Acquisitions

Respondent Beatrice is a large, diversified corporation which had its origin in the dairy business. It also engages in the manufacture and sale of nonfood products and has chemical, manufacturing, and international divisions which by 1970 accounted for over 30 percent of its sales. Nonfood products now sold by Beatrice range from house trailers to skis. For the fiscal year ending Feb. 28, 1970, Beatrice's overall net sales reached approximately $1,575,000,000 and total assets approximated $504 million.

Tip Top Brush Co. Inc. and its affiliated companies (see n. 1, supra) were corporations collectively engaged in making and selling paint brushes and rollers. Tip Top's principal office was located in Jersey City, N.J. Prior to acquisition by Beatrice, the outstanding stock of the corporations was owned by Miklos Felkay and his wife, Madelaine Felkay, who had entered the paint brush business in this country in 1948.

During the ensuing years, Tip Top expanded rapidly. By 1955 the company had opened a warehouse in Los Angeles, Calif. and its name had become known in the trade throughout the country. By the end of 1969, it had expanded to become the third largest manufacturer in the combined paint brush-and-roller market, having approximately 7.6 percent of sales in that market. It had manufacturing facilities in Boston and Jersey City, and warehouses in Chicago and Los Angeles. Total sales in 1969 approximated $7.4 million.

Paint rollers first entered the market in the mid-1950's. In response to the roller, Tip Top introduced a lower priced 4-inch brush that retailed for 99 cents. In 1958, Tip Top commenced selling rollers and created the Excello Roller Company as an assembler of rollers. Tip Top sold its brushes and rollers through hardware stores, food chains, paint stores, drug stores and variety stores.

By the time of its acquisition it had been recognized as being an innovative merchandiser. According to Mr. Felkay, it was the first to develop the mass merchandiser and drug store as potential markets and one of the first to display brushes and rollers in relation to the type of paint being used (Tr. 976, 973-74).

In 1968, the Felkays decided to put their company up for sale and initiated contacts with several companies, including Beatrice, seeking a purchaser. On July 31, 1969, Beatrice acquired Tip Top through an exchange of stock.

On July 1, 1970-11 months after its acquisition of Tip Top-Beatrice acquired the Essex Graham Company, a Chicago-based manufacturer of paint rollers.

The record shows that in the six year period preceding the acquisition, Essex Graham was an economically strong and viable competitor in the industry. Its assets increased from approximately $510,000 in 1964 to approximately $2,322,000 in 1969. Sales amounted to $2,216,000 in 1969 and in that year it was the fifth largest manufacturer of paint rollers in the United States. After the acquisition, Essex Graham began to distribute paint brushes.

IV. Complaint Counsel's Appeal from the Dismissal of the Complaint as to the Tip Top Acquisition.

A. Beatrice as a potential entrant

As previously noted, in the years preceding the Tip Top acquisition, Beatrice had diversified into a number of nonfood fields. These were fields appraised by Beatrice as having exceptional sales growth potential. Included was the home and garden accessory field. In 1965 Beatrice diversified into home and garden accessories by acquiring the Stiffel Company, a manufacturer of lamp shades and decorator lamps. In 1967, Beatrice made a study of the "do-it-yourself" market for the home consumer that led to a second acquisition-Melnor Industries, a manufacturer of water sprinkling equipment and garden and lawn supplies. During 1968, Beatrice continued its acquisition in the home and garden field by acquiring the following manufacturers: World Dryer Corporation (small household electric appliances); Charmglow Products, Inc. (lighting equipment, patio lamps, and gas barbeques): Max Kahn Curtain Corporation (curtains and draperies); Vogel-Petersen Co. (wardrobe racks); and the Farboil Company (specialty coatings and paints).

After having been approached by a representative of Tip Top who was seeking a purchaser for that company, Beatrice conducted a study of the paint brush-and-roller market. Beatrice concluded that this was a growth market and, according to testimony of its officials, acquired Tip Top because that firm met the prerequisites that Beatrice requires of prospective acquirees: (1) that it is a profitable company doing business in a growth market; (2) that its management agrees to continue with the firm after the merger; (3) that the acquisition will contribute to the per-share earnings of Beatrice (Karnes, Tr. 1210-19)[5].

The administrative law judge concluded that an insufficient showing had been made that Beatrice was a likely potential entrant into the brush-and-roller market. He also found that even if Beatrice were considered a potential entrant, elimination of it as a future entrant would not substantially lessen competition. His reasoning consisted of the following points and observations:

1. Complaint counsel had failed to address themselves to question whether Beatrice was a likely entrant into the paint brush-and-roller market. Rather, the thrust of their case was that Beatrice was potential entrant into the "home and garden accessory field" a much broader market and one not alleged as a line of commerce in this proceeding.
2. There was no showing that Beatrice possessed distinctive capabilities and incentives to enter the brush-and-roller market.
3. There was no showing that Tip Top was the dominant or leading firm in that market, since it had only 7.6 percent of the market in 1969.
4. Many major paint companies, given their financial capabilities and closeness to the market were more likely entrants.

As the Commission has recognized before, injury to competition by the elimination of a potential competitor can come about by one or both of two ways. First, the elimination by acquisition of a substantial firm perceived to be waiting at the edge of a market and ready to enter if profit opportunities beckon may remove an important restraining influence on prices of leading firms in a concentrated market. United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526 (1973). Secondly, elimination of likely entry into the market could remove one of the few remaining opportunities for deconcentration in a market characterized by concentration and high entry barriers. In other words, had the acquisition not occurred the potential entrant might have entered the market de novo or expanded a toehold acquisition, thereby creating greater capacity and competition.

Complaint counsel do not claim that Beatrice was perceived as a potential entrant by firms in any of the markets involved here and therefore do not claim that its alleged presence at the edge of the market had a disciplining effect on prices. Rather, they argue that injury has come about in the second manner–that Beatrice was in fact a future entrant into the relatively concentrated brush-and-roller market and that by choosing to enter by way of acquisition of a leading company (Tip Top), Beatrice eliminated any possibility of its entering in a more competitive manner.[6] Complaint counsel do not contend that Beatrice would have entered this market de novo but argue that both "objective evidence" and "subjective evidence" demonstrate that Beatrice was a likely entrant by way of a "toehold acquisition." Cf. The Bendix Corp., 77 F.T.C. 731 (1970) reversed and remanded on other grounds, 450 F.2d 534 (6th Cir. 1971).

[5] As to the latter prerequisite, see Beatrice Foods Co., 81 F.T.C. 481, 519 n. 2:

> It has frequently been noted that one of the incentives for acquisitions by diversified companies is to increase earnings per share on common stock. This occurs when the company which is being acquired has a lower price-to-earnings ratio than the acquiring company. Simply through acquisition of such a corporation the first company can immediately increase its earnings per share and usually the value of its stock on the market. See, e.g., Scherer, Industrial Market Structure and Economic Performance 114 (1970); Staff Report to the F.T.C., Economic Report on Corporate Mergers 122-138 (1969).

Complaint counsel's objective evidence is based on the fact that Beatrice was already engaged in the production and sale of certain home and garden accessory products, such as Stiffel lamps, Melnor garden tools and sprinklers and gas-fired barbeques and that following the acquisition it acquired the Chicago Specialty Company which distributed plumbing specialties to hardware stores. However, the home and garden accessory field is so large and amorphous that we must agree with the law judge's rejection of this line of argument. There has been no showing that know-how in the manufacturing of any of the above items made by Beatrice divisions would create an incentive for Beatrice to diversify into paint brushes or rollers. And even if Beatrice's interest in the home and garden accessory field were deemed somehow to place it as a potential entrant into the paint brush-and-roller category, there is no reason why it should be considered a more likely entrant than the numerous other firms similarly engaged in marketing such consumer products–many of whom, like Beatrice, are large multi-product corporations. As the Commission stated in regard to a similar argument presented in Sterling Drug, Inc., 80 F.T.C. 477, 604 (1972):

> A stroll through any supermarket or drug store will show that there are scores, if not

[6] That a violation of Section 7 can come about in the second manner discussed above-elimination of an "actual" potential entrant as distinguished from the elimination of a "perceived" potential entrant having a present influence on prices in the market-is not disputed by respondent. The Supreme Court has not had occasion to reach the question whether elimination of a non-perceived but likely potential entrant can violate Section 7 and has expressly reserved decision on that point. Falstaff Brewing Corp., supra 410 U.S. at 537, United States v. Marine Bancorporation, Inc., 42 U.S. L.W. 5210, 5217 (1974). However, the Commission and several lower courts have recognized that elimination of likely future competitor can violate Section 7. Ekco Products v. Federal Trade Commission, 347 F.2d 745, 752-53 (7th Cir. 1965); General Mills, Inc. Dkt. 8836, Trade Reg. Rep. ¶20, 457 (1973); Beatrice Foods Co., supra, 81 F.T.C. at 817 (1973); The Bendix Corp., 77 F.T.C. 731, 817 (1970) reversed and remanded on other grounds, 450 F.2d 534 (6th Cir. 1971); United States v. Phillips Petroleum Company, 367 F. Supp. 1226, 1234 (C.D. Cal. 1973), aff'd without opinion, 94 S. Ct. 3199 (1974); United States v. Standard Oil Co., 253 F. Supp. 196, 227 (D.N.J. 1966). In view of our ultimate dismissal of the allegations of injury to potential competition we see no reason to reconsider the arguments that have been given in support of that interpretation. Compare Turner, "Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act," 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1313, 1379-80 (1965) with Rahl, "Applicability of the Clayton Act to Potential Competition," 12 A.B.A. Antitrust Section 143 (1958).

hundreds, of diverse "household products" in which Sterling-or any other established supplier of consumer items-might with equal logic be deemed a "potential entrant." Such a test, however, would nullify any meaningful distinction between likely potential competitors and all other firms. Elimination of one among such a multitude of firms could not be said to eliminate substantial potential competition.

Complaint counsel claim, however, that the law judge completely ignored evidence evincing Beatrice's strong subjective desire to enter the brush-and-roller market. We have examined the evidence cited and find it unpersuasive. The evidence of corporate intent that complaint counsel rely upon most heavily is the fact that prior to its decision to acquire Tip Top, a study was commissioned by Beatrice management entitled "Study of the Paint Brush and Paint Roller Market" wherein it was concluded that sales of paint brushes and rollers to homeowners was a growing market as it was part of the increasing do-it-yourself, home improvement trend (Tr. 1216-1219). However, this study was not made until after Tip Top approached Beatrice with a merger proposal and it was made in connection with Beatrice's appraisal of Tip Top as an acquisition candidate. It was standard procedure for Beatrice to appraise not only the past performance record of a prospective merger candidate but also of course its potential for future growth, which entails a prediction of whether the market it does business in is a growth market. The study referred to was listed as a prospective exhibit but was not offered in evidence by complaint counsel. We can only assume in its absence that the conclusions stated in it were not inconsistent with the testimony at the hearing by Beatrice executives that the company had no overall plan to enter the market aside from the Tip Top acquisition.

Complaint counsel also point to evidence that subsequent to the Tip Top acquisition, Beatrice considered acquiring brush parts suppliers and other firms in the brush or roller business-one of them, of course, being Essex Graham which in fact was acquired one year later. However, these considerations, including the Essex Graham acquisition, were for the purpose of broadening Tip Top's production and strengthening its position in the market. Post-merger expansion through acquisition of suppliers or competitors may independently raise problems under Section 7, but standing alone do not demonstrate that prior to the acquisition the acquiring company was a potential entrant into that line of commerce.

We are not holding that simply because corporate executives testify that they had no plans to enter a particular market that their testimony must be accepted at face value. Expressions by corporate management that their company did not intend to enter a market except by a particular acquisition are by their nature self-serving and may express only transitory views of the corporation. "While * * * subjective evidence is probative on the issue of potential entry, it is inherently unreliable and must be used with great care * * * [S]ubjective evidence should be preferred only when the objective evidence is weak or contradictory." United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., supra, 410 U.S. 548 (Marshall, J., concurring); Here, however, there is no persuasive evidence, objective or subjective, that rebuts the testimony of Beatrice's executive officers that the company had no plans to enter the market but for this acquisition. By relying on the fact that Beatrice studied the growth potential of the market in which Tip Top did business, complaint counsel are in effect arguing that the willingness of Beatrice to acquire Tip Top demonstrates ipso facto that Beatrice was a likely entrant into the market. But as was noted in Ekco Products v. Federal Trade Commission, 347 F.2d 745, 752 (7th Cir. 1965), that rule would make virtually every merger unlawful.[7] The test is whether "the acquiring corporation * * * would have entered the field by internal expansion but for the merger" id. at 752-753. Or, looking at the matter from a different perspective, whether the respondent would probably re-enter the market by internal expansion or equivalent means if divestiture were ordered. General Mills, Inc., Dkt. 8836, Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 20, 457 (1973) [83 F.T.C. 696].

Having concluded that the record fails to support any finding that Beatrice was a probable entrant into any of the relevant product markets involved in this case aside from its acquisition of Tip Top, we find no necessity to pass on the additional arguments relied upon by the law judge in dismissing the charge that potential competition was eliminated as a result of the Tip Top acquisition.

B. "Entrenchment" Arguments

Complaint counsel contend that quite apart from whether Beatrice was a potential entrant into the relevant market, the acquisition entrenched Tip Top in the market in a manner that will hinder competition. Complaint counsel argue inter alia:

> 1. [After the subsequent acquisition of Essex Graham] Tip Top was able to greatly expedite its expansion of capacity in rollers, vertically integrate its roller production to include certain roller manufacturing operations of Essex Graham previously not performed by Tip Top and reduce overall costs of both companies.
> 2. Tip Top has obtained the warehousing and trucking facilities of the entire Beatrice organization * * * Having a warehouse system located throughout the country enables mass merchandisers and other accounts to be serviced more efficiently than has been the practice in this industry.
> 3. Beatrice can provide extensive financial resources to expand product lines, service and sales.
> 4. Beatrice studied Tip Top production and distribution processes and made suggestions for improvement.

[7] See also United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., supra, 410 U.S. 561: "[M]ere entry by acquisition would not prima facie establish a firm's status as an actual potential entrant" (Marshall, J., concurring).

5. Beatrice greatly expanded Tip Top's rebate program to jobbers and distributors. Maximum rebates increased from 5 percent prior to the acquisition to 10 percent following the acquisition. Various conditions and requirements placed on dealers to be eligible for the rebate program have been eliminated since the acquisition of Tip Top.

Although there is scant record support for most of the assertions that operating costs have been reduced as a result of the merger, even assuming all these changes were effected, improved efficiencies and price reductions are certainly no reason to condemn a merger not otherwise shown to be anticompetitive. Although it has been said that merger cannot be "defended" on the ground that a more efficient industrial entity has resulted, such statements have always appeared in the context of a merger having overriding anticompetitive consequences such as elimination of a competitor and vertical foreclosure of markets, Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at 344; or the raising of substantial entry barriers having little relationship to real efficiencies, Federal Trade Commission v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568, 580 (1967).

More relevant to the issue of anticompetitive effects of the merger is complaint counsel's argument that the acquisition may create psychological barriers to new competition, that "no one can expect new entrants into an industry dominated by a Beatrice * * *." However this argument depends, as complaint counsel seem to agree, on Beatrice occupying a dominant position in the industry. But in the year of acquisition, Tip Top, although it ranked third in the industry, had but 7.6 percent of sales.[8] In contrast, in the cases relied upon by complaint counsel, the acquired firms did have a dominant position and their acquisition by an even larger corporation that manufactured related product lines threatened permanently to entrench the already dominant firm. In Procter & Gamble supra, the acquired firm, Clorox, represented nearly 50 percent of sales of liquid bleach nationally and had even higher shares of regional markets. In General Foods v. Federal Trade Commission, 386 F.2d 936 (3d Cir. 1967), the acquired company, S.O.S., had 51 percent of total sales.[9] In both cases, the remaining firms were small single-product firms that could not qualify for the substantial advertising volume discounts that were then available to large multi-product advertisers such as Procter & Gamble and General Foods.[10] The record clearly shows, despite complaint counsel's arguments to the contrary, that media advertising is not an important factor in paint applicator markets.

[8] In previous cases involving the "toehold" doctrine, the Commission has considered firms having market shares below 10 percent as toehold companies, acquisition of which would have been procompetitive. The Bendix Corp., 77 F.T.C. 731, 821 (1970) (fourth-ranked Wix Corporation, with 9.5 percent of the market); Stanley Works, 78 F.T.C. 1023, 1072 (1971), 469 F.2d 498, 501 (2d Cir. (1972) (third-ranked Ajax, with about 8 percent of the market). Although these cases can perhaps be distinguished from the instant one in that different industries and other factors were involved, in this case complaint counsel argue that had Beatrice acquired Masterset Brush Company, which had 3.6 percent of the market, competition would have benefited as Beatrice would have used its deep pocket resources to expand Masterset thereby challenging the position of market leaders. In contrast, complaint counsel assert that Beatrice's deep pocket rendered the Tip Top acquisition anticompetitive and unlawful. It is difficult, however, to see how a difference in only 4 percentage points in market shares (Masterset's 3.6 percent compared to Tip Top's 7.6 percent) can make the difference between a procompetitive merger and one that it is claimed will substantially lessen competition.

[9] In United States v. Wilson Sporting Goods Co., 288 F. Supp. 543 (N.D. Ill. 1968), another case cited by complaint counsel, the acquired firm was number one in its market with a 32 percent market share.

In support of their position that Beatrice's bigness and diversity will enable it to gain business at the expense of smaller brush-and-roller competitors, complaint counsel point to evidence that, subsequent to the acquisition, Tip Top's management in an effort to get a large chain store company to switch to Tip Top as its supplier of brushes and rollers represented that purchases of Tip Top products would help earn the company rebates on other Beatrice home and garden accessory products carried by the company's stores. However, unchallenged evidence was introduced by Beatrice that such a corporate-wide discount was against Beatrice's policy-that each division operates as individual profit centers with independent pricing policies-and that Beatrice made supervisory changes within Tip Top to prevent a recurrence of such representations (Tr. 1224). No such corporate-wide discount in fact existed or was ever granted to the buyer (Tr. 1155-59). We cannot find on the basis of this isolated incident that Beatrice will be inclined to use truly predatory methods to gain new customers for Tip Top.

It is true that as a result of the acquisition, Tip Top gained access to Beatrice's "deep pocket" for capital expansion loans. No significant competitive advantage would appear to result, however, since this industry is not capital intensive. With firms like PPG Industries, Consolidated Foods, and Sherwin Williams manufacturing brushes and rollers we find it difficult to accept the argument that Beatrice's deep pocket will enable Tip Top to dominate or restructure this industry.

V. Respondent's Appeal from the Finding that the Essex Graham Acquisition Violated Section 7.

On July 1, 1970, approximately one year after the Tip Top acquisition, Beatrice acquired substantially all the assets of the Essex Graham Company. Essex Graham at the date of acquisition was engaged solely in the manufacture and sale of paint rollers and roller accessories, shipping its products to purchasers located throughout the United States from production facilities in Illinois.

The administrative law judge found that the acquisition substantially lessened actual competition in both the combined brush-and-roller market and the roller submarket and that Essex Graham was eliminated as the most likely entrant into the paint brush submarket.

[10] Since those cases were decided, the networks have abandoned volume discounts. Sterling Drug, Inc. 80 F.T.C. 477, 605 (1972). See also Peterman, "The Clorox Case and the Television Rate Structure," 12 J. Law & Economics 321 (1968).

The law judge accepted complaint counsel's market figures and found that in 1969, Tip Top manufactured 7.6 percent of the combined brush-and-roller market, ranking third in such shipments. In the same year Essex's shipments of rollers represented 2.3 percent of that market, giving it a rank of 13th. In the same year, Tip Top ranked number eight in the paint roller submarket, manufacturing approximately 3.7 percent of all paint rollers. Essex Graham ranked fifth, with 7.0 percent of paint rollers shipped in the United States.

The law judge found that concentration in the relevant markets was high and rising and that the acquisition of Essex Graham by Beatrice accelerated the trend. On the basis of these and other factors cited in the Initial Decision he concluded that Section 7 had been violated and ordered divestiture of the acquired assets and all additions and improvements thereto and further ordered respondent to cease and desist from any further acquisitions of firms doing business in the market for a period of ten years without the approval of the Commission.

Our examination of the market structure and trends in the market persuades us to affirm the law judge's decision. Prior to the acquisition there had been a clear increase in concentration between 1967 and 1969:[11]

36.6%	1967
41.3%	1969

8-FIRM RATIOS (BRUSHES-AND-ROLLERS)	YEAR
52.8%	1967
62.5%	1969

As previously indicated, Tip Top ranked third in shipments in this market in 1969. Adding Essex Graham's 1969 shipments to Tip Top's, four-firm concentration increased from 41.3 percent to 43.6 percent as a result of this merger.[12] Eight-firm concentration increased from 62.5 percent to 64.8 percent as a result.

[11] In the following tabulations, we have omitted any pro forma increase in concentration brought about by horizontal acquisitions in 1969 and 1970 by the EZ Paintr Corporation which are discussed infra.

[12] The top four companies and Essex had the following sales and market shares in 1969 (CX 108c):

	Shipments ($000)	%

A similar increase in concentration in the paint roller submarket resulted from the merger. The top four companies in this market collectively made 58.1 percent of total shipments of paint rollers in 1969, Essex Graham ranked number five and Tip Top ranked number eight in the market. After the merger, Tip Top's position moved to number three in the market with a 10.7 percent combined share.

These two markets are "concentrated" under definitions accepted by the Commission and courts in prior merger cases. Stanley Works, 78 F.T.C. 1023 (1971), aff'd 469 F.2d 498 (2d Cir. 1972). The fact that concentration was increasing at a rapid rate at the time of the merger is added reason to order divestiture. Where there has been a "history of tendency toward concentration in the industry," mergers leading toward further concentration "are to be curbed in their incipiency," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, 370 U.S. at 345, and where "concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great," United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365 n. 42 (1963). See also United States v. Von's Grocery, 384 U.S. 270 (1966); United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 384 U.S. 546 (1966); and United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441. The trend toward greater concentration in the markets involved here was accompanied by a number of horizontal acquisitions.

The clear rise in concentration, substantially augmented by this merger, outweighs in our view any consideration of the fact that prior to the acquisition most of Essex Graham paint rollers may have been generally of higher quality and sold at a higher price than of Tip Top's rollers. Furthermore, the record shows that Essex Graham did sell lower-priced rollers and roller kits as well, and distributed roller products to the same type of outlets that Tip Top sold to, including mass merchandisers and drug chains (Tr. 1387, 1389, 1166, 1234, 1405, 1442, 3128, 3132, CX 115 Z7, CX 7-D, CX 5T-U). Also, Tip Top manufactured and sold quality paint brushes as well as "throwaways" (Tr. 1328, CX 115 F, RX 179A). The president of Tip Top considered manufacturers of professional applicators as competitors of Tip Top (Tr. 1263, 1327). Elimination of Essex as "a competitor" was one of the reasons cited by a vice president of Tip Top in recommending its acquisition (Tr. 3128-33).

EZ Paintr Corp.	10,902	11.1
Tip Top Brush Co., Inc.	7,437	7.6
The Sherwin-Williams Co.	7,299	7.4
* * * * *
Essex Graham	2,245	2.3
Universe	98.2 million

Unless the market share data placed in the record by complaint counsel is flawed and substantially overstates the degree of concentration in these markets, the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the record is that this merger lessened competition in the manner proscribed by Section 7.[13]

We now turn to respondent's challenge to these data.

Complaint counsel's universe figures for total shipments by manufacturers in the markets involved in this case were obtained directly from published Census reports–the 1967 Census of Manufactures and the Annual Surveys of Manufactures for 1968 and 1969. The Standard Industrial Code (SIC) 39912 and its subcategories cover shipments of paint brushes and paint rollers and do not include any products that are extraneous to this proceeding. Market shares were obtained by dividing shipments of individual companies by the universe figures obtained from the Census reports. Shipments of individual firms were obtained as follows: Companies known to be in the market were interviewed by a Commission economist and were asked to list the 12 leading companies in the brush-and-roller industry. To each firm so identified by an interviewee, the economist directed a letter requesting shipment figures of products in the relevant markets for the years 1967 through 1969. Furthermore these addressees were also requested to list the companies which they considered to be the 12 leading firms in the market. Any company not surveyed originally but listed in more than one response was then also sent such an inquiry. Twenty-eight firms were eventually surveyed in this manner. Respondent was given the opportunity to cross-examine each firm whose shipment data was placed in the record as well as an opportunity to check the accuracy of the shipment figures against original records.

The administrative law judge granted respondent ten discovery subpoenas to search for any substantial firms which may have been omitted from the above survey. The two largest firms that respondent was able to locate that had not been included in complaint counsel's survey ranked 15th and 17th in the market for 1969.

Respondent argues that the universe figures taken from Census Reports are incomplete for the reason that the Census data was obtained only from firms where paint brushes or rollers constituted the primary product at a given plant and not any of its secondary products. This contention is refuted by the record. The heading of the Census Table showing industry shipments states that it "Includes quantities and value of the products reported not only by establishments classified in this industry but also by establishments classified in other industries, and shipping these products as 'secondary' products." (CX 74, p. 39D-15). A Bureau of Census official testified that when annual surveys are sent to a company it is instructed to report every product it makes based upon an SIC category (Tr. 1065). Thus, even a company in a completely unrelated industry who made a small volume of paint brushes was surveyed as to its production of paint brushes and paint rollers (Tr. 1043-50).

[13] The law judge also found that competition was substantially lessened in the paint brush submarket by the elimination of Essex Graham as the most likely future entrant into that line of commerce. In view of the clearer violations occurring in the overall market and the paint roller submarket, we find it unnecessary to decide whether elimination of Essex Graham as a potential entrant into the paint brush market was so significant as to amount to a separate violation of Section 7.

Respondent asserts that Tip Top should be viewed as an "assembler" of paint rollers, that it did not "manufacture" all the component parts that go into a roller unit. We find this argument confusing, as respondent admits that "The notion that an assembler in this particular industry is on the same footing as a manufacturer is a concept accepted by the Bureau of Census."[14] In view of its acknowledgment that the Census universe includes shipments of such assemblers we fail to see what respondent hopes to get from this argument. If the point that is intended is that there may be other roller "assemblers" larger than Tip Top or Essex Graham in the market that were not surveyed by complaint counsel and hence their individual shipment figures would not have been obtained, then we fail to see how respondent was prevented from obtaining their shipment figures. As noted previously, the law judge allowed respondent opportunity to subpoena any firms thought to be important factors in the industry and missed by complaint counsel in their survey. He indicated that if a showing was made, further subpoenas would be available. The initial grant of ten discovery subpoenas to respondent for such purpose was clearly adequate. Cf. Papercraft Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 472 F.2d 927 (7th Cir. 1973).

Finally, respondent complains that the law judge refused its request to subpoena approximately one hundred subpoenas to companies, many of whom are paint companies, who purchase paint applicator products from manufacturers and then repackage them for resale. The law judge was clearly correct, however, in refusing this request. The lines of commerce involved in this proceeding, as clearly indicated in the complaint, is the manufacture of paint applicator products. The fact that a redistributor may sell under his own label does not place him in the same position as a manufacturer. The private label distributor must still pay someone to produce his product. Companies that redistribute brushes and rollers purchased from manufacturers are at an obvious cost disadvantage with respect to manufacturers who compete in selling to the trade (Tr. 2282-84). To include in the universe sales of such redistributors would result in "double-counting" and would serve only to confuse and distort any analysis of the probable effects of the challenged acquisition.

[14] Respondent goes on to point out, correctly, that the instructions on the Census reporting form "specifically requires the inclusion in the manufacturing category of these products which have been assembled from purchased components (CX 102, p. 3 - 1967 "Instructions for the Annual Survey of Manufactures")." Resp. Appeal Brief pp. 13-14.

VI. The Commission's Proceedings in EZ Paintr Corp., Dkt. C-2106 Do Not Compel Dismissal of the Complaint

At the time a "proposed complaint"[15] was served on respondent Beatrice, the Commission also served a proposed complaint on the EZ Paintr Corporation, a manufacturer of paint rollers, which challenged that company's acquisition in 1969 of the American Brush Corporation of Chicago, Ill. ("ABC")[16] and its acquisition in 1970 of Masterset Brushes, Inc. ("Masterset") and King Paint Roller, Inc. ("King"). The latter two companies, Masterset and King, were purchased together and had been closely held corporations owned and operated by the same persons. The EZ Paintr complaint alleged, inter alia, that prior to the acquisitions, EZ Paintr was the nation's largest manufacturer of paint rollers, accounting for 29.7 percent of domestic plant shipments in 1968 and that ABC and King respectively shipped 0.5 percent and 1.2 percent of paint rollers in that year. The complaint alleged a violation of Section 7 in the paint roller line of commerce and also the overall paint applicator market (brushes and rollers) and the paint brush segment.[17]

The Commission and EZ Paintr subsequently entered into a consent order agreement. The major terms of the consent order required EZ Paintr to divest all the paint roller facilities it acquired; partial divestiture was required of the paint brush business acquired from ABC and no divestiture was required of the paint brush business acquired from Masterset. Sales of the acquired properties required to be divested under the terms of the order were subsequently effectuated with Commission approval.

In the meantime, on Oct. 1, 1971, the Commission issued its formal complaint against Beatrice commencing adjudicative proceedings, no settlement having been reached under consent order procedures.[18]

Respondent argues that the Commission "approved" the concentration level in the industry when it allowed EZ Paintr to keep the paint brush manufacturing capability of ABC and the Masterset Brush Company. It argues that these properties in EZ Paintr hands increased concentration more than the consolidation of Essex Graham into the Tip-Top Beatrice organization.

[15] Under the Commission's procedure then in effect, "proposed complaints" were served on respondents prior to issuance of a formal complaint, with notice that they had an opportunity to settle the matter under the Commission's non-adjudicative consent order procedures then in effect.

[16] This company should be distinguished from the American Brush Company of Boston, Mass., which is several times larger and is not affiliated with this company.

[17] Although EZ Paintr did not manufacture paint brushes prior to 1969, ABC and Masterset did. Hence the complaint alleged a violation in the paint brush line of commerce as well.

[18] The record before us does not disclose whether Beatrice made any offer of settlement. As we understand its argument, however, it is not complaining of disparate treatment during the consent order stages of the two proceedings but that any adjudication of illegality of the Essex Graham acquisition would be inconsistent with the Commission's action taken in the EZ Paintr matter.

It is true that the ABC and Masterset acquisitions, at least when viewed in the context of an overall brush-and-roller market, would appear to have been of greater magnitude than the Tip-Top (Beatrice)-Essex Graham merger. Combined sales were about $14 million.[19] By comparison Tip-Top applicator sales in 1969 were $7,437,000 and Essex Graham's were $2,245,000, or a combined total of somewhat less than $10 million.

Nevertheless these facts are not controlling here. Although the Commission made a determination that the settlement in EZ Paintr was in the public interest, that was not tantamount to a ruling that any portions of the EZ Paintr acquisitions not ordered to be divested were lawfully acquired or that acquisitions of no greater magnitude in the industry are immune from attack. The standards for determining that a proposed consent settlement is in the public interest embrace a number of considerations, including resource allocation factors, which may convince the Commission in a particular case that entry of a non-contested order containing less than a full divestiture would be preferable to seeking full divestiture after the hazards and delay of adjudication. The circumstances surrounding negotiated divestitures are so different that they usually cannot be cited in a litigation context. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 330 n. 12 (1961).

An examination of additional facts surrounding the EZ Paintr matter show that it is distinguishable in any event.[20] By 1971 ABC had been losing market position and sales and was in financial difficulties

[19] In 1968, the year prior to EZ Paintr's acquisition of ABC, EZ Paintr had total applicator sales (all were paint rollers, as it sold no paint brushes) of $8,835,000 and ABC paint brush sales amounted to $1,500,000. In 1969, the year prior to its acquisition, Masterset's sales (paint brushes, as it did not make rollers) amounted to $3,570,000 and EZ Paintr's applicator sales were $9,244,000.

[20] Respondent contends that it was denied sufficient access to documents in the EZ Paintr files of the Commission to enable it adequately to confront the Commission with the precedents of the decisions it made in that proceeding.

The ALJ on Aug. 2, 1972 denied respondent's pre-hearing discovery motion for an order requiring production of all non-public documents in the EZ Paintr files. Assuming arguendo that, because of the facial similarity between the two proceedings, access to material information in the files beyond that available from the public docket in C-2106 was required, cf. Sterling Drug Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 450 F.2d 698, 711-712 (D.C. Cir. 1971), we are satisfied that respondent obtained it. Pursuant to a Freedom of Information Act request Beatrice filed with the Commission on Sept. 8, 1972, the Commission granted it access to all records pertaining to the EZ Paintr matter except certain confidential financial data, customer lists, and portions of intra-agency memoranda expressing individual opinions and recommendations. (No Commission memorandum or opinion, as distinguished from memoranda containing staff or individual Commissioner views, existed.) Respondent subsequently placed a number of those documents into the record of this case.

Although respondent argues that it should have had complete access to intra-agency memoranda discussing the EZ Paintr settlement and divestitures, we fail to see the precedential value of such discussions since none constituted or contained statements adopted by the Commission.

when the consent settlement was reached. Its brush manufacturing plant had been relocated in another city as a result of an urban renewal project, causing it to lose most of its experienced personnel. It was estimated by one official that production had dropped 65 percent as a result (RX 109). The public docket file indicates that EZ Paintr itself had substantial financial difficulties during 1970 and 1971 (C-2106-1-2-1, p. 77). These factors may have persuaded the Commission that full divestiture was impractical or not in the public interest. Cf. Litton Industries, Dkt. 8778 (slip opinion, Mar. 4, 1975) [85 F.T.C. 333]. In contrast, Essex Graham and Beatrice were growing, profitable companies.

Also it should be noted that, although EZ Paintr was permitted to retain much of the paint brush manufacturing capacity it had acquired, the consent order required full divestiture of the businesses in the line of commerce in which EZ Paintr was previously engaged, the manufacture of paint rollers. Tip Top and Graham were also substantial factors in that market. Clearly, insofar as preserving intra-product competition in paint rollers, consistent treatment would call for an order of divestiture of Essex Graham, not dismissal of the complaint as respondent urges.[21]

VII. Respondent's Challenge to Evidentiary Rulings

Respondent claims that the ALJ erroneously prevented it from introducing competent evidence. Respondent's principal objection is that the ALJ erred in sustaining objections to questions posed by respondent's counsel to his witnesses on the ground that they were leading questions. We find no prejudice to have occurred since counsel was permitted to make offers of proof as to the expected testimony and we have accepted and considered as record evidence the offers of proof. For instance, the ALJ sustained objections to respondent counsel's asking three of his witnesses whether in their experience they regarded aerosol paint cans as competitive with brushes or rollers.[22] The offers of proof indicated that the testimony would simply have

We conclude that Beatrice has been given sufficient access to the relevant information in the EZ Paintr files enabling it "to argue the precedential value of that case," Sterling Drug, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra at 711.

[21] Respondent also points to the fact that subsequent to the entry of the consent order in EZ Paintr, the Commission allowed EZ Paintr to divest the roller companies it had acquired (Frank Gill Company [the paint roller division of ABC] and King Paint Roller Company) to members of the applicator industry. Again, however, these transactions are distinguishable. The company, that acquired Frank Gill (Bentzinger Bros., Inc.) had only $80,000 in paint roller sales. This figure combined with Gill's roller sales in 1971 (Gill's sales had declined considerably between 1969 and 1971) gave Bentzinger only a de minimis share-less than 1 percent-of the paint roller market based on 1969 industry data.

The divestiture of the King Paint Roller Company is also distinguishable. The acquiring company, Red Devil Inc., did not manufacture paint applicator products for sale in this country (Tr. 2508). None of these divestiture sales approved by the Commission are comparable to the Beatrice acquisition of Essex Graham.

[22] The ALJ sustained the objections to this question on the ground it was leading (Tr. 1674, 1874, 2128). Complaint been that aerosols and small brushes are interchangeable for some uses–a fact which was conceded by complaint counsel anyway and which, as we indicated supra p. 8 [p. 59], does not negate the market definitions adopted in this case. We have examined the other evidentiary rulings cited by respondent and find no prejudicial error.[23]

We wish to note our disagreement, however, with the ALJ's apparent belief that leading questions are improper even when used to introduce a subject matter or to refresh a witness' memory which, unaided, has been exhausted.[24] The general rule is to the contrary. Roberson v. United States, 249 F.2d 737 (5th Cir. 1957); Green v. United States, 348 F.2d 340 (D.C. Cir. 1965). Indeed we see little point in worrying about leading questions which seek to elicit information within the business expertise of witnesses that have been qualified to give opinion evidence. The "evil . . . of supplying a false memory for the witness" United States v. Durham, 319 F.2d 590, 592 (4th Cir. 1963), is unlikely to occur in such circumstances.

The examiner also disallowed a respondent's witness the opportunity to see if he could refresh his memory of names of customers from a written list. Apparently the ALJ so ruled because the list did not originate in his company and he had not seen it before. Again, however the rule is generally that any document, regardless of its origin, can be used to refresh a witness' memory. McCormick, Evidence §9 (1971). Nevertheless no prejudice occurred since an offer of proof was made and we have considered it as part of the record evidence (Tr. 2242).

Much of this record is filled with debate, acrimonious at times, over technical objections as to forms of questions. Counsel on both sides frequently indulged in raising such objections, apparently believing that they would gain some advantage in doing so. The objections did not, however, improve the quality of the evidence and served only to delay the proceeding. We reiterate what a distinguished panel of appeal judges observed many years ago in Samuel H. Moss v. Federal Trade counsel, however, was permitted to ask the identical question of one of his own witnesses over respondent's objection it called for a legal conclusion, (Tr. 472). Presumably, had respondent counsel raised an objection that the question was leading, the ALJ would have sustained it. In any event, we reject respondent's argument that these or any of the other instances cited in their brief amounted to prejudicial treatment favoring complaint counsel.

[23] Respondent contends that on several occasions the ALJ refused to allow offers of proof when objections were sustained. This is not accurate. Of the instances cited, there was only one (Tr. 1861-1865), where respondent was unable to make an offer of proof. No prejudice resulted since the question dealt only with a tangential issue.

Finally, we have examined respondent's arguments with respect to alleged disparate treatment between witnesses Zook and Felkay and find no error on the part of the ALJ.

[24] A sample of questions that were ruled to be improper leading questions are:

"What, if any, discount have you ever given them?" (Tr. 1446)

"In your research, are there any other products that you use besides those to which you have testified?" (Tr. 1861)

"Would you have telephone contact with your customers?" (Tr. 1816)

"In your business activity did you have an opportunity to observe the promotions of your competitors, if any?" (Tr. 1818)

"In your job as sales manager, do you call on some customers?" (Tr. 2143)

> * * * Why either he [hearing examiner] or the [Federal Trade] Commission's attorney should have thought it desirable to be so formal about the admission of evidence, we cannot understand. Even in criminal trials to a jury it is better, nine times out of ten, to admit, than to exclude, evidence and in such proceedings as these the only conceivable interest that can suffer by admitting any evidence is the time lost, which is seldom as much as that inevitably lost by idle bickering about irrelevancy or incompetence.

Although we are satisfied that no prejudice to the parties resulted from any of the ALJ's rulings, the record in this case would have been considerably shorter had the above advice been heeded.

An appropriate order is appended.

FINAL ORDER

This matter having been heard by the Commission upon briefs and oral argument in support of cross appeals filed by respondent and complaint counsel from the initial decision in this matter; and the Commission for the reasons stated in the accompanying opinion having concluded that the appeals should be denied;

It is ordered, That the initial decision, as supplemented and modified by the Commission's opinion in this matter, and the order contained in said initial decision, be, and hereby are adopted as the decision and order of the Commission;

It is further ordered, That the parties' motions for correction of the transcript of oral argument before the Commission be, and hereby are, granted.

ORDER DENYING MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT FOR LACK OF PUBLIC INTEREST

Respondents Herbert R. Gibson, Sr., Herbert R. Gibson, Jr., Gerald Gibson, Belva Gibson, Gibsons, Inc., Gibson's Discount Centers, Inc., Ideal Travel Agency, Inc., Gibson Warehouse, Inc., and Gibson Products Company, Inc., have moved that the complaint in this matter be dismissed as to them for lack of public interest. The administrative law judge having determined that this matter is outside the scope of his authority, certified it to the Commission pursuant to Section 3.22(a) of the rules of practice.

Respondents contend that this administrative proceeding is unnecessary inasmuch as the issues raised herein will be adjudicated in a private treble damages action, now pending in a Texas District Court, entitled Howard-Gibco, et al. v. H. R. Gibson, Sr., et al., No. 75-0085. The Commission finds this insufficient reason to warrant dismissal since the public interest in halting respondents' allegedly illegal acts and practices will not necessarily coincide with the interests of private parties who are seeking monetary damages. See Order Denying Respondents' Motions for Discontinuance or Suspension of Proceedings, In Re: Boise Cascade Corp., et al., Docket No. 8958 (Aug. 26, 1974) [84 F.T.C.308]. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid motion to dismiss the complaint in this matter be, and it hereby is, denied.

IN THE MATTER OF

CROWN TRADING COMPANY, INC., ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION AND TRUTH IN LENDING ACTS

Docket C-2678. Complaint, July 1, 1975-Decision, July 1, 1975

Consent order requiring a Miami, Fla., retailer of television sets, furniture and appliances, among other things to cease violating the Truth in Lending Act by failing to disclose to consumers, in connection with the extension of consumer credit, such information as required by Regulation Z of the said Act.

Appearances

For the Commission: Truett M. Honeycutt.

For the respondents: Arthur J. August, Miami, Fla.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Crown Trading Company, Inc., a corporation, trading and doing business as Crown Stores, and Eusebio Benitez and Juan Benitez, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts and the implementing regulation, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Crown Trading Company, Inc., trading and doing business as Crown Stores, is a corporation, organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal office and place of business located at 1051 S.W. Eighth St., Miami, Fla.

Respondents Eusebio Benitez and Juan Benitez are officers of said corporation. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including those hereinafter set forth. Their address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the offering for sale and retail sale of television sets, furniture and appliances to the public.

PAR. 3. In the ordinary course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents regularly extend consumer credit, as "consumer credit" is defined in Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

PAR. 4. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, respondents, in the ordinary course of business as aforesaid, and in connection with credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Regulation Z, have caused and are causing customers purchasing television sets, furniture and appliances to execute certain blank retail installment contracts. In a substantial number of instances, such customers are never given a copy of the completed contract. Respondents do not provide these customers with any other credit cost disclosures.

By and through their use of this blank retail installment contract, respondents:

1. Fail to disclose the "annual percentage rate," computed in accordance with Section 226.5 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.8(b) (2) of Regulation Z.

2. Fail to disclose the number, amount, and due date or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness, as required by Section 226.8(b)(3) of Regulation Z.

3. Fail to disclose the sum of the payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness, using the term "total of payments," as required by Section 226.8(b)(3) of Regulation Z.

4. Fail in any credit sale to disclose the price at which respondents, in the regular course of business, offer to sell for cash the property or services which are the subject of the credit sale, using the term "cash price," as required by Section 226.8(c)(1) of Regulation Z.

5. Fail to disclose the amount of any downpayment in money made in connection with any credit sale, using the term "cash downpayment," as required by Section 226.8(c)(2) of Regulation Z.

6. Fail to disclose the amount of any downpayment in property made in connection with any credit sale, using the term "trade in," as required by Section 226.8(c)(2) of Regulation Z.

7. Fail to disclose the sum of the "cash downpayment" and the "trade in" made in connection with any credit sale, using the term "total downpayment," as required by Section 226.8(c)(2) of Regulation Z.

8. Fail in any credit sale to disclose the difference between the "cash price" and the "total downpayment," using the term "unpaid balance of cash price," as required by Section 226.8(c)(3) of Regulation Z.

9. Fail to disclose all other charges which are included in the amount financed, but which are not part of the finance charge, as required by Section 226.8(c)(4) of Regulation Z.

10. Fail in any credit sale to disclose the sum of the "unpaid balance of cash price" and all other charges individually itemized, which are included in the amount financed but which are not part of the finance charge, using the term "unpaid balance," as required by Section 226.8(c)(5) of Regulation Z.

11. Fail to disclose the amount of credit extended, using the term "amount financed," as required by Section 226.8(c)(7) of Regulation Z.

12. Fail to disclose the sum of all charges made to the customer which are required by Section 226.4 of Regulation Z to be included in the finance charge, using the term "finance charge," as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(i) of Regulation Z.

13. Fail in any credit sale to disclose the sum of the cash price, all charges which are included in the amount financed but which are not part of the finance charge, and the finance charge, using the term

"deferred payment price," as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(ii) of Regulation Z.

14. Fail to make consumer credit cost disclosures heretofore set forth in this Paragraph before consummation of the transaction, and to furnish the customer with a duplicate of the contract or a statement by which the disclosures required by Section 226.8 of Regulation Z are made, as required by Section 226.8(a) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 5. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, respondents, in the ordinary course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, have charged and are now charging, a substantial number of consumers for credit life, accident, health and/or disability insurance written in connection with consumer credit sales transactions.

Typical and illustrative but not all inclusive, of the circumstances in which such insurance charges are incurred by consumers are the following, which generally occur in the sequence set forth:

1. Respondents automatically include charges for credit life, accident, health, and/or disability insurance on the credit sale disclosure statement and, unless the customer specifically objects to the inclusion of the charges for such insurance, the coverage becomes part of the credit transaction.

2. On that portion of the credit sale disclosure statement or statements which contains the statement, "I desire to obtain the creditor insurance checked above* * *" or words of similar import, followed by a line for the customer's signature, respondents, without the permission or authority of the consumer, check the box provided for the customer's election of credit life and then date and place an "x" on the line for the borrower's signature.

3. The credit sale disclosure, filled out as indicated above is presented to the customer for two signatures, and the consumer is told by respondents' employees to sign next to the "x's" respondents' employees have made. The consumer is not told of the purpose of each signature. These signatures are intended to indicate the consumer's request for the insurance coverage, and to acknowledge the consumer's receipt of the completed loan disclosure statement.

PAR. 6. By and through the acts and practices described in Paragraph Five, and others of similar import, meaning and consequence, but not specifically set forth herein, respondents, in a substantial number of instances, obtain consumers' signatures through practices which operate, directly or indirectly, to defeat the elective language of the insurance authorization disclosures by obscuring from consumers knowledge about the option, by misrepresenting to consumers that their signatures are necessary solely for the purpose of consummating the credit transaction, and by discouraging the declination of the coverage when it is questioned. These practices have the effect of preventing substantial numbers of consumers from exercising their own independent, voluntary choice whether to obtain credit life, accident, health and/or disability insurance.

Therefore, respondents, in a substantial number of instances, induce their customers to incur charges for credit life, accident, health and/or disability insurance without said customers making a knowing, affirmative election to have such insurance and, thereby, respondents have failed to obtain from each of their customers a "specifically dated and separately signed affirmative written indication of [their] desire" to obtain such insurance, as required by Section 226.4(a)(5) of Regulation Z, in spite of the existence of language to the contrary in the credit cost disclosure statement.

PAR. 7. By and through the acts and practices described in Paragraphs Five and Six hereof, respondents have failed to include the charges for credit life, accident, health and/or disability insurance in the Finance Charge when a specific dated and separately signed affirmative written indication of the consumer's desire for such insurance has not been obtained, as required by Section 226.4(a)(5) of Regulation Z, and thereby respondents:

1. Failed to disclose accurately the "finance charge," as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(i) of Regulation Z; and
2. Failed to disclose the "annual percentage rate" accurately to the nearest quarter of one percent, in accordance with Section 226.5, as required by Section 226.8(b)(2) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 8. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failures to comply with the provisions of Regulation Z constitute violations of that Act and, pursuant to Section 108(c) thereof, respondents have thereby violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Atlanta Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Truth in Lending Act and the regulation promulgated thereunder and violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Acts, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Crown Trading Company, Inc., is a corporation, trading and doing business as Crown Stores, organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with its office and principal place of business located at 1051 S.W. Eighth St., Miami, Fla.

Respondents Eusebio Benitez and Juan Benitez are officers of said corporation. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and their principal office and place of business is located at the above stated address.

7. Failing to disclose the sum of the "cash downpayment" and the "trade in" made in connection with any credit sale, using the term "total downpayment," as required by Section 226.8(c)(2) of Regulation Z.

8. Failing in any credit sale to disclose the difference between the "cash price" and the "total downpayment," using the term "unpaid balance of cash price," as required by Section 226.8(c)(3) of Regulation Z.

9. Failing to disclose all other charges which are included in the amount financed, but which are not part of the finance charge, as required by Section 226.8(c)(4) of Regulation Z.

10. Failing in any credit sale to disclose the sum of the "unpaid balance of cash price" and all other charges individually itemized, which are included in the amount financed but which are not part of the finance charge, using the term "unpaid balance," as required by Section 226.8(c)(5) of Regulation Z.

For the respondent: Peter D. Standish, Weil, Gotshal & Manges, New York City.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Marshall Cavendish Corporation, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Marshall Cavendish Corporation is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 110 E. 59th St., New York, N.Y.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of encyclopedias, reference or educational material and other publications or other items of merchandise to the general public, and in the inducement and collection of payments for said publications or other items of merchandise from members of the general public.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent now causes, and for some time last past has caused, said publications or other items of merchandise to be shipped or distributed from its places of business or from its sources of supply to purchasers and prospective purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State where such publications or other items of merchandise were shipped or distributed. Furthermore, respondent disseminates, and has disseminated through the U.S. mail advertising material for the promotion of such publications or other items of merchandise to recipients located in States other than the State of origination of such mailings. In connection with such publications or other items of merchandise, respondent causes and has caused the mailing of invoices, collection notices and various other commercial papers or documents, for the purpose of inducing and collecting payment for said publications or other items of merchandise, among and between the several States of the United States. Respondent maintains, at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in such publications or other items of merchandise in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent has and is disseminating promotional material relating to continuity book programs. Such promotional material is distributed in mass through the U.S. mail for the purpose of inducing the recipient of such material to become a subscriber to said continuity book programs. A continuity book program is a method of distribution whereby persons receive individual volumes of a set of publications on an approval basis.

The promotion material disseminated by respondent is both voluminous and verbose. The recipient of such material is advised of the availability of obtaining the first volume of a set of publications without cost in return for the recipient's agreement to become a subscriber to respondent's continuity book program. While placing extensive emphasis on the virtues of the program and on the minimal obligation of the recipient, respondent's promotional material does not contain adequate material disclosures of the fact that only the first few volumes of the set of publications are mailed to subscribers singly and individually with the remaining volumes being mailed to subscribers by means of bulk shipments. Among and including the statements and representations set forth in said promotional material, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

The International Wildlife Encyclopedia

[Return coupon mailed by recipient to respondent]

> As a subscriber you will be notified in advance of all future shipments. You may reject any shipments simply by notifying us. Also, if not completely delighted with any volume after FREE examination in your home, you may return it at our expense and owe nothing.

* * * * *

> You may cancel AT ANY TIME after taking as many or as few volumes as you like - even none at all if you so choose. The magnificent FIRST VOLUME is yours to keep ABSOLUTELY FREE in any case.

Family, Life and Health Encyclopedia

As publishers of the FAMILY, LIFE AND HEALTH ENCYCLOPEDIA, we are frankly puzzled!

You see, we can't imagine why everyone doesn't send in for their free copy of volume one - a big, deluxe library volume, filled with pictures - and all absolutely free, with no obligation to buy another book ever!

* * * * *

You will not receive a bill. You will not receive another volume, unless you wish. If you decide that you do not want any more volumes simply tell us.

Perhaps you say to yourself; "I know all about buying books by mail. They will send me books that I have not ordered and then send me bills for these unordered books."

This cannot happen because this is not a Book Club. There are no monthly cards to return. Once you tell us to cancel we CANCEL. You never receive another book.

Man, Myth and Magic

There is absolutely no need for you to decide now whether or not you would like additional volumes of Man, Myth and Magic. You do not obligate yourself in any way by sending for your free first volume. It is our complementary gift to you!

PAR. 5. Through the use of said statements or others of similar import and meaning but not specifically set forth herein, respondent has represented, and is continuing to represent, directly or by implication:

(a) That subscribers to respondent's continuity programs are accorded the option of receiving a single book at a time, and thereby are afforded the opportunity to receive and review on approval each book separately and to reject or accept same, until the expiration of the continuity programs.

(b) That no further volumes of books will be received after said subscribers have notified respondent to cancel their subscriptions to the programs.

(c) That persons who subscribe to respondent's continuity programs do so without risk or obligation.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

(a) Subscribers to respondent's continuity programs are not accorded the option of receiving a single book at a time, and thereby are not afforded the opportunity to receive and review on approval each book separately and to reject or accept same, until expiration of their continuity programs. Respondent does not adequately advise subscribers of the material fact, when the subscribers initially receive promotional material concerning the continuity programs, that all but the first few books are shipped in mass by means of single bulk shipments.

(b) Subscribers to respondent's continuity programs, in many instances, continue to receive volumes of books after notifying respondent to cancel their subscriptions to the programs.

(c) Subscribers to respondent's continuity programs are subject to risks or obligations. Once a person subscribes to the continuity programs, respondent imposes the following duties or obligations on the subscribers: must notify respondent to prevent shipment of additional books; must return to respondent all books found unacceptable, must pay for all books not returned to respondent. Subscribers also incur the risk that due to delays in mailing delivery or computer error, they will receive unordered merchandise or incorrect billings for books that have either been returned to respondent or for books that have been shipped to subscribers after said subscribers cancelled their subscription to the continuity programs.

Therefore, respondent's statements, representations, acts and practices, and its failure to adequately disclose material facts, as set forth in Paragraphs Four through Six, hereof, were and are, false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, a substantial majority of the persons who initially subscribe to any of respondent's continuity book programs subsequently cancel or otherwise terminate their relationship with respondent prior to shipment of all of the volumes of books contained in said continuity programs. Respondent has failed to establish and implement adequate procedures to insure that subscribers who subsequently cancel or otherwise terminate their relationship with respondent will not receive volumes of books from respondent after their severance from the continuity programs.

As a result of respondent's failure to establish and implement adequate cancellation procedures, subscribers have received unauthorized, unwanted shipment of books and have received repeated, unrelented mailings of bills, dunning letters, and similar correspondence relating to such books. Due to receipt of such books, bills and dunning letters, subscribers have had to expend their time and energies to dispose of the books sent to them and to attempt to correct respondent's erroneous billing notices.

Therefore, respondent's failure to establish and implement adequate cancellation procedures were and are unfair acts and practices.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of its business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent has been, and now is, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of publications and other items of merchandise of the same general kind and nature as sold by respondent.

PAR. 9. The use by respondent of the aforesaid unfair, and false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices and the failure to disclose material facts, have had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements and representations were, and are, true and complete, or into the purchase or retention, and payment for, substantial quantities of said publications and other items of merchandise by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 10. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof, and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Bureau of Consumer Protection proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Marshall Cavendish Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The Greystone Corporation, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent The Greystone Corporation is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 225 Park Ave. S., New York, N.Y.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of encyclopedia, reference or educational material and other publications or other items of merchandise to the general public, and in the inducement and collection of payments for said publications or other items of merchandise from members of the general public.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent now causes, and for some time last past has caused, said publications or other items of merchandise to be shipped or distributed from its places of business or from its sources of supply to purchasers and prospective purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the state where such publications or other items of merchandise were shipped or distributed. Furthermore, respondent disseminates, and has disseminated through the U.S. mail advertising material for the promotion of such publications or other items of merchandise to recipients located in States other than the State of origination of such mailings. In connection with such publications or other items of merchandise, respondent causes and has caused the mailing of invoices, collection notices and various other commercial papers or documents, for the purpose of inducing and collecting payment for said publications or other items of merchandise, among and between the several States of the United States. Respondent maintains, at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a substantial course of trade in such publications or other items of merchandise in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent has and is disseminating promotional material relating to continuity book programs. Such promotional material is distributed in mass through the U.S. Mail for the purpose of inducing the recipient of such material to become a subscriber to said continuity book programs. A continuity book program is a method of distribution whereby persons receive individual volumes of a set of publications on an approval basis.

The promotion material disseminated by respondent is both voluminous and verbose. The recipient of such material is advised of the availability of obtaining the first volume of a set of publications without cost in return for the recipient's agreement to become a subscriber to respondent's continuity book program. While placing extensive emphasis on the virtues of the program and on the minimal obligation of the recipient, respondent's promotional material does not contain adequate material disclosures of the fact that only the first few volumes of the set of publications are mailed to subscribers singly and individually with the remaining volumes being mailed to subscribers by means of bulk shipments. Among and including the statements and representations set forth in said promotional material, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

The Practical Encyclopedia of Good Decorating and Home Improvement

> Frankly, I do not understand why everyone does not send in for free Volume 1 - since it is absolutely free (we even pay the postage) and since there is absolutely no obligation to buy any volumes now or ever.
> Let me assure you that Volume 1 is actually free. There are no strings attached. If you decide that you do not want any more volumes you simply tell us. You will never receive a bill - you will never receive another volume* * *
> Perhaps you say to yourself: "I know all about buying books by mail. They will send books that I have not ordered and then send me bills for these unordered books."
> This cannot happen because this is not a Book Club. There are no monthly cards to return. Once you tell us to CANCEL, we CANCEL. You never receive another book.

PAR. 5. Through the use of said statements or others of similar import and meaning but not specifically set forth herein, respondent has represented, and is continuing to represent, directly or by implication:

(a) That subscribers to respondent's continuity programs are accorded the option of receiving a single book at a time, and thereby are afforded the opportunity to receive and review on approval each book separately and to reject or accept same, until the expiration of the continuity programs.

(b) That no further volumes of books will be received after said subscribers have notified respondent to cancel their subscriptions to the programs.

(c) That persons who subscribe to respondent's continuity programs do so without risk or obligation.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

(a) Subscribers to respondent's continuity programs are not accorded the option of receiving a single book at a time, and thereby are not afforded the opportunity to receive and review on approval each book separately, and to reject or accept same, until expiration of their continuity programs. Respondent does not adequately advise subscribers of the material fact, when the subscribers initially receive promotional material concerning the continuity programs, that all but the first few books are shipped in mass by means of bulk shipments.

(b) Subscribers to respondent's continuity programs, in many instances, continue to receive volumes of books after notifying respondent to cancel their subscriptions to the programs.

(c) Subscribers to respondent's continuity programs are subject to risks or obligations. Once a person subscribes to the continuity programs, respondent imposes the following duties or obligations on the subscribers: must notify respondent to prevent shipment of additional books, must return to respondent all books found unacceptable; must pay for all books not returned to respondent. Subscribers also incur the risk that due to delays in mailing delivery or computer error, they will receive unordered merchandise or incorrect billings for books that have either been returned to respondent or for books that have been shipped to subscribers after said subscribers cancelled their subscription to the continuity programs.

Therefore, respondent's statements, representations, acts and practices, and its failure to adequately disclose material facts, as set forth in Paragraphs Four through Six, hereof, were and are, false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, a substantial majority of the persons who initially subscribe to any of respondent's continuity book programs subsequently cancel or otherwise terminate their relationship with respondent prior to shipment of all of the volumes of books contained in said continuity programs. Respondent has failed to establish and implement adequate procedures to insure that subscribers who subsequently cancel or otherwise terminate their relationship with respondent will not receive volumes of books from respondent after their severance from the continuity programs.

As a result of respondent's failure to establish and implement adequate cancellation procedures, subscribers have received unauthorized, unwanted shipment of books and have received repeated, unrelented mailings of bills, dunning letters, and similar correspondence relating to such books. Due to receipt of such books, bills and dunning letters subscribers have had to expend their time and energies to dispose of the books sent to them and to attempt to correct respondent's erroneous billing notices.

Therefore, respondent's failure to establish and implement adequate cancellation procedures, were and are unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of its business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent has been, and now is, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of publications and other items of merchandise by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. The use by respondent of the aforesaid unfair, and false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices and the failure to disclose material facts, have had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements and representations were, and are, true and complete, or into the purchase or retention, and payment for, substantial quantities of said publications and other items of merchandise by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 10. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof, and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Bureau of Consumer Protection proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondent has violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in §2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent The Greystone Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 225 Park Ave. South, New York, N.Y.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondent, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent The Greystone Corporation, a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and its agents, representatives, employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale or sale, inducing or collecting payments for, and distribution of any encyclopedia or educational series of books, or of any merchandise, hereinafter such books and merchandise sometimes collectively referred to as products, through the use of a continuity program that provides contractually for the delivery, on an approval basis, of any of said products to any person at intervals, with the balance of the program sent in one or more multi-unit shipments, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or by implication, that:

(a) Any person has the option to receive each product, separately and individually, and to accept or reject same, unless such representation is true.

(b) Any person will not receive any further products after the respondent has received and processed a properly identified notice of his cancellation of any such continuity program, unless such representation is true; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the consequences resulting from any person's cancellation of his participation in any such continuity program.

(c) Any person incurs no risk or obligation by joining any such continuity program unless such representation is true; or misrepresenting, in any manner, any condition, right, duty or obligation imposed on said person.

2. Disseminating, or causing the dissemination of, any advertisement for such continuity program by means of the United States mails or by any means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, which fails to disclose in a clear and conspicuous manner a description of the material conditions and terms of any such continuity program, and the material duties and obligations of any subscriber thereto, including:

(a) A description of each product, the billing charge to be made therefor, the anticipated total number of products included in any such continuity program, the number of products included in each shipment, except that as to the last two shipments, respondent may instead disclose the approximate number of volumes in the second to last shipment and the fact that the last shipment contains the balance of the products to be sent, and the number of and the approximate intervals between each such shipment.

(b) A description of the procedures, including any time limitations, for cancellation prior to delivery, and for rejecting after examination by returning any product, and the fact that the respondent will grant an allowance or credit against billing charges for any unwanted product that has been rejected or returned pursuant to the terms of the continuity program; and

(c) That in order for any communication, including any cancellation, to be processed by the respondent prior to the shipment of any product, such communication must be received by the respondent within the time period provided to the subscriber in accordance with Paragraph 4, infra.

3. Failing to disclose, clearly and conspicuously, on any return coupon, order form or any other document used for responding to any such continuity program offered, and, in magazine or newspaper advertising, in immediate and close conjunction with any return coupon, order form or any other document used for responding to any such continuity program offered, the following information:

(a) The anticipated total number of products included in any such continuity program;

(b) The number of products included in each shipment, except that as to the last two shipments, respondent may instead disclose the approximate number of volumes in the second to last shipment and the fact that the last shipment contains the balance of the products to be sent; and

(c) The number of and the approximate intervals between each such shipment.

4. Failing to notify the subscriber subsequent to enrollment, clearly and conspicuously, in conjunction with the delivery of products sent to any subscribers, of the time period or periods after which the respondent will initiate processing of any future shipment or shipments.

5. Failing to establish and implement adequate procedures so that the subscriber will be provided with any such notifications required by Paragraph 4, supra, at least 15 days prior to the anticipated processing date of any subsequent shipment.

6. Failing to advise the subscriber, clearly and conspicuously, in close conjunction with the notification required in Paragraph 4, supra, that the subscriber must advise the respondent prior to the anticipated processing date if any change is desired in the status of the subscriber's account.

7. Preparing shipping labels for any shipment of any product in such continuity program for which the recipient will incur a monetary obligation, until at least 4 days after the anticipated processing date established pursuant to Paragraph 4, supra, in connection with that shipment.

8. Failing to establish and implement adequate procedures to credit, for the full invoiced amount thereof, any properly identified return of any product sent to a subscriber to any such continuity program, and to guarantee to the postal service or the subscriber postage adequate to return such product to the respondent, when:

(a) The product is sent to a subscriber after the respondent has received and processed such notice of cancellation prior to the anticipated processing date established in conjunction with the shipment of such product as required by Paragraph 4, supra; or

(b) Such notice of cancellation is received by the respondent within 4 days of the anticipated processing date established pursuant to Paragraph 4, supra, but has been mailed by the subscriber and postmarked at least three days prior to the date disclosed as aforesaid.

9. Failing to establish and implement adequate procedures to prevent the sending of any product to any subscriber to any such continuity program, or mailing any bill or invoice therefor, after the respondent has received and processed any properly identified notice of cancellation from said subscriber prior to the date upon which the respondent may initiate the processing for the shipment of said product pursuant to Paragraph 7, supra.

10. Failing to establish and implement adequate procedures to do the following, after receipt of any properly identified claim for adjustment in connection with any bill or invoice or any defense raised by any alleged debtor in connection with any such continuity program;

(a) Make any such adjustment within 14 days of receipt of such claim; or

(b) Acknowledge the receipt of the claim or defense within 14 days of receipt by the respondent and suspend all collection procedures with such alleged debtor until 25 days after complying with the procedures set forth in (c), below; and

(c) Make the requested adjustment within 60 days, or, within said period, inform the alleged debtor in writing of the respondent's understanding of the facts alleged in the claim or defense.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondent notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe The A & R Agency, a partnership doing business in its own name and as Daily Challenge, Spanish Newspaper Agency, Jewish Newspaper Agency, Scandanavian Newspaper Agency, Italian Newspaper Agency, Chinese Newspaper Agency, Catholic Newspaper Agency, German Newspaper Agency, Recorder Newspaper Agency, Caribbean Echo, Bronx Home Newspaper Agency, Polish Publication Agency, Hungarian Newspaper Agency, Greek Newspaper Agency, and Anthony Abraham individually and as a partner in said partnership and Anthony Clausi individually and as an employee of said partnership, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent The A & R Agency is a partnership organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located at 350 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

Respondent Anthony Abraham is an individual and is the only active partner in the partnership respondent. Respondent Anthony Clausi is an individual and is employed as manager of the partnership respondent. Said individual respondents formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the partnership respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. The address of respondent Anthony Abraham is 727 S. Alhambra Cir., Coral Gables, Fla., and the address of respondent Anthony Clausi is that of the partnership respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the solicitation of advertisements to be published in a number of newspapers, magazines, and other publications and in the collection of accounts arising out of their said business.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents engage in extensive commercial activities among the various States of the United States. By long distance telephone and other means, respondents contact prospective purchasers of advertising space in states other than the State of New York and seek to sell advertising space to such persons. Respondents transmit through the United States mails to such persons invoices, statements, letters and other business communications and receive from them bank checks, letters and other instruments of a commercial nature. Respondents maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business respondents and their agents or representatives contact prospective purchasers of advertising space by telephone and other means and seek to induce them to purchase advertising space in many newspapers and periodicals among which are the Daily Challenge, El Tiempo and Menora.

In connection with such solicitations, respondents and respondents' agents and representatives, have made numerous statements regarding the character and volume of circulation of the individual publications.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

That the Daily Challenge has a circulation of 10,000 subscribers in Wilmington, Del., or 350,000 circulation in New England, New York and Washington, D.C., or reaches hundreds of Black homes by mail or is the largest newspaper in the East serving the Black community; that El Tiempo has a circulation of 200,000 or 500,000; that Menora has a guaranteed paid circulation of 72,000, or is read by 50,000 Jewish families in the New York area, or has a general circulation of more than 100,000 or 250,000 or 100,000 readers in Long Island.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact, the various statements and representations made by respondents and respondents' agents and representatives regarding the character and volume of said publications were and are false and exaggerated. The total circulation of the Daily Challenge is about 34,000; of El Tiempo 33,000 and of Menora 30,000.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraph Four hereof were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents and their agents or representatives seek to induce prospects to purchase advertising space in various publications by representing that the readership of a publication is of a special type or class. For example: that the Daily Challenge's readers are Black professionals, and that Menora is the Jewish businessman's paper, is widely circulated among prominent Jewish doctors, lawyers, and professionals, and goes to Jewish investment houses.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact, the various statements and representations made by respondents and respondents' agents and representatives regarding the type or class of subscribers or readers of the said publications were and are false and exaggerated. The Daily Challenge carries no news of special interest to Black professionals and the Menora is published in the Hungarian language and there is a limited number of American Jewish people who can read Hungarian.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraph six hereof, were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents have also engaged in the practice of placing advertisements of various persons and firms in various publications without having received authorization from such persons or firms. Respondents have then sought to exact payment from said persons and firms for such unauthorized advertisements.

PAR. 9. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive practices as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Six has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead prospective advertisers into the purchase of advertising space by reason of said practices. The unfair and deceptive practice engaged in by respondents of publishing wholly unauthorized advertisements as set forth in Paragraph Eight has subjected firms and individuals to harassment and unlawful demand for payment of nonexistent debts.

PAR. 10. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents have engaged in the following additional unfair, false, misleading and deceptive practices:

1. In a substantial number of instances, respondents have represented that advertisements will appear in special sections of a publication when in fact the publication is not divided into sections and does not segregate advertisements according to type but commingles advertisements.

2. In a substantial number of instances, respondents have represented that advertisements will appear in special editions of a publication when in fact there was no special edition of the publication.

3. In a substantial number of instances, respondents have placed advertisements on dates which are contrary to those selected by the advertisers and have not advised the advertisers of the change or the reason therefor.

4. In a substantial number of instances, respondents' agents engaged in the solicitation of advertisements have represented themselves as employees of the publication for which the advertisement is being solicited.

PAR. 11. In the conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein respondents have been in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of advertising space in newspapers, magazines and other publications.

PAR. 12. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity or tendency to mislead prospective advertisers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of advertising space by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 13. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent The A & R Agency is a partnership organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 350 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

Respondent Anthony Abraham is an individual and is the only active partner in the partnership respondent. His address is 727 S. Alhambra Cir., Coral Gables, Fla. Respondent Anthony Clausi is an individual and is employed as manager of the partnership respondent. His address is 40 Royal Park Terrace, Hillsdale, N.J. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said partnership, and their principal office and place of business is located at 350 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that CTC Collections, Inc., a corporation, and Loretta Fusaro and Kathleen O'Connor, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent CTC Collections, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business located at 91 Main St., West Orange, N.J.

Respondents Loretta Fusaro and Kathleen O'Connor are officers of the corporate respondent. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the practice of collecting or attempting to collect any and all kinds of alleged delinquent accounts.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents solicit and receive accounts for collection from businesses and professional people located in the State of New Jersey and in various other States of the United States, which accounts the respondents seek thereafter to collect from debtors in the State of New Jersey. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents transmit collection messages from their place of business within the State of New Jersey to debtors and third parties located in the various other States of the United States. The respondents maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been and now are, in competition in commerce with other corporations, firms and individuals in the attempted collection and collection of consumer debts on behalf of creditors.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing consumers to pay allegedly delinquent accounts, respondents have transmitted and caused to to be transmitted, and are now transmitting and causing to be transmitted form letters, demands for payment and other printed material.

Typical and illustrative of the statements and representations made in said forms and printed materials, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

1. The account shown above has been put into our hands for immediate collection and with complete authority to enforce payment and to record this item on your credit history file and to report to such credit agencies as we deem appropriate.

2. Unless payment is received by immediate return mail, we will proceed with other legal means to collect this debt.

3. We know this account can now be collected and since you have not been in touch with us, we are going to proceed with every legal means available to us. This will be costly and time-consuming for you, and can only be avoided by your immediate remittance.

4. This is a legal five-day notice before the above creditor brings court suit for the purpose of attaching your pay, property and bank accounts to satisfy this debt.

Unless satisfactory arrangements are made with us for the payment of this debt before that time, you will be served with legal summons by a constable for appearance in court.

5. Therefore: If payment is not received on or before the ——— day of —————— A.D., 19——, proceedings may be taken against you by default.

PAR. 6. By and through the use of the aforesaid statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, respondents represent and have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. Respondents have unlimited authority to collect accounts placed with respondents for collection and are authorized to disclose information regarding these accounts to credit reporting agencies.

2. The failure to pay the amount claimed as owing within the time period(s) specified will result in legal action against the debtor.

3. The failure to agree to pay the amount claimed as owing will result in attachment proceedings against the property and wages of the debtor.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents' authority to collect debts is limited and respondents do not have the authority to report on their accounts to credit reporting agencies.

2. The failure of a debtor to pay the amount claimed as owing within the time period(s) specified does not result in most instances in the institution of legal action to effect payment.

3. The failure of a debtor to pay the amount claimed as owing within the time period(s) specified does not result in most instances in the institution of attachment proceedings to effect payment.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Five and Six hereof were and are false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing consumers to pay allegedly delinquent accounts, respondents have transmitted and caused to be transmitted, and are now transmitting and causing to be transmitted form letters, demands for payment and other printed material.

PAR. 9. By and through the use of said forms and the statements and representations set forth therein and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, respondents represent and have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. Said "Final Notice" document in form and content is an official document duly issued or approved by a court of law.

2. Judgment may be entered against the debtor without further notice to the debtor.

3. The creditor has the post judgment rights stated in said forms.

PAR. 10. In truth and in fact:

1. Said "Final Notice" form is not an official document duly issued or approved by a court of law, but on the contrary is wholly private in origin.

2. Judgment may not be entered against the consumer without further notice to the consumer but on the contrary the debtor is entitled to notice and an opportunity to appear and defend himself in a court of law prior to the entry of a judgment.

3. The creditor's rights enumerated are incomplete, inaccurate and vague and are stated to intimidate the debtor rather than to inform him of the creditor's legal rights.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Eight and Nine hereof were and are false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 11. The use by respondents of the aforementioned false, misleading, deceptive and unfair statements, representations and forms has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to deceive and mislead persons into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true, and induce the recipients thereof to supply information which they otherwise would not have supplied and into the payment of accounts to respondents, by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, are unethical, oppressive, exploitative and cause substantial injury to consumers, and constituted, and now constitute unfair acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 13. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent CTC Collections, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business located at 91 Main St., West Orange, N.J.

Respondents Loretta Fusaro and Kathleen O'Connor are officers of the aforementioned corporate respondent. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of said corporation and their address is the same as that of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent CTC Collections, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers Loretta Fusaro and Kathleen O'Connor, individually and as officers of said corporation and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the collection of consumer debts, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

2. Representing in any manner, directly or by implication, that respondents possess the authority or intend to disclose information regarding debtors to a credit reporting agency.

3. Representing in any manner, directly or by implication, that legal action, including attachment or garnishment proceedings, has been initiated or is being initiated unless respondents have in fact instituted the legal action represented; or that such legal action will be initiated unless respondents are able to establish that at the time the representation was made respondents intended in good faith to institute the legal action represented.

4. Using any form to collect debts or debtor information which simulates a judicial document or is represented by any means to be a document authorized, issued, or approved by a court of law or any other official or legally constituted judicial authority; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the official nature of any document utilized in the collection of debts.

5. Representing in any manner, directly or by implication, that judgment may be entered against a debtor without the debtor having notice of the legal action and an opportunity to appear and defend himself in a court of law.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall maintain for a period of two years with respect to each delinquent debtor, records which shall consist of copies of all collection letters, dunning notices, requests for information and similar correspondence delivered to such debtor or third parties or an indication of what form items were sent; a record or tabulation of all telephone calls made to or about the debtor showing the identity of the caller, the date and time of the call, the identity of the recipient of the call, the telephone number called, the purpose and result of the call; and copies of all documents pertaining to collection efforts such as referrals to lawyers or other agencies and legal documents utilized in collection efforts.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions, collection managers and to all personnel or other parties including attorneys and collection agencies responsible for or engaged in collection of consumer debts.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment, or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation or corporations, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondents named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of their present business or employment and of their affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondents' current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which they are engaged as well as a description of their duties and responsibilities.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Beneficial Corporation and Beneficial Management Corporation, corporations, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Beneficial Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 1300 Market St. in the city of Wilmington, State of Delaware.

Respondent Beneficial Management Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business located at 200 South St., in the city of Morristown, State of New Jersey. It is a wholly-owned subsidiary of, and is managed, directed and controlled by, respondent Beneficial Corporation.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale and sale of personal income tax preparation services and the extension of consumer credit to the general public.

Respondents sell their aforesaid products and services directly and through various corporate subsidiaries and affiliates, hereinafter referred to for convenience as respondents' representatives.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, monies, contracts, business forms and other commercial paper and printed materials in connection with said income tax preparation and personal loan and consumer financing services to be sent by United States mail from respondents' place of business in the State of New Jersey to their local offices and subsidiaries and purchasers of respondents products and services located in various other States of the United States, and maintain and at all times mentioned herein have maintained a substantial course of trade in said services in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents and their representatives have disseminated, and caused the dissemination of, certain advertisements concerning the said income tax preparation services by various means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act for the purpose of inducing and which were likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of said income tax preparation services and the extension of consumer credit.

PAR. 5. For the purpose of disseminating such advertisements, respondents and their representatives have employed television and radio commercial broadcasts, newspaper and periodical insertions, direct mail literature and point of sale promotional materials.

1. Radio and Television:

PAR. 6. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning, but not expressly set out herein, respondents and their representatives have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

1. Respondents will provide taxpayers who have their returns prepared by respondents and to whom a refund is owed by the Internal Revenue Service with an "instant refund" at the time their returns are prepared.

2. Respondents will reimburse the taxpayer for any payments the taxpayer may be required to make in addition to his initial tax payment, if such additional payments result from an error made by respondents and their representatives in the preparation of the tax return.

3. Respondents' and their representatives' tax preparing personnel are specially trained and unusually competent in the preparation of tax returns and the giving of tax advice, and that they have the ability and capacity to prepare and give advice concerning complex and detailed income tax returns.

4. The percentage of respondents' tax preparation customers who receive refunds is demonstrably greater than the percentage of the tax paying public at large who receive refunds.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents' "instant tax refund" is not a refund but a personal loan and the recipient of the loan is required to pay finance charges and other costs for such loan.

2. Respondents and their representatives do not reimburse the taxpayer for all payments he is required to make in addition to his initial tax payment if such additional payments result from an error made by respondents and their representatives in the preparation of the tax return.

3. Respondents' and their representatives' tax preparing personnel are not specially trained and unusually competent in the preparation of tax returns and the giving of tax advice, and they do not have the ability and capacity to prepare and give advice concerning complex and detailed income tax returns.

4. The percentage of respondents' tax preparation customers who receive refunds is not demonstrably greater than the percentage of the taxpaying public at large who receive refunds.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Five and Six hereof were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of their business respondents and their representatives enter into a relationship with their tax preparation customers which is impliedly represented as, and is inherently, confidential and private in nature. As a result of the aforesaid relationship, respondents and their representatives are provided and receive certain information from their tax preparation customers. Respondents and their representatives retain a copy of each income tax return prepared by them and a copy of a financial profile which is filled out for each customer on the basis of information provided by the customer ostensibly for respondents' use in the preparation of the customer's tax return.

Both the aforesaid copy of the tax return and the financial profile contain private and confidential data of both a personal and financial nature for each of respondents' tax preparation customers.

During the initial interview with the customer and at various times subsequent thereto, respondents and their representatives review the information on the retained copy of the customer's tax return and financial profile, and make a determination as to whether to solicit the customer for some type of consumer financing offered by respondents. On the basis of such determination, respondents and their representatives solicit the tax preparation customer, either orally and in person or by mail or telephone, for the purpose of inducing the customer to accept an extension of consumer credit in the nature of a personal loan or otherwise.

Respondents use, and have used, the aforesaid information gathered as a result of the preparation by respondents and their representatives of their customers' income tax returns in the manner hereinabove described without the prior knowledge and consent of said customers, and respondents have failed to disclose such use and intended use to their customers.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, and the special relationship created by respondents with their customers as described in Paragraph Eight hereof, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead respondents' customers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the information they provided respondents will only be used for the purpose of preparation of their income tax returns and will remain confidential.

Therefore, the respondents' failure to disclose the use of the aforesaid information for purposes other than the preparation of their customers' tax returns is false, misleading and deceptive.

Furthermore, respondents' use of the aforesaid information for purposes other than the preparation of their customers' tax returns without the prior knowledge and consent of their customers is contrary to, and in substantial disregard of, the special relationship between respondents and their customers as described in Paragraph Eight, hereof, and is, and was, unfair.

PAR. 10. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents and their representatives have been in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of income tax preparation services of the same general kind and nature.

PAR. 11. The use by respondents and their representatives of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements and representations, and unfair acts and practices, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and into the purchase of respondents' and their representatives' income tax preparation services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents and their representatives as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' and their representatives' competitors and constituted and now constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INITIAL DECISION BY MONTGOMERY K. HYUN, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

On Apr. 10, 1973, the Federal Trade Commission issued a complaint charging Beneficial Corporation and Beneficial Management Corporation with a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45) by engaging in certain acts and practices in connection with their income tax preparation business. Paragraphs Four through Seven of the complaint allege that certain advertising claims made by respondents in connection with their income tax preparation business are false, misleading and deceptive. Paragraphs Eight and Nine of the complaint allege that respondents have used income tax information obtained from their tax preparation customers to solicit the latter for consumer loans and that these practices are deceptive and unfair to the consumer. By answer duly filed, respondents denied that any of their challenged acts or practices violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Prehearing procedures commenced in May 1973. In January 1974, the case was reassigned to the present administrative law judge. Respondents' two motions to withdraw the matter from adjudication, duly certified to the Commission by the administrative law judges, were denied by the Commission in August 1973 and April 1974. In November 1973, counsel for the parties entered into a Stipulation For Partial Adjudicated Settlement, which was filed on Dec. 3, 1973. As a result, all of the advertising issues in the complaint, except Paragraph Six (1) and Paragraph Seven (1) dealing with respondents' "Instant Tax Refund" advertising claims, were settled. Evidentiary hearings with respect to the remaining issues were held in April, May and June 1974, in Washington, D.C. Following reception of further evidence upon a motion by respondents, the evidentiary record was closed on July 23, 1974, and the parties filed their respective proposed findings and orders, and briefs on Aug. 23, 1974.

Any motions not heretofore or herein ruled on specifically or indirectly by necessary effect of the conclusions of this initial decision are hereby denied.

The proposed findings, conclusions and briefs of the parties have been given careful consideration, and to the extent not adopted in this initial decision in the form proposed or in substance, they are rejected as not supported by the evidence or as immaterial.

Having considered the entire record in this proceeding and the demeanor of the witnesses, together with the proposed findings, conclusions and orders and briefs submitted by the parties, the administrative law judge makes the following findings of fact.[1]

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. Respondents and Their Business

1. Respondent Beneficial Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 1300 Market St., in the city of Wilmington, State of Delaware (Ans., par. 1).

2. Respondent Beneficial Corporation wholly owns subsidiaries engaged in the consumer loan business; many of those subsidiaries also operate a tax preparation business. In addition, Beneficial Corporation wholly owns Western Auto Supply Company (a nationwide merchandising company), Spiegel, Inc. (a mail order merchandising company), and various other companies engaged principally in the sales finance and creditor insurance business (CX 18 at p. 3). In 1972, Beneficial Corporation had a net income of approximately $82 million (CX 18 at p. 6).

3. Respondent Beneficial Management Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 200 South Street, in the city of Morristown, State of New Jersey. It is a wholly-owned subsidiary of respondent Beneficial Corporation and provides various accounting, auditing, management services, including the formulation of advertising and sales policies, for the subsidiaries of Beneficial Corporation who operate the local loan and tax preparation offices (Ans. pars. 1, 2; Higgins, Tr. 204).

4. Respondent Beneficial Corporation through its subsidiaries has for many years been engaged in the consumer loan business and more recently in the tax preparation business. Its subsidiaries, including respondent Beneficial Management Corporation, have formulated and caused the dissemination of advertisements concerning income tax preparation services throughout the United States. Respondents have maintained a substantial course of trade in the offering of consumer loans and income tax preparation services in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. At all times mentioned in the complaint, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition with individuals, firms and corporations engaged in the offering of consumer loans and income tax preparation services of the same general kind and nature as offered by respondents (Ans., pars. 1-5; CX 18, 33, 137; Snyder, Tr. 8).

II. Liability of Respondents

5. Beneficial Corporation is a conglomerate primarily composed of the Beneficial Finance System (a general term used to refer to the Beneficial Corporation subsidiaries which engage in the loan and finance business), Spiegel, Inc., and Western Auto Supply Company (CX at p. 3; Higgins, Tr. 178; finding 2).

6. On Dec. 31, 1972, there were approximately 1800 subsidiaries in the Beneficial Finance System, 1505 of these in the United States. Each of these U.S. local loan offices are owned and operated by a separate subsidiary of Beneficial Corporation [hereinafter local loan subsidiaries]. Approximately 1300 of these offices offer tax preparation services. With the exception of a few shares of a few subsidiaries, Beneficial wholly owns all of the stock of the local loan subsidiaries in the United States (CX 18 at pp. 8-9; Higgins, Tr. 179, 152). Beneficial Management Corporation, also a wholly-owned subsidiary of Beneficial Corporation, furnishes services at cost to the local loan subsidiaries (Ans., par. 2; Higgins, Tr. 204-05).

7. Beneficial Management Corporation of America is a wholly owned subsidiary of Beneficial Corporation. It employs regional and field supervisors throughout the country and is responsible for implementing the procedures which are established by Beneficial Management Corporation (Higgins, Tr. 205-06).

8. Beneficial Management Corporation formulated and approved all the advertising challenged in the complaint and in conjunction with the local loan subsidiaries caused its dissemination to members of the general public (Ans., par. 2; Snyder, Tr. 6-22; findings 36-38, infra).

9. Beneficial Management Corporation prepared and disseminated to the local loan subsidiaries various memoranda, directives, and other documents containing instructions on the use of tax information at issue in this case (CX 19-34, 35, 38, 41; Ans. to Requests for Admissions 1, 3, 4; Snyder, Tr. 24-25, 27).

10. Beneficial Corporation's local loan subsidiaries disseminated various point of sale and direct mail advertising pieces which were prepared by Beneficial Management Corporation. The local loan subsidiaries pay for the cost of this advertising (finding 38, infra; CX 99-111, 124, 125, 162, 163, 164, 165; Snyder, Tr. 19).

11. Telephone directory advertising is often placed at the request of the local loan subsidiary and is generally paid for by that subsidiary (Snyder, Tr. 18; findings 36-41, infra).

12. The acts and practices relating to use of tax information which are alleged to be unfair and deceptive in Paragraphs Eight and Nine of the complaint were actually committed by employees of the local loan subsidiaries (CX 25-27, 29, 34, 35, 38(a)) (findings 59-64, infra).

13. Respondent Beneficial Corporation's wholly-owned local loan subsidiaries committed the unfair and deceptive acts and practices alleged in the complaint (findings 9-12, supra).

14. Respondent Beneficial Corporation is the sole stockholder of the local loan subsidiaries and either its board of directors or executive committee select who are to be on the board of directors of the local loan subsidiaries (Higgins, Tr. 196-97).

15. The officers of each of the 1143 local loan subsidiaries are identical, except for the president who is, in each region, the regional vice president of Beneficial Management Corporation. This pattern existed throughout the period 1969 through 1974 (CX 145(a); Donohue, Tr. 225-27).

16. All of the officers and directors of the non-New York local loan subsidiaries are employees of either Beneficial Management Corporation or Beneficial Management Corporation of America, both wholly-owned subsidiaries of Beneficial Corporation (Higgins, Tr. 198-201; Findings 3, 6, 7, supra).

17. Beneficial Management Corporation of America employs between 75 and 100 persons. Its principal offices are located in the same building as are those of respondent Beneficial Corporation, in Wilmington, Del. It employs various field supervisors and auditors, and regional personnel and promotional supervisors throughout the country. Its only function is to provide supervision over, and service to, the local loan subsidiaries. It receives all of the funds necessary for its operations from Beneficial Corporation, and generally does not make a profit (Higgins, Tr. 205-20; Donohue, Tr. 245).

18. Mr. Carroll Donohue, who serves as director and vice president and secretary of all the local loan subsidiaries, is not paid a salary by the local loan subsidiaries for performing these services, but is paid by Beneficial Corporation, though he is neither an officer nor director thereof (Donohue, Tr. 220-21, 245).

19. All of the local loan subsidiaries rely solely on Beneficial Corporation for the money that they use in the operations. Funds are advanced to the local loan subsidiaries initially as capital contributions, or as loans. When a local loan subsidiary needs additional loans, it contacts the treasurer's department of Beneficial Corporation to arrange for the needed financing. The decision whether to advance funds in the form of additional capital contribution or loans is made by the treasurer and comptroller of Beneficial Corporation (Higgins, Tr. 192-93; CX 18 at p. 9; CX 150(Z) (34-50)).

20. The accounting for the local loan subsidiaries in the Beneficial Finance System is handled largely by computer. Beneficial Data Processing Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Beneficial Corporation, provides the computer service to handle the basic data relating to the loan and finance business. It operates a terminal and computer system in Morristown, N.J., which has a terminal in every local loan office. It obtains all the funds needed for its operation from Beneficial Corporation (Higgins, Tr. 207-08).

21. Beneficial Corporation in effect provides all the financing needed by the local loan subsidiaries for their operations and maintains a close watch over the financial operations of those subsidiaries (findings 19-20, supra).

22. Beneficial Corporation operates various plans for the benefit of the employees of the local loan subsidiaries (Higgins, Tr. 208-11; CX 150(n), (Z)(57), (Z) (67), (Z)(2), (Z)(24), 150(m), 150(c); (Z)(13)).

23. Respondent Beneficial Corporation owns and effectively controls the local loan subsidiary corporations (Findings 10-21).

24. Respondents obviously endeavor to have the local loan subsidiaries identified in the public mind as part of the "Beneficial Finance System." All of the local loan subsidiaries are called "Beneficial Finance Company of ——————" (the name of the town in which they are located) (CX 18 at p. 3; finding 5, supra; Higgins, Tr. 178-79). The name "Beneficial Finance" is displayed on the outside of most of the local loan offices. All of the advertising for respondents' tax service uses the terms "Beneficial" or "Beneficial Finance" (findings 33-47, infra), and stresses the fact that a large nationwide organization is the entity offering the income tax preparation service. The tax service is referred to as the "Beneficial Income Tax Service." For example, CX 165(b) states: "Beneficial Income Tax Service — A Service of Beneficial Finance System — over 1700 loan and finance offices coast to coast."

25. There is evidence in the record that consumers are of the belief that they are dealing with a large nationwide company when they patronize a Beneficial local loan subsidiary and that such belief is one of the reasons they choose to have their taxes prepared at Beneficial (Deveny, Tr. 375; McIntire, Tr. 426).

26. The combined effect of respondents' advertising and the names of the local loan subsidiaries is to create the reasonable impression that the local subsidiaries are local representatives of some nationwide controlling "Beneficial" entity. That entity is in fact Beneficial Corporation (findings 24-25).

27. Beneficial Management Corporation functions as a service organization for the local loan subsidiaries of the Beneficial Finance System. Beneficial Management Corporation does not directly engage in loan or income tax preparation business. Among the services it provides are supervision, audit, accounting, advertising, and legal services. It provides these services to the local loan subsidiaries at cost and does not make a profit. All of the funds for its operation come from Beneficial Corporation, through capitalization and advances of money as needed. Beneficial Management Corporation has never utilized outside sources of capital (Snyder, Tr. 6; Higgins, Tr. 204-05).

28. Some of respondents' "Instant Tax Refund" advertisements have been copyrighted. These copyrights are held by Beneficial Corporation (CX 113-20).

29. On Apr. 26, 1972, there were 17 members of the board of directors of Beneficial Corporation. Of these 17 members, six worked for Beneficial Corporation or its subsidiaries: Messrs. Benadom, Bowes, Burd, Fultz, Higgins and Tucker. The remaining directors were outside directors (Higgins, Tr. 189-90).

30. Beneficial Corporation exercises control over Beneficial Management Corporation primarily through three men who hold key positions in both companies: Edgar T. Higgins, Cecil M. Benadom and Robert A. Tucker (CX 150).

31. The significance of the overlap demonstrated in finding 30, supra, lies in the fact that during most of the time period relevant to this case, these individuals constituted a majority of the executive and finance committees of Beneficial Corporation and were the entire executive committee of Beneficial Management Corporation. Much of the formal decision-making responsibility of both corporations is exercised by these committees as opposed to the entire boards. Therefore, the three top executive officers of Beneficial Corporation are in a position to control effectively the activities of Beneficial Management Corporation (CX 150(f), (s), (Z)(16), (51), (63), (68), (18-34), (68-87); Higgins, Tr. 190-92; CX 178; finding 14, supra).

32. The executive committee of the board of directors of Beneficial Management Corporation approved the decision to enter into the tax preparation business and were aware of the advertisement used with regard to Beneficial Income Tax Service (Snyder, Tr. 7, 10).

III. The Unfair and Deceptive Acts and Practices

A. Stipulation for Partial Adjudicated Settlement

33. On Nov. 30, 1973, complaint counsel and counsel for respondents entered into a Stipulation for Partial Adjudicated Settlement which was filed on Dec. 3, 1973. The effect of this stipulation was to settle all of the advertising issues in the complaint except Paragraph Six (1) and Paragraph Seven (1) which deal with respondents' "Instant Tax Refund" advertising claims. Counsel stipulated that the cease and desist order provisions set forth in Paragraph Two of the Stipulation for Partial Adjudicated Settlement were appropriate relief in the public interest as to the acts and practices which were the subject of the stipulation (see order, infra). Counsel also stipulated, inter alia, to the following facts concerning these advertising representations:

(A) Subsidiaries of respondent Beneficial Corporation disseminated the following advertisements:

(3) BENEFICIAL INCOME TAX SERVICE * * * for as little as $5

(B) By and through the use of the above-quoted statement and representations, and others of similar import and meaning, respondents and their representatives have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

(1) Respondents will reimburse the taxpayer for any payments the taxpayer may be required to make in addition to his initial tax payment, if such additional payments result from an error made by respondents and their representatives in the preparation of the tax return.

(2) Respondents' and their representatives' tax preparing personnel are specially trained and unusually competent in the preparation of tax returns and the giving of tax advice, and that they have the ability and capacity to prepare and give advice concerning complex and detailed income tax returns.

(3) The percentage of respondents' tax preparation customers who receive refunds is demonstrably greater than the percentage of the taxpaying public at large who receive refunds.

(C) In truth and in fact:

(1) Respondents and their representatives do not reimburse the taxpayer for all payments he is required to make in addition to his initial tax payment if such additional payments result from an error made by respondents and their representatives in the preparation of the tax return.

(2) Respondents' and their representatives' tax preparing personnel are not specially trained and unusually competent in the preparation of tax returns and the giving of tax advice, and they do not have the ability and capacity to prepare and give advice concerning complex and detailed income tax returns.

(3) The percentage of respondents' tax preparation customers who receive refunds is not demonstrably greater than the percentage of the taxpaying public at large who receive refunds.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth above in finding 34 (A) and (B), were and are, false, misleading and deceptive in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (Stipulation For Partial Adjudicated Settlement).

B. The "Instant Tax Refund" Advertising

34. From 1969 through 1973, Beneficial Management Corporation either formulated or approved all of the advertising material utilized by respondents' income tax preparation business. The advertisements were disseminated by subsidiaries of Beneficial Corporation. All of respondents' advertising introduced into evidence in this case was in fact disseminated (Ans., pars. 2, 4; Snyder, Tr. 8-12; CX 124). There are in evidence advertising schedules showing respondents' radio and television commercials that were run for the income tax seasons 1970 to 1973, and the areas where said commercials were run (CX 84-88; Ross, Tr. 79-80).

35. Films with audio, for two of the 1973 television commercials, were shown during the hearings and were introduced into evidence (RX 20A, B). Scripts of these two commercials, accurately reflecting the audio portion of each, were also received into evidence (RX 20D; CX 84J). Tape recordings and their transcripts of two of the 1973 radio commercials were played during the hearings and were introduced into evidence (RX 20C, E, F).

36. Telephone directory advertising of respondents' income tax preparation service was initiated in the second half of 1970, and began appearing in directories published in late 1970 or during 1971. A schedule showing the copy of the telephone directory advertising utilized, and where and when placed, prepared by respondents' advertising agency, was received into evidence (RX 89A-T; Ross, Tr. 79-80).

37. The format for newspaper advertisements used during the 1971 tax season in approximately six states was received into evidence (CX 56; Snyder, Tr. 20-21).

38. Beneficial Management Corporation prepares and causes to be printed various point of sale and direct mail advertising pieces, which are then shipped to the local loan offices for dissemination (Snyder, Tr.

19). Examples of these were introduced into evidence (CX 52-55, 57, 59, 76, 95, 100(B-C), 102(B-C), 103(B-H), 104(B-C), 105(A-B), 106(A-B), 107(A-B), 108(A-B), 90-93, 97, 98, 110(A-G).

39. In 1973, approximately one-half to three-quarters of the Beneficial loan offices placed two foot by two and one-half foot advertising poster in their windows and a similar size poster in their lobbies (CX 164A-B), copies of both of which were introduced into evidence (Snyder, Tr. 22-23).

40. All of the advertisements utilized by respondents from 1969 through 1973 prominently featured the "Instant Tax Refund" theme. In almost all of the advertisements, this is the dominant message conveyed, the most effective representation made (See advertisements set forth in findings 41-44, 55-59, infra).

41. Prior to February 1970 and prior to 1972, in the case of telephone directory advertisements, respondents' "Instant Tax Refund" advertising provided no explanation of what the "Instant Tax Refund" actually was. (CX 89(e)) is representative of such telephone directory advertisements placed from 1970 until the summer of 1972 (CX 89A-C):

> BENEFICIAL FINANCE SYSTEM
> Fully computerized Beneficial Income Tax Service gives you maximum deductions, complete accuracy. Exclusive: Instant "Tax Refund" loans. Phone or come in "WHERE TO CALL"

The "Instant Tax Refund" portion of the radio commercial set forth below was run throughout most of the country in 1969 and early 1970 (CX 85B):

> * * * Do you have a refund coming to you or your income taxes this year? Well, there's no need to wait weeks for your refund check. Get the money right now — even before you mail your return — with a cash advance from Beneficial. We call it the Instant Tax Refund, a special service of Beneficial Finance. Instant Tax Refund. At Beneficial, you're good for more * * * (CX 85F)

42. In the summer of 1972, certain minor changes were made in the copy used in respondents' telephone directory advertisements. The relevant change was the insertion of the word "Plan" between "Instant Tax Refund" and "loans." CX 89P below, is representative of the telephone directory advertisements used in most states from July 1972 until the present (CX 89B):

> BENEFICIAL FINANCE COMPANIES
> BENEFICIAL INCOME TAX SERVICE Fully computerized to give you maximum deductions, complete accuracy. Special: As about "Instant Tax Refund" Plan loans, offices in this area * * * find the office near you in the Yellow Pages under "Loans." Call or come in today.

43. The radio and television advertisements using the "Instant Tax Refund" theme underwent certain modifications from 1969 until the present. In approximately February 1970, the "Instant Tax Refund" representation was slightly changed to include the mention of the word "loan." The portions of the radio and television commercials set forth below are from the transcripts of commercials using the "Instant Tax Refund" theme from February 1970 until the end of the 1970 tax season. CX 85(c) was run throughout the country (CX 85(a)). CX 84(b)-(c) was the only television commercial used during this time period. CX 84(a):

Radio

The instant you sign your return and qualify for an on-the-spot loan, Beneficial advances you the full amount of your refund. 44. In late 1970, before the 1971 tax season, the "Instant Tax Refund" representation, in radio and television advertising, was again slightly modified. In television commercials, the phrase "qualify for a loan" was added, and in radio commercials, the words "Advances you the full amount of your refund" were changed to "You get your refund — in cash — instantly." The television commercial transcript set forth below (CX 84(d)) was run throughout the country during the 1971 tax season, until March 1971 (CX 84(e)). The radio commercial transcript set forth below (CX 86(c)) is representative of the "Instant Tax Refund" theme in radio commercials run during this time period.

45. The final modification in the radio and television versions of the "Instant Tax Refund" advertising was made in March 1971. The word "Plan" was added after the phrase "Instant Tax Refund", and the phrase "lend you the equivalent of your refund in cash" was added.

Although the commercials run subsequent to March 1971 vary, the "Instant Tax Refund" representation remains essentially the same in each (Higgins, Tr. 507-08). The portions of the radio and television transcripts set forth below are representative of the "Instant Tax Refund" theme in commercials run subsequent to March 1971.

Radio

* * * And listen to Beneficial's "Instant Tax Refund" Plan: if you have a refund coming, you don't have to wait weeks for a Government check. The instant you qualify for a loan, Beneficial will lend you the equivalent of your refund, in cash, instantly. It's the "Instant Tax Refund" Plan * * * at Beneficial Finance * * * (CX 87(b).)

Television

* * * And the Beneficial "Instant Tax Refund" Plan. If you have a refund coming, Beneficial will lend you the equivalent of your refund in cash the instant you qualify for a loan * * * (CX 84(f).)

46. Respondents' printed advertisements featuring the "Instant Tax Refund" theme also underwent minor modifications from 1969 until 1973. Beginning in 1970, the print advertising was modified by placing an asterisk after the "Instant Tax Refund" reference and a corresponding asterisk below where respondents purportedly explained the "Instant Tax Refund." CX 56, 57(a) and 60(b) are representative of the "Instant Tax Refund" reference with asterisk modification in print advertisements used from 1970 until March 1971:

New Income Tax Service Offers

INSTANT "TAX REFUND"*

*If you have a refund coming, you don't have to wait weeks for a Government check. The instant you sign your return and qualify for an on-the-spot loan, you get your refund — in cash — instantly. Only at Beneficial * * * (CX 56).

Instant "Tax Refund"*

*If you have a refund coming, you don't have to wait weeks for a Government check. The instant you sign your return and qualify for an on-the-spot loan, you get your refund — in cash — instantly. (CX 57(a).)

Introducing * * *

Instant "Tax Refund"*

*If you have a refund coming, you don't have to wait weeks for a Government check. The instant you sign your return and qualify for a loan, Beneficial advances you the full amount of your refund. We call it the Instant "Tax Refund." (CX 60(b).)

47. The final modification of the printed advertising occurred in mid-March 1971. The words "loan" or "plan" were added to the "Instant Tax Refund" reference, and the phrase "lend you the equivalent of your refund" was introduced (Higgins, Tr. 507-08). CX 93(a), set forth below, is representative of the use of the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan in printed advertising from mid-March 1971 to the present:

> "Instant Tax Refund" Plan
> If you have an income tax refund coming, you don't have to wait weeks for a Government check. The instant you qualify for a loan, Beneficial will lend you the equivalent of your refund in cash, instantly. (CX 93(a).)

48. Respondents' "Instant Tax Refund" is an ordinary loan, not distinguishable in any way from any other loan specially or generally advertised or processed in the office of any consumer finance subsidiary of Beneficial Corporation, in terms of months to repay, amounts of loan available, rates of charge, or otherwise (CX 123; Snyder, Tr. 29).

49. Respondents' early advertisements, which contained no explanation whatever as to the nature of the "Instant Tax Refund" offer, had, on their face, the capacity and tendency to mislead the consumer into believing that if he let Beneficial prepare his income tax return and if the return should indicate a refund is due him, then Beneficial would, as a special service, give him a cash advance in the amount of his refund. There was nothing in the advertisements to alert the customer that what was being offered was a normal consumer loan with finance charges (finding 14, supra). Respondents' executives admitted that the advertising was unclear; survey reports from their advertising agency showed customers were confused (CX 159(4-5); Ross, Tr. 84-85; CX 155(a); Ross, Tr. 87), and all changes made in the "Instant Tax Refund" advertising was made in an attempt to clarify what the "Instant Tax Refund" was (Snyder, Tr. 53-55, 71; Higgins, Tr. 506-07).

50. Respondents' subsequent attempts at explanatory language in their radio, television, and print advertising do not succeed in exposing the true nature of the "Instant Tax Refund" offer (See, e.g., advertisements set out in findings 42, 45, 47, supra). Read in the context of the whole the "explanatory" language does not adequately explain that what is being offered is a regular consumer loan with finance charges. When considered in its entirety, the message is confusing and misleading. The fact is that the modified advertisements contain two different and conflicting claims. The best that can be said is that the advertisements are susceptible of two meanings: one, that Beneficial offers "Instant Tax Refund," the other, that Beneficial offers a consumer loan to its customer — with conditions that are not revealed — if they qualify for such a loan. The former is clearly deceptive; therefore the advertisement as a whole is misleading. Moreover, the manner in which the attempted explanation is presented adds to the confusion and deception inherent in such advertising. In print, the "explanation" is generally far less prominently featured than is the "Instant Tax Refund" reference. (See, e.g., exhibits listed at finding 47, supra). In the radio and television advertising, the dominant theme is the "Instant Tax Refund," not the "explanatory" language (CX 84-88).

51. There is, furthermore, substantial evidence in the record in the form of credible consumer testimony to the effect that members of the public were in fact confused, misled and deceived by respondents' "Instant Tax Refund" advertising, even in its most modified form (CX 158(c); Martin, Tr. 661-63, 691; RX 20(d); Flot, Tr. 713-17, 727, 729-30, 735-38, 745-46, 764-70; CX 87(c); Moyers, Tr. 771-76, 778-79, 780; CX 80(A-B); Snyder, Tr. 808-09; CX 84(k)).

52. The administrative law judge finds therefore that even as finally modified, respondents' "Instant Tax Refund" advertising has the tendency and capacity to deceive the public (findings 50-51, supra).

IV. Misuse of Tax Information

C. Respondents' Conduct Prior to Passage of Section 316 of the Revenue Act of 1971

53. Prior to actually doing so, respondents discussed internally for a number of years the possibility of conducting an income tax preparation business in their local loan offices. Discussions on the subject also took place between respondent Beneficial Management Corporation and its advertising agency Al Paul Lefton Co., Inc., with the idea that a tax preparation business in the local loan offices could generate additional loan business, through the sale of loans to tax customers (Snyder, Tr. 6-8; Ross, Tr. 83-84).

54. Respondents entered the tax preparation business in 1969, the purpose being to use the tax preparation business as a "feeder" to the loan business. Tax advertising was to enhance and develop the loan business, and great emphasis was placed on converting each tax customer into a loan customer (Higgins, Tr. 503, 508-09; Ross, Tr. 114; CX 20, 22, 24-27, 34, 38(a)). The loan and tax preparation businesses were and are completely interrelated (Higgins, Tr. 513-15).

55. Respondents' tax preparation business was in fact highly effective in producing new loan business for the local offices (CX 154(19), (22-30); CX 156(a); CX 157(i); CX 127(c); CX 142(a)-(b); CX 143(b); Higgins, Tr. 508-09).

56. Respondents made extensive use of temporary employees to work in their local offices during the tax preparation season. These employees were used primarily to fill out tax interview sheets for tax preparation customers; they were not required to be experienced in tax matters, nor was much training required to learn to fill out interview sheets (CX 31, 32; Snyder, Tr. 34-35). Both temporary tax employees (if experienced) and other office personnel would solicit consumers for loans (Snyder, Tr. 34; Taylor, Tr. 161; CX 27, 32, 34).

57. Prior to December 1971, Beneficial Management Corporation prepared and disseminated certain instructions to the local loan subsidiaries of Beneficial Corporation that were engaged in income tax preparation on procedures to be followed in operating the tax business (CX 19-34, 35, 38, 41; Answer to Requests for Admissions, No. 1, 3, 4; Snyder, Tr. 24-25, 27).

58. Prior to December 1971, the general procedure followed by the local offices in their tax preparation business was as follows:

Employees in the local offices filled out tax interview sheets (CX 10, 11) and data sheets (CX 9) when necessary, for each tax customer. This entailed the customer's disclosure of a wide variety of personal and financial information (CX 10, 11, 34(b)). When completed, the sheets contained all the information necessary to complete a customer's federal tax return (CX 24, 38(a); Snyder, Tr. 31-32). The interview sheets and data sheets were sent to Programmed Proprietary Systems, Inc., a computer service which returned to the local office the completed tax return (CX 30; Snyder, Tr. 32). The customer returned to the office to pick up his completed tax return (CX 30). Copies of the interview sheets, data sheets, and completed Form 1040's were kept in the permanent files of the local office (CX 23, 29, 30).

59. The information furnished for tax preparation purposes gave respondent a valuable sales tool, as respondents realized. As CX 34(b) states:

> When you've completed the Tax Interview Form you'll have in front of you nearly all the information you need for making a loan. Take advantage of it. What more do you need?

The local office did make every attempt to take advantage of the opportunities that such information provided to sell the customer a loan (CX 20, 22, 24, 27, 34(d), 38(a), 41).

60. Respondents did not confine themselves to soliciting tax preparation customers for "Instant Tax Refund" loans, but attempted to sell loans for a variety of purposes (CX 25-26; Snyder, Tr. 28-29). They used the information appearing on tax interview sheets to determine the particular type of loan to offer the customers (CX 25-27, 34, 35, 38(a)). For example, CX 26 states:

> Right on the Tax Interview Form it shows you what banks or loan companies the customer owes. It is an easy matter to go on from there and list other debts and show how all the bills can be consolidated, the bank loan can be paid off, the loan company can be paid off, the balance on the car can be cleared - all with a Bill Consolidation Loan (CX 26).

CX 25 states:

> When you get through taking the tax interview form you can determine — within reasonable limits — about how much the taxpayer will have to pay in taxes. Here's your chance, of course, to sell a loan to pay the Government the taxes the customer owes (Plus Bill Consolidation (CX 25)).

61. Failure to make a sale in the course of the first interview would not end the office's attempts to use the customer's tax information to sell him a loan (findings 62-64).

62. Employees in the local offices used the information available on the tax interview forms to run credit checks on customers to whom they did not sell loans on the first interview. These customers were then approached again, with a "firm offer of a loan amount" made to them when they returned to the local office to pick up their completed tax returns (CX 27, 34(d)).

63. Employees in the local offices used the information available on the tax interview forms to determine credit worthiness of tax customers in order to decide whether to offer them a Beneficial Credit Card. The Beneficial Credit Card is an identification card issued to customers so that they can identify themselves and be able to borrow money at local offices away from their home (CX 27, 35; Snyder, Tr. 37).

64. Employees in the local offices used the information on tax interview forms to solicit tax customers for loans or "Credit Cards" by telephone or otherwise long after these customers had concluded their tax business with the local office (CX 29, 35).

D. Respondents' Conduct Subsequent to Passage of Section 316 of the Revenue Act of 1971

65. Section 316 of the Revenue Act of 1971 was passed Dec. 10, 1971, and became effective Jan. 1, 1972. Beginning in December 1971, respondents disseminated instructions to employees in the field on new procedures to be followed in soliciting tax customers for loans (CX 126(a)-(f), 127, 129, 131, 132, 134, 138, 139, 142, 143). These included the use of a "BOR-56 Authorization" form by the local offices (CX 126(f)). This was supposedly a consent form, allowing the respondents to solicit the tax preparation customer for other business of the respondents. The offices were instructed to have each tax customer sign the BOR-56 before any tax work was done (CX 126(b)). Completed tax forms were placed in a special "Customer Tax Folder" (CX 126(d)). If the customer had signed a BOR-56, respondents felt free to solicit him for a loan. "Loan Information Sheets" were then filled out, containing such data as bills owed by the customer, bank loans outstanding, loan company loans outstanding, car loans. All such information was kept in a "Customer Loan Folder," the only source to which the local office could refer in processing a loan (CX 139(i), (k); CX 142(b), (c); CX 126(d)).

66. Respondents continued to emphasize the importance of selling loans to every tax customer, and to use the tax preparation relationship as a lead-in to the sale of loans (CX 127(j), (k); 129(d), (f); 130(c); 138(b), (h), (i); 139(f), (k), (m), (u), (z); 140(h); 142, 143).

67. The BOR-56 form fails to disclose clearly to the tax preparation customer respondents' intended use of tax information to solicit him for loans. It is inadequate on its face as a consent form (CX 126(f)). Substantial evidence in the record supports the finding that consumers do not understand the nature of the BOR-56 (Deveny, Tr. 372; Dillard, Tr. 392-95; Harp, Tr. 409-11, 414-16; Bolt, Tr. 485-87; Flot, Tr. 717, 738-39).

E. Deception

68. Respondents failed to disclose to tax preparation customers the fact that information given for the purpose of tax preparation would not be kept confidential and used only for that purpose (finding 67).

69. There is substantial evidence in the record that respondents' tax preparation customers consider the information they provide for tax preparation to be private, personal, and confidential, and that they did or would feel taken advantage of by being solicited for loans based on that information without their consent (Dillard, Tr. 397-98; Snyder, Tr. 809-11, 835-36; Flot, Tr. 724-27; Moyers, Tr. 776-78, 793, 797-98, 804-06; McIntire, Tr. 428-29; Heath, Tr. 494-95).

70. Respondents' practices in using tax information to solicit for loans were deceptive (findings 68-69, supra).

F. Respondents' Acts and Practices Were Unfair

71. Existing, established public policy, manifested in federal and state statutes as well as in the ethical codes of professional associations, regards individual income tax information as confidential (26 U.S.C. §7216, Tr. 351; 26 U.S.C. §7213, Tr. 356; 26 U.S.C. §6103, Tr. 356; Code of Virginia §58-27.4, Tr. 356; California Business and Professions Code §17530.5, Tr. 356; CX 81, Tornwall, Tr. 250-55; CX 79, Hechinger, Tr. 130-35, 148; Canon 4, Code of Professional Responsibility of the American Bar Association, Ethical Consideration 4-5, Disciplinary Rule 4-101, Tr. 356).

72. Respondents' failure to respect the confidentiality of individual income tax information by allowing such information to be used to solicit tax customers for loans without their consent offends public policy and constitutes an unfair practice under FTC v. Sperry and Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233 (1972); (findings 65-71, supra).

DISCUSSION

Stipulation for Partial Adjudicated Settlement and Remaining Issues

As a result of the Stipulation for Partial Adjudicated Settlement, filed of record by the parties on Dec. 3, 1973, it was agreed that certain advertising issues set forth in Paragraphs Six (2) through (4) and Seven

(2) through (4) of the complaint be settled without further litigation and an agreed-to order contained in the Stipulation may be entered covering the foregoing issues. Thus, the remaining issues to be litigated were: (1) whether respondents' advertising containing the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan is false, misleading and deceptive in violation of Section 5 (Paragraphs Six (1) and Seven (1) of the complaint); (2) whether the unauthorized use of income tax information by respondents for consumer loan purposes is a deceptive act or practice in violation of Section 5 (Paragraphs Eight and Nine of the complaint); and (3) whether such unauthorized use of income tax information by respondents is also unfair to the consumer in violation of Section 5 (Paragraphs Eight and Nine of the complaint).

The "Instant Tax Refund" Advertising

With respect to the "Instant Tax Refund" advertising which started in 1969 and continues to date, it is convenient to consider separately (1) the pre-February 1970 "Instant Tax Refund" advertisements, which did not employ any explanatory language, and (2) the post-February 1970 "Instant Tax Refund" advertisements, which contain some explanatory language designed to qualify the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan.

A. Pre-February 1970 "Instant Tax Refund" Advertisements

We need not dwell long on the first group of advertisements for they patently and indisputably have the capacity and tendency to mislead the consumer into believing that if he lets Beneficial prepare his income tax return and if the return indicates any refund due him, then Beneficial will, as a special service, give him a cash advance, namely, an "Instant Tax Refund." CX 85F, a radio commercial which was run throughout most of the country in 1969 and early 1970, is a striking example of this group (Also finding 41).

It is well settled that the Commission has the authority to draw its own inferences from challenged advertisements. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 391-92 (1965). The Commission and the courts have long held that an advertisement is deceptive if it has the tendency or capacity to deceive the public. Charles of the Ritz Dist. Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 143 F.2d 676 (2d Cir. 1944). And, in making this determination, the Commission looks to the impression the advertisement makes on the gullible and credulous rather than on the trained and experienced. Id. Also see Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 302 U.S. 112, 116 (1937); Aronberg v. Federal Trade Commission, 132 F.2d 165, 167 (7th Cir. 1942); Merck [Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 392 F.2d 921, 926 (6th Cir. 1968); Exposition Press, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 295 F.2d 869, 872 (2d Cir. 1961), cert. denied, 370

U.S. 917 (1962). Indeed, the central purpose of Section 5 is "* * * to abolish the rule of caveat emptor which traditionally defined rights and responsibilities in the world of commerce." Federal Trade Commission v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 317 F.2d 669, 674 (2d Cir. 1963).[2]

B. Post-February 1970 "Instant Tax Refund" Advertisements

Beginning in February 1970, Beneficial made certain changes in the "Instant Tax Refund" advertisements designed to explain that what was being offered by these advertisements was in fact a consumer loan. The initial change was the addition of an asterisk to the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan in printed advertisements. The asterisk directed the reader to an explanatory sentence which stated in substance that "if you have a refund coming, you don't have to wait weeks for a government check. The instant you sign your return and qualify for an on-the-spot loan, you get your refund-in cash-instantly." Similar explanations were contained in all other advertising references to the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan. For example, see Paragraph 2(a) of the complaint.

In late 1970, the "Instant Tax Refund" advertisements were again modified. In television commercials, the phrase "qualify for a loan" was added, and in radio commercials, the words "advances you the full amount of your refund" was changed to "you get your refund-in cash-instantly" (finding 44). Beginning in March 1971, the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan itself was expanded to include the words "loan" or "plan" (RX 13; CXs 71, 72, 83), and the expanded slogans were further accompanied by various explanatory language which stated in substance: the instant you qualify for a loan, Beneficial will lend you the equivalent of your refund in cash, instantly (findings 45, 47).

Respondents contend that the "Instant Tax Refund" advertising thus modified and accompanied by further explanatory language adequately informs the consumer that what is being offered is a consumer loan. The administrative law judge is not able to accept this contention. When viewed and considered as a whole, the message is confusing and misleading. Sebrone Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 135 F.2d 676, 679 (7th Cir. 1943); Aronberg v. Federal Trade Commission, 132 F.2d 165, 167 (7th Cir. 1942). This confusion is due to the fact that these advertisements contain two different and essentially conflicting claims. They first imply that Beneficial's tax preparation customers will get an "Instant Tax Refund." They then go on to imply that the promised "tax refund" is a "loan" and you must qualify for it. Furthermore, these advertisements are capable of misleading the public into believing that

[2] The record is also clear that respondents were made keenly aware of the confusion resulting from the use of this group of advertisements and decided to employ some form of explanatory language in conjunction with the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan beginning in February 1970 (Snyder, Tr. 53-55, 57; Ross, Tr. 115-18; Higgins, Tr. 506-07; CX 159; also see finding 49).

"loan" in this context means "a cash advance" offered as a special service to Beneficial tax preparation customers, for a nominal fee not related to interest charges, and that "qualify" in this context simply means that the tax preparation customer must have a refund due from the government (See findings 50, 51). In other words, regardless of the literal truthfulness of the advertisement, the overall implication in the mind of the viewer-audience has the capacity and tendency to mislead. P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 186 F.2d 52 (4th Cir. 1950); Bockenstette v. Federal Trade Commission, 134 F.2d 369 (10th Cir. 1943).

This is especially true because the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan is an explicit and dominant theme and no qualifying language which may follow it can entirely undo the initial impact of that theme. Cf. The J. B. Williams Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 F.2d 884 (6th Cir. 1967).

The most charitable conclusion which can be drawn from these advertisements is that they are confusing, that they are susceptible of two meanings. Namely, one that Beneficial offers an "Instant Tax Refund" and the other that Beneficial offers a consumer loan to its customers if they qualify for such a loan. The former is clearly deceptive. Section 5 condemns such advertisements. In Judge Augustus Hand's words, the Commission can "insist upon a form of advertising clear enough so that, in the words of the prophet Isaiah, 'wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.' " General Motors Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 114 F.2d 33, 36 (2d Cir. 1940). Also see Rhodes Pharmacal Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 208 F.2d 382, 387 (7th Cir. 1953), rev'd on other grounds, 348 U.S. 940 (1955); Murray Space Shoe Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 304 F.2d 270 (2d Cir. 1962); Giant Food Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 322 F.2d 977, 981 (D.C. Cir. 1963), cert. dismissed, 376 U.S. 967 (1964); United States v. 95 Barrels of Vinegar, 265 U.S. 438, 443 (1924).

Furthermore, there is substantial evidence in the record which tends to show that the modified "Instant Tax Refund" advertisements confused and misled the public and that a number of consumers recalled the dominant theme of these advertisements to be an offer of "Instant Tax Refund" (Martin, Tr. 663-65, 672, 691-93; Snyder, Tr. 826-27; Moyers, Tr. 785). This, in return, reinforces the administrative law judge's impression of Beneficial's current television and radio commercials that they prominently feature the "Instant Tax Refund Plan" and play down the explanation (RX 20B and D).[3]

Unauthorized Use of Income Tax Information for Loan Purposes

[3] It is true that some of respondents' consumer witnesses testified to a clear understanding of these advertisements to mean an offer of a consumer loan. However, they were for the most part persons who were

A. Deceptive Act

Complaint counsel contend that the use by Beneficial of confidential tax information for the purpose of soliciting consumer loans from its tax preparation customers is deceptive because the customers are not told in advance that Beneficial will make such use of the confidential tax information furnished to it. The theory appears to be that Beneficial's failure to disclose this material fact constitutes a deceptive act in violation of Section 5. In order to support this theory, complaint counsel further contend that Beneficial, by virtue of certain affirmative representations it makes, creates an expectation on the part of its tax preparation customers that the income tax information they furnish Beneficial will be kept confidential.

In the administrative law judge's view, however, confidentiality inheres in the very nature of personal income tax information regardless of whether Beneficial makes, or does not make, any affirmative representations regarding confidentiality (See further discussion, infra, pp. 31-32 [pp. 145, 146, herein]). Furthermore, the record shows the element of confidence is an important aspect of the relationship between a taxpayer and a tax preparer (findings 69, 71, Crossley Survey). Beneficial's failure to disclose the material fact that the tax information will be used for loan solicitation purposes in these circumstances clearly is a deceptive practice in violation of Section 5. All-State Industries of N.C., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 423 F.2d 423 (4th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 828.[4]

Furthermore, what is deceptive here is the use of the "Instant Tax Refund" advertising as a device to lure tax preparation customers to Beneficial's offices for the purpose of soliciting them for consumer loans. In a real sense, Beneficial's practice in this respect is akin to the so-called "bait and switch" device, which is a deceptive act in violation of Section 5. Tashof v. Federal Trade Commission, 437 F.2d 707 (D.C. Cir. 1970); Pati-Port, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 313 F.2d 103 (4th Cir. 1963). The rationale of these cases applies with equal force to this case. It is the administrative law judge's determination that Beneficial's use of the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan for the purpose of obtaining leads to loan prospects or luring tax service customers to knowledgeable of the operations of the consumer loan industry, including Beneficial, by reason of prior dealings or otherwise (Tr. 371, 384, 423, 406-07, 495, 472, 480-81, 611-12). It is well settled that testimony by some consumers that they personally would not be misled or deceived does not preclude a finding by the Commission that the challenged advertisement is deceptive. Double Eagle Lubricants, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 360 F.2d 268 (10th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 434 (1966).

Furthermore, as pointed out hereinabove, the purpose of Section 5 is to protect the gullible and credulous as well as the trained and knowledgeable, supra, p. 26 [p. 141, herein].

[4] It is well recognized that in such confidential relationships, caveat emptor has no place and equity imposes on the parties the duty to act in accordance with the highest standards of morality. Cardozo, The Nature of the Judicial Process, 109-110 (1922); Pound, The Spirit of the Common Law, 24-25 (1921). Such duty includes that of full disclosure of material facts. 2 Pomeroy. Equity Jurisprudence §902. Cf. 1 Story, Equity Jurisprudence, §206.

Beneficial's loan offices for the purpose of making loans is equally a deceptive act in violation of Section 5.

B. Unfairness

Complaint counsel further argue (1) that the use by Beneficial of confidential tax information for the purpose of soliciting consumer loans is offensive to the public policy regarding personal privacy, and (2) that Beneficial's loan solicitation of its tax customers is immoral, unethical, oppressive and unscrupulous. For these reasons, it is argued, that Beneficial's practices are unfair to the consumer within the meaning of the Section 5 under Federal Trade Commission v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., Inc., 291 U.S. 304 (1934) ("Keppel") and Federal Trade Commission v. Sperry and Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233 (1972) ("S&H"). It is the determination of the administrative law judge that the challenged practices are unfair under Keppel and S&H because (1) they offend the well-established public policy regarding the confidentiality of income tax information, and (2) they are unethical, exploitative and unscrupulous.

In their defense, respondents have advanced several arguments. First, it is argued that a business practice, in order to be unfair to consumers within the meaning of Section 5, must be a violation of some public policy codified into a statute or recognized by common law. In this connection, respondents contend that, until the enactment of Section 316 of the Revenue Act of 1971 (26 U.S.C. §7216), the principle of confidentiality of individual income tax information did not acquire such a status. Second, it is argued that, to the extent that the confidentiality principle was recognized, it did not apply to the so-called commercial tax preparers, such as Beneficial, in any event. Respondents contend that Beneficial's tax customers did not regard Beneficial's tax preparers as tax experts or professionals who would be strictly bound by the confidentiality principle. Indeed, respondents further suggest that, because the fees charged by Beneficial for its tax service are substantially smaller than those customarily charged by lawyers and accountants, Beneficial's tax customers did not expect, or should not have expected, Beneficial to be strictly bound by the confidentiality principle. In the administrative law judge's view, these arguments are without merit and should be rejected.

The fact is that Congress, by the enactment of the 1971 Revenue Act, codified the confidentiality principle, prescribing criminal sanctions. Equally importantly, long before the 1971 Revenue Act, Congress explicitly demonstrated its public policy concerns regarding the confidentiality of income tax information. For example, 26 U.S.C. §6103 provides in substance that income tax returns are open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations approved by the President. 26 U.S.C. §7213 prescribes criminal penalties for federal employees who disclose information contained in an income tax return.[5]

In the final analysis, the confidentiality principle inheres in the very nature of personal income tax information and governs the relationship between the taxpayer and another person who may be entrusted with the information by the taxpayer. The relationship thus is fiduciary in nature. Therefore, the administrative law judge is unable to accept the argument that the amount of fees paid determines whether or not the person entrusted with such tax information is to be bound by the principle of confidentiality. This is not to ignore the reality that money is a universal measure of commercial transactions. I simply conclude that the relationship existing between a taxpayer and a tax preparer entrusted with his tax information imposes upon the latter, as a matter of equitable principle, the duty of confidentiality regardless of the amount of fee paid or the professional status of the latter.[6]

More importantly, respondents' argument that a business practice, in order to be unfair to consumers within the meaning of Section 5, must be a violation of some public policy codified into a statute or recognized by common law is an attempt to restrict the Trade Commission's Section 5 power to enforcement of existing statutes. In essence, it is an attempt to turn the clock back half a century to the days of Gratz.[7] However, the attempts to restrict the Trade Commission's Section 5 power to existing or recognized methods of competition have been consistently rejected by the Court since Keppel.[8] Respondents would now, in this case involving unfairness to the consumer, rely on the same argument rejected by the Court in the unfair-method-of-competition cases.

[5] It has been stated that the purpose of the statute is to "prevent the disclosure of confidential information to those who have no legitimate interest in it." Star v. Rogalny, 22 F.R.D. 256 (1958) (E.D. Ill.) That the policy behind §6103 is directly related to that behind the federal prohibition of use and disclosure by income tax preparers can be seen from Senator Mathias' comparison of the former provision and his proposed law. 117 Cong. Rec. S. 8318, Mar. 29, 1971. A great many states have provisions similar to 26 U.S.C.A. §7213 making State income tax return information confidential. See, e.g., District of Columbia, Sec. 47-1564c, D.C. Code; Virginia, Code of Virginia §58-46; Maryland, An. Code Md. §300; Massachusetts, Sec. 58, Ch. 62, G.L.; Minnesota, Sec. 290.61; Ohio, Sec. 5747.18 R.C.; New York, Sec. 697, Tax Law, Ch. 60 C.L.; Michigan, Sec. 206.465, C.L.

[6] There is testimony in this record that the confidentiality of tax information is taken for granted even in cases where the tax preparers are laymen (Tr. 776).

[7] In that case, the Court, narrowly circumscribing the Trade Commission's discretion to define and declare an act an unfair method of competition, struck down the Commission's cease and desist order banning tying arrangements and said: "The words 'unfair method of competition' are not defined by the statute. * * * They are clearly inapplicable to practices never before regarded as opposed to good morals because characterized by deception, bad faith, fraud or oppression, or as against public policy because of their dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly." (253 U.S. at 423-427).

[8] Keppel recognized for the first time the Trade Commission's power to go beyond established common law principles to determine that lottery sales were an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5. The court said: "We do not intimate either that the statute does not authorize the prohibition of other and hitherto unknown methods of competition or, on the other hand, that the Commission may prohibit every unethical competitive practice regardless of its particular character or consequences. New or different practices must be considered as they arise in the light of the circumstances in which they are employed." (291 U.S. at 314). Also see FTC v. Motion Picture Adv. Service Co., Inc., 344 U.S. 392 (1953); Atlantic Refining Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357 (1965); FTC v. Texaco Inc., 393 U.S. 223 (1968); FTC v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316 (1966).

Contrary to respondents' argument, however, the Trade Commission's power to define and prohibit new unfair acts as they arise, and do so apart from existing statutes or established public policy, is not open to question. The clear holding of the Keppel and S&H cases is that the Commission has that power. In Keppel, the Court accepted a gambling analogy to uphold a Trade Commission ban against lottery sales of candies to children. There, the Court was essentially striking at the unfairness of a practice which exploited the vulnerabilities of children. In S&H, the Court, reaffirming the Trade Commission's power to prohibit trade practices which are unfair to consumers (405 U.S. at 239-244),[9] merely insisted that the Trade Commission articulate the basis upon which the practice was found to be unfair (405 U.S. at 248).

What then are the standards against which the challenged practice in this case may be judged? In S&H, the Court adumbrated a broad and expansive approach: "in measuring a practice against the elusive, but congressionally mandated standard of fairness, [the Commission], like a court of equity, [consider] public values beyond simply those enshrined in the letter or encompassed in the spirit of the antitrust laws." (405 U.S. at 244). Two things are clear. First, the Trade Commission may proceed on equitable principles, like a court of equity.[10] Second, the Commission may consider "public values."[11]

Applying the Court's broad guidelines to the instant case, the well-recognized principle of confidentiality of individual income tax information is clearly a valid standard in the circumstances of this case.

[9] As early as in 1923, Justice Cardozo looked to the Trade Commission to build up "a body of precedent which will fix the proprieties of commercial usage." Cardozo, The Growth of the Law, 126 (1924). In Judge Learned Hand's words, the Trade Commission's powers "are not confined to such practices as would be unlawful before it acted" and its duty is to "discover and make explicit those unexpressed standards of fair dealing which the conscience of the community may progressively develop." Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Soc., 86 F.2d 692, 696 (2d Cir. 1936), rev'd on other grounds, 302 U.S. 112 (1937).

[10] It is elementary that equitable principle is essentially based on general grounds of morals and the community's sense of decency and fair play. See Maitland, Equity, 1-11 (1909); Main, Ancient Law, 27-28, 65-66, 401 (notes by Pollock) (Beacon Paperback Ed. 1963); Pound, An Introduction of the Philosophy of Law, 57-58 (1922). More than two millenia ago, Aristotle articulated the ethical basis of equity. Nicomachean Ethics, V, 11; Rhetoric, I, 13. It is of interest to note a parallel between Aristotle's concept of equity (Rhetoric, I, 13) and the organic concept of "unfair methods of competition" and "unfair practices" embodied in Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. See Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Adv. Service, 344 U.S. 392, 394-395 (1953); S&H, supra, 405 U.S. at 244.

[11] In S&H, (405) U.S. at 244-245, n. 5), the Court accepted without comment the factors the Trade Commission considers in determining whether a practice is unfair, as stated in the Commission's 1964 Statement of Basis and Purpose of Trade Regulation Rule 408, Unfair or Deceptive Advertising and Labeling of Cigarettes in Relation to the Health Hazards of Smoking. These factors were:

(1) whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise-whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common-law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness; (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous; (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers (or competitors or other businessmen).

The standards set forth in (2) clearly show that the Trade Commission may prohibit as unfair to consumers, a practice that has not been proscribed by the common or statutory law or judicial decisions. See Note "Unfair Methods of Competition Under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act Redefined," 26 Rutgers L. Rev. 427, 433 (1973).

The confidentiality principle has long been incorporated into the codes of ethics of the legal and accounting professions. Congress long ago established the public policy regarding confidentiality of income tax information (26 U.S.C. §§6103, 7213). In 1971, it was made a statutory command to tax preparers, backed by federal criminal sanction. Furthermore, the record is clear that customers of the so-called commercial tax preparers, such as Beneficial, did expect tax preparers to be bound by the principle before 1972 (finding 69). Respondents' argument that commercial tax preparers were not expected to adhere to this principle at all, or not as strictly as lawyers and accountants until the Revenue Act of 1971, would astound their tax customers as well as the general public. In these circumstances, the use by Beneficial of confidential individual income tax information, obtained ostensibly for the purpose of income tax preparation, for the purpose of soliciting or making consumer loans to the same customer is offensive to the public policy, unethical, unscrupulous, unconscionable and clearly unfair to the consumer.[12]

It cannot be gainsaid that the so-called commercial income tax preparers, such as Beneficial, provide a service very much in demand by the consumer. They perform a legitimate and highly useful function. However, respondents do not contend that the trade realities peculiar to the commercial tax preparation business are so compelling as to require that the deep-rooted concept of confidentiality of individual income tax information yield to them or be modified in some way.[13] Nor is there any basis for such an argument in this record. The ultimate product of commercial civilization need not be abandonment of all traditional values.

That breach of confidence in fact occurred in this case was due to the peculiarities of Beneficial's own business operations, namely (1) combination of the tax preparation business and consumer loan business and (2) use of confidential tax information for the purposes of Beneficial's loan business. The record indicates that historically [12] In this connection, it is significant to note the evolving concept of unconscionability codified in Section 2-303 of the Uniform Commercial Code, which Congress has adopted for the District of Columbia (D.C. Code Ann. Art. 28 (1967)). It is generally recognized that this section reflects in part the congressional concern for consumer interests and a public policy of vindicating that interest where justice requires. A comment to that section of the Uniform Commercial Code states that "the principle is one of the prevention of oppression and unfair surprise," Uniform Commercial Code §2-302, Comment 1. Commentators have suggested that, in developing the standards of unconscionability, the courts should not only look to established common law concepts of unfairness but "pass directly on the unconscionability of the contract." Id. Also see generally Note, "Unconscionable Contracts: The Uniform Commercial Code," 45 Iowa L. Rev. 843 (1960); Leff, "Unconscionability and the Code-The Emperor's New Clause," 115 U. Pa. L. Rev. 485 (1967); Note, "Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act - Unfairness to Consumers," 1972 Wis. L. Rev. 1071, 1094-1095.

[13] Needless to say, business realities are highly relevant to Section 5 analysis. See dissenting opinion of Brandeis', J. in Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421, at 434-437 (1920); Federal Trade Commission v. Keppel Bros., supra, 291 U.S. at 314. In the broadest sense, it has long been recognized that the law cannot long resist the needs of economic life that is strong and just. Cardozo, The Growth of the Law, 118 (1924). Also see Holmes, The Common Law, 5 (Belknap Ed., 1963); Collected Legal Papers, 187 (1920); Cardozo, The Nature of Judicial Process, 61-62 (1921).

Beneficial entered the tax preparation business mainly as a means of augmenting its consumer loan business (findings 53-54). In a manner of speaking, therefore, the danger of breach of confidence with respect to tax information was inherent both in the purpose and implementation of Beneficial's business plan from its inception. In this sense, it is arguable that the mere combination of tax preparation and consumer loan business under the same roof and common management of Beneficial may raise a Section 5 question for every such combination contains a seed of very real danger that the confidentiality may in fact be breached. This issue was eliminated by complaint counsel from this case (Mar. 13, 1974 admissions, Paragraph 20) and the administrative law judge has, of course, no occasion to make a determination of this issue one way or the other. However, it is beyond question that the actual use of tax information obtained in the tax preparation business for the purposes of soliciting or making consumer loans of any kind by Beneficial, including the so-called tax refund loan,[14] is a violation of the well-organized principle of confidentiality and is clearly unfair to consumers within the meaning of Section 5.

It should be stressed that the administrative law judge does not hold the challenged practice to be unfair simply because it is unethical. Whether a practice is morally or ethically objectionable in a general way is the beginning, not the end, of a Section 5 analysis. Here, the determination that the challenged practice is unfair with the meaning of Section 5 is not simply based on the fact that it is repugnant to some broad ethical desiderata, such as the need to protect personal privacy of individuals. Rather, it is based on a particularized standard, befitting the particular fact situations of this case, namely, the unauthorized use of confidential individual income tax information, ostensively obtained for the purpose of income tax preparation, for the purpose of soliciting or making consumer loans. What is being condemned is the essentially exploitative and unscrupulous misuse of confidential information in a breach of fiduciary relationship involved in this case. As Justice Cardozo observed long ago, Section 5 requires that "the careless and the unscrupulous must rise to the standards of the scrupulous and diligent. The Commission was not organized to drag the standards down." Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U.S. 67, 79 (1933). Therefore, respondents' arguments that there is no established public policy with respect to the protection of personal privacy in general or that personal privacy is routinely disregarded in the conduct of some businesses, such as the direct mailing industry and the sale of various mailing lists, do not save respondents' challenged act from Section 5's proscription.[15]

[14] The record is replete with evidence tending to show that (1) the customers responding to Beneficial's "Instant Refund" advertisement were solicited for general consumer loans and, in some instances, for consolidation loans, both totally unrelated to the amounts of income tax refunds due them and (2) the financial information furnished by the customer in the course of the income tax preparation phase was used by Beneficial for the purpose of soliciting these unrelated loans (findings 60, 66).

Trade Commission's Section 5 Jurisdiction and Section 316 of the 1971 Revenue Act

With respect to Section 316 of the Revenue Act of 1971 (26 U.S.C. §7216), respondents further argue that that Revenue Code provision is directed precisely at conduct of the type alleged in Paragraphs Eight and Nine of the complaint, and that this legislative enactment has the effect of precluding the Trade Commission from taking any action against respondents under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. These arguments are without merit.

Firstly, the Revenue Act of 1971 does not expressly repeal any of the provisions of the F.T.C. Act. Nor does it give tax preparers an express exemption from Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. And "[i]mmunity from the antitrust laws is not lightly implied." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 348 (1963). This well-established principle applies to the Federal Trade Commission Act, which was designed to supplement and bolster the Sherman and Clayton Acts by reaching not only existing violations of them, but trade practices which conflict with their basic policies as well as those which are unfair to competitors or consumers. S&H, supra, 405 U.S. at 245-246. Cf. United States v. Western Pacific R. R. Co., 352 U.S. 59, 63-65 (1956).

Secondly, the Trade Commission's instant proceeding in no way invades the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts to enforce the criminal sanctions prescribed by the Revenue Code. Rather, this is simply another instance where Congress provided for concurrent jurisdictions with cumulative remedies. The Trade Commission's jurisdiction and power to enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act has been consistently sustained against challenges that statutes enforced by other agencies should be construed to preclude such jurisdiction. See e.g., Charles of the Ritz Distributors Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, 143 F.2d at 679. See also Irwin v. Federal Trade Commission, 143 F.2d 316, 325 (8th Cir. 1944); Waltham Watch Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 318 F.2d 28, 31-32 (7th Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 944; Brandenfels v. Day, 316 F.2d 375, 378 (D.C. Cir. 1963); cert. denied, 375 U.S. 824; American Cyanamid Co. v. Federal [15] Complaint counsel forcefully argue that there is an established public policy of protecting personal privacy and the right of an individual to control the dissemination of information of personal nature. The administrative law judge agrees that a broad principle of protecting privacy has evolved gradually during the past 40 years. In general, however, the courts and Congress have engrafted numerous exceptions based on their notion of a balancing of conflicting interests in particular situations. The instant case is clearly governed by a deep-rooted and particularized public policy regarding the confidentiality of income tax information and there is no need to invoke the broader emerging concept of privacy.

Trade Commission, 363 F.2d 757 (6th Cir. 1966), 401 F.2d 574 (6th Cir. 1968),

It is also well settled that a party may be subject to simultaneous jurisdiction by more than one agency under different statutes. Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683 (1948); United States v. RCA, 358 U.S. 334, 343-344 (1959); United States v. Borden Co., 347 U.S. 514 (1954); Safeway Stores, Inc. v. Freeman, 369 F.2d 952, 957 (D.C. Cir. 1966). Similarly, courts have consistently held that concurrent Food and Drug Administration-Trade Commission proceedings involving the same issues are proper, and that the statutory remedies of the two agencies are cumulative and not mutually exclusive. United States v. *1 Dozen * * * Boncquet Tablets*, 146 F.2d 361 (4th Cir. 1944); United States v. *Five Cases * * * Capon Springs Water*, 156 F.2d 493 (2d Cir. 1946). Furthermore, in cases where the Trade Commission has concurrent jurisdiction under different statutes, the enforcement standards of the Federal Trade Commission Act may also be different. See e.g., Brandenfels v. Day, supra; American Cyanamid Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; and the FDA cases cited hereinabove. This is such a case.

In view of the foregoing discussion, respondents' argument that their use of the so-called BOR-56 consent form fully complies with the requirements of Section 316 of the 1971 Revenue Act, a question the administrative law judge has no occasion to decide, is entirely irrelevant to this Section 5 proceeding. For our purposes, it is enough that the present BOR-56 consent form, together with the manner in which it was used by respondents, is not sufficient to cure the unfairness at issue here (findings 65-67).

The Liability of Beneficial Corporation

We need dwell on respondents' argument that Beneficial Corporation, a holding company which owns and controls the Beneficial loan and tax service subsidiaries, is not liable for the practices challenged in this proceeding. The record is abundantly clear that Beneficial Corporation, in addition to its control by ownership, in fact exercises an absolute control over the affairs of its operating subsidiaries, which it collectively calls the Beneficial Finance System, not only through a pervasive web of interlocking directorates and managements but also through its absolute power of the purse (findings 21, 23, 30, 31). Indeed, the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan, which respondent so strenuously insist on retaining for continued use, has been copyrighted by Beneficial Corporation itself (finding 28). It is well settled that those who place in the hands of others the instrumentality by which unfair or deceptive acts are accomplished may be held responsible for these practices. Federal Trade Commission v. Winsted Hosiery Co., 258 U.S. 483, 494 (1922).

THE REMEDY

It is well settled that the Trade Commission has broad discretion in fashioning an appropriate remedy once a Section 5 violation is found in order to ensure discontinuance of the condemned act. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470 (1952); Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419 (1957); Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374 (1965). The Commission's discretion in this respect is limited only by the requirement that the remedy be reasonably related to the unlawful practices found. Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U.S. 608, 613 (1946); OKC Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 455 F.2d 1159 (10th Cir. 1972).

Complaint counsel have proposed an order which, except for a few modifications, is substantially similar to the notice order which was attached to the complaint.

Respondents urge two reasons why in their view the imposition of any order would not be in the public interest: (1) discontinuance and (2) the enactment of the 1971 amendment to the Internal Revenue Code. In the administrative law judge's view, they are invalid and should be rejected.

A. Discontinuance

Respondents' argument that the misleading advertisements ceased years ago and that, therefore, no order need be entered is contrary to the administrative law judge's conclusion, elaborated hereinafter, that only the excision of the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan will provide adequate protection. Infra, pp. 42-44 [pp. 153,154 herein]. In any event, it is well settled that discontinuance of abandonment of the offending practice does not render a cease and desist order improper. The statutory scheme of the Federal Trade Commission Act clearly contemplates the issuance of an appropriate order in order to protect the public from any resumption of the unfair practices without further resort to the statutory sanctions available for future enforcement. Clinton Watch Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 291 F.2d 838 (7th Cir. 1961); Benrus Watch Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 352 F.2d 313 (8th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 939 (1966); Montgomery Ward Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 379 F.2d 666 (7th Cir. 1967); Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 392 F.2d 921 (6th Cir. 1968).

B. The Revenue Act of 1971

Respondents next contend that, because the use of individual income tax information by commercial tax preparers for any purpose other than the preparation of tax returns of their clients has been made a criminal offense by Section 316 of the Revenue Act of 1971 (26 U.S.C. §7216), there is no longer any need for the Trade Commission to issue a cease and desist order against unauthorized use by Beneficial of confidential income tax information for the purpose of soliciting or making consumer loans in the future. This argument is without merit for the same reasons discussed hereinabove in connection with the Commission's Section 5 power to proceed in this case. Essentially, the Commission's remedy is cumulative, and not mutually exclusive with the statutory remedy provided for by the Revenue Code. Supra, pp. 39-40[pp. 150-151]. Furthermore, the Trade Commission has a broad equitable power to prescribe a more stringent or different remedy than that provided for by the Revenue Act of 1971, or the regulations promulgated thereunder, in order to adequately protect the consumer. In the final analysis, therefore, respondents' argument in this respect is directed to the Commission's discretion. And, on the basis of this record, the administrative law judge concludes that the issuance of a cease and desist order is necessary and proper.

C. Provision Against the Use of "Instant Tax Refund" Slogan

Complaint counsel assert that nothing short of an outright prohibition against further use of the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan, or any variation thereof, would provide an adequate remedy in the circumstances of this case. They stress that mere insertion of an explicit qualifier or other explanatory language in advertisements containing the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan will not do. Respondents vigorously claim that the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan, which is a registered trademark and has been heavily promoted by them over the past few years, constitutes a valuable proprietary right, that the insertion of explicit and appropriate phrase stating that what is being offered is a loan in reasonable proximity of the slogan would adequately cure the alleged deception, and that under the circumstances, the extreme and harsh remedy of an outright ban against any use of the slogan would be unreasonable, arbitrary and capricious and a violation of due process. The administrative law judge is of the view that the same reasons which render unfair and deceptive the post-February 1970 "Instant Tax Refund" advertisements discussed hereinabove, compel the conclusion that further use of the deceptive slogan should be prohibited. See supra, pp. 26-28, [pp. 142-143, herein]. Furthermore, it is well settled that qualifying language that is contradictory to the deceptive trade name cannot be used. Federal Trade Commission v. Army and Navy Trading Co., 88 F.2d 776, 780 (D.C. Cir. 1937); El Moro Cigar Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 107 F.2d 429 (4th Cir. 1939);

Bakers Franchise Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 302 F.2d 258, 262 (3d Cir. 1962); Resort Car Rental System Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, F.2d (July 31, 1973). This is such a case. See supra, p. 28, [p. 143, herein].

For the same reason, respondents' argument that their proprietary right in the slogan should be respected by the Commission must be rejected. As Justice Cardozo so aptly put it in a leading case, to cling to a benefit which is the product of misrepresentation, however innocently made, would constitute "a kind of fraud." Respondents must extricate themselves from it by purging their advertisement of the offending slogan. Under the circumstances, only a complete excision of the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan or any variation thereof, can provide an adequate protection. Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U.S. 67, 81 (1934).

Furthermore, the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan is calculated to exploit the common and natural desire of taxpayers to get back from the government as speedily as possible any money they may have paid above and beyond what they actually owe in taxes. In this sense, the slogan is more than simply deceptive and misleading. It is, in a real sense, exploitative. See supra, pp. 30, 37, [pp. 144, 149, herein]. In these circumstances, it would be unthinkable to permit respondents to continue to use the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan or any variation thereof in their future advertisements.

D. The Requirements for a Consent Form

Complaint counsel have proposed detailed requirements for a consent form which may be used by respondents in order to cure the deceptive and unfairness of their practices condemned herein. In the administrative law judge's view, these requirements are reasonably related to the violation found and appear to be designed to protect the consumers adequately in the circumstances of this case. These requirements will therefore be adopted by the administrative law judge.

E. The Provision Requiring Respondents to Send a Letter to their Tax Service Customers for the Most Recent Year Complaint counsel have also proposed an order provision which would require respondents to send a letter explaining the terms of the cease and desist order entered in this case to the last known address of each of their tax preparation customers for the most recent tax years. Indeed, respondents have contended that the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan has been identified by the consumer with Beneficial and that it constitutes a valuable proprietary interest. It is arguable, therefore, that something more than mere prohibition of the offending advertisements is required in order to counter the residual effects of these advertisements. It is beyond question that the Trade Commission has the power to require corrective advertisement as a part of an affirmative remedy where appropriate, Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374 (1965); Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U.S. 67, 78 (1934); American Cyanamid v. Federal Trade Commission, 401 F.2d 574 (1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 920 (1969). Nevertheless, the administrative law judge is of the view that the record evidence does not justify a provision for corrective advertisement in this case. First, Beneficial's use of the offending advertisements has been of a relatively recent origin. It started some 4 years ago (findings 41). Second, the advertising campaign using the offending slogan has been largely seasonal, limited to the income tax season. Finally, the administrative law judge is concerned with the possibly counterproductive effects corrective advertisements may have upon those consumers who have never been exposed to Beneficial's "Instant Tax Refund" advertising campaigns. In this sense, any requirement for corrective advertisements may very well operate to dilute the central provision of the remedy in this case, namely, the excision of the "Instant Refund" slogan or any variation thereof from the future advertisements of Beneficial. For these reasons, the administrative law judge does not include a corrective advertisement provision in the order.

The administrative law judge rejects complaint counsel's argument that respondents be required to send a letter explaining the terms of the order to respondents' past tax customers. The necessity for and utility of such a notification letter is highly dubious. In the administrative law judge's view, the most effective protection that can be devised for respondents' tax preparation customers in this case is a total ban against the use of the "Instant Tax Refund" slogan by respondents in the future. This is adequate in the circumstances of this case.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Federal Trade Commission has, and has had jurisdiction over respondents, and the acts and practices charged in the complaint and involved herein, took place in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

2. Respondents Beneficial Corporation and Beneficial Management Corporation are jointly responsible for the unlawful acts and practices committed in this case and both are subject to the order issued herein.

3. Respondents have engaged in false, misleading and deceptive advertising.

4. Respondents' use of information gathered as a result of their preparation of customers' tax returns for purposes other than the preparation of those tax returns is false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

5. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive advertising and deceptive and unfair acts and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the public into the purchase of respondents' income tax preparation services, and were and are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted and now constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

6. The order set forth below is the necessary and appropriate relief in this case.

As a consequence of the foregoing and of the findings of fact set out above, the following order is entered:

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Beneficial Corporation and Beneficial Management Corporation, corporations and their successors and assigns, and their officers, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the preparation of income tax returns or the extension of consumer credit in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using the term "instant tax refund," or any other word or words of similar import or meaning.

2. Using any guarantee without clearly and conspicuously disclosing the terms, conditions and limitations of any such guarantee; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the terms and conditions of any guarantee.

3. Representing, directly or by implication, that respondents will reimburse their customers for any payments the customer may be required to make in addition to his initial tax payment, in instances where such additional payment results from an error by respondents in the preparation of the tax return.

4. Failing to disclose, clearly and conspicuously, whenever respondents make any representation, directly or by implication, as to their responsibility for, or obligation resulting from, errors attributable to respondents in the preparation of tax returns, that respondents will not reimburse the taxpayer for any deficiency payment assessed against the taxpayer which results from the said errors.

5. Representing, directly or by implication, that the percentage of respondents' customers who receive tax refunds is demonstrably greater than the percentage of the tax paying public at large who receive refunds; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the magnitude or frequency of refunds received by respondents' tax preparation customers.

6. Representing, directly or by implication, that respondents' tax preparing personnel are specially trained or unusually competent in the preparation of tax returns and the giving of tax advice; or that they have the ability and capacity to prepare and give advice concerning complex and detailed income tax returns; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the competence or ability of respondents' tax preparing personnel.

7. Using any information concerning any customer of respondents, including the name and/or address of the customer, for any purpose which is not essential or necessary to the preparation of a tax return if such information was obtained by respondents as a result of the preparation of the customer's tax return which includes any information given by the customer after he has indicated, in any way, that he is interested in utilizing respondents' tax preparation services, unless prior to obtaining such information respondents have both (1) specifically requested from the customer the right to use the tax return information of the customer and (2) have executed a separate written consent signed by the customer which shall contain:

2. The name of the customer;
3. The specific purpose for which the consent is being signed;

It is ordered, That respondents herein shall notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in the structure of the corporate respondents such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the respondent corporations which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

BY ENGMAN, Commissioner:

In this case respondents Beneficial Corporation and Beneficial Management Corporation, which we shall refer to jointly as Beneficial unless otherwise noted, appeal from the administrative law judge's initial decision and order.

Beneficial operates a nationwide system of consumer loan offices and, starting in late 1969, the loan offices began offering a personal income tax preparation service. The complaint in this matter, which was issued on Apr. 10, 1973, charged Beneficial with a variety of offenses under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45), stemming from the advertising and operation of the income tax service. During adjudication, counsel for the parties signed a stipulation for partial adjudicated settlement, by which Beneficial admitted violations, and consented to appropriate order provisions, concerning advertising misrepresentations of Beneficial's reimbursement policy, its competence to prepare tax returns, and the number of customers for whom it has secured government refunds. The law judge accepted this stipulation and we see no reason to overrule him. However, the order provisions which the law judge entered respecting these issues do not correspond in some particulars to the stipulated order provisions, and, on the joint motion of Beneficial and complaint counsel, we shall substitute the latter.

After the partial admission, the remaining issues to be adjudicated were the lawfulness of Beneficial's advertisements featuring its "Instant Tax Refund" slogan, the lawfulness of Beneficial's soliciting loans with information given by its tax service customers, and the liability of respondent Beneficial Corporation. The law judge found against respondents on each of these issues in an initial decision filed Oct. 21, 1974. Respondents have appealed on each issue.

We affirm the administrative law judge. Except to the extent that they are inconsistent with this opinion, the findings and conclusions of the law judge are adopted as those of the Commission.

I. LIABILITY OF BENEFICIAL CORPORATION

Every local loan office of what is known as the Beneficial Finance System is a separate corporation wholly owned, with the exception of a few shares of a few companies, by Beneficial Corporation. At the end of 1972, 1,505 of these local loan corporations operated domestically. (CX 18 at 8)[1] Beneficial Corporation also wholly owns respondent Beneficial Management Corporation, which provides management services, at cost, to the local loan subsidiaries. Other wholly-owned Beneficial Corporation subsidiaries include Beneficial Management Corporation of America, which implements the local loan policies set by Beneficial Management Corporation, and Beneficial Data Processing Corporation, which provides accounting services for the local loan subsidiaries. (I.D. Pars. 7, 20). It is undisputed that the conduct challenged in this matter was performed, directly at least, by subsidiaries, and that Beneficial Corporation must be subject to vicarious liability or none at all.

In determining a parent corporation's liability, we examine the "pattern and framework of the whole enterprise." Art National Mfgs. Dist. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 298 F.2d 476, 477 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 370 U.S. 939 (1962). And if the facts demonstrate even latent control, the applicable standard is met:

> [W]here a parent possesses latent power, through interlocking directorates, for example, to direct the policy of its subsidiary, where it knows of and tacitly approves the use by its subsidiary of deceptive practices in commerce, and where it fails to exercise its influence to curb illegal trade practices, active participation by it in the affairs of the subsidiary need not be proved to hold the parent vicariously responsible. Under these circumstances, complicity will be presumed.

P.F. Collier & Son Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 427 F.2d 261, 270 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 926 (1970).

Despite this clear statement, respondents contend that we should be governed instead by the common law rule, restated in National Lead Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 227 F.2d 825, 829 (7th Cir. 1955), rev'd. on other grounds, 352 U.S. 419 (1957), that to pierce the corporate veil we must find evidence of such complete control of the subsidiary by the parent that the subsidiary is a mere tool and its corporate identity a mere fiction. We reject the contention that any such stringent standard applies.

> Manifestly, where the public interest is involved, as it is in the enforcement of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, a strict adherence to common law principles is not required in the determination of whether a parent should be held for the acts of its subsidiary, where strict adherence would enable the corporate device to be used to circumvent the policy of the statute.

P.F. Collier, supra, 427 F.2d at 267. See also, e.g., Goodman v. Federal Trade Commission, 244 F.2d 584, 590 (9th Cir. 1957).

Accordingly, we have examined the overall pattern of Beneficial

Corporation's relation with its subsidiaries, and we find for several reasons that an order should issue against the parent.

First, respondent Beneficial Corporation shares a common management with respondent Beneficial Management Corporation. The president of the former serves as president and chairman of the board of the latter, and sits on the executive committee of each. The first vice president of Beneficial Corporation also sits on both executive committees. Beneficial Corporation's chairman of the board is additionally general counsel of Beneficial Management Corporation and, likewise, a joint executive committee member. These three men were a majority of Beneficial Corporation's executive committee and were the entire executive committee of Beneficial Management Corporation during much of the relevant period. The executive committee of Beneficial Management Corporation approved the start of the income tax preparation business (I.D. Pars. 30, 31, 32).

Through its domination of the service subsidiaries, Beneficial Corporation also controls each of its local loan subsidiaries. While no officer or director of the parent serves directly as an officer or director of any local loan subsidiary, Beneficial Corporation chooses local officers and directors from the ranks of the management subsidiaries.

Since at least 1969, Beneficial Corporation has installed each regional vice-president of Beneficial Management Corporation as a director of all local loan subsidiaries in his region; typically, the same man also serves as president of all the local loan subsidiaries in the region. The remainder of each local board is filled by a small group of employees of Beneficial Management Corporation of America. Thus, the president of Beneficial Management Corporation of America and two other employees of that corporation serve on the boards of all 1,143 local loan subsidiaries outside New York, and are a majority of those boards; the same three men are also, respectively, secretary, vice-president, and treasurer of these 1,143 subsidiaries. (CX 145a; Tr. 198-201, 221, 226).

The administrative law judge correctly called these patterns of control "a pervasive web of interlocking directorates and managements," (I.D. at 40 [p. 151, herein]). Here, as in P.F. Collier, supra, 427 F.2d at 268, the men who directed the policy and operations of the parent also directed the policy and operations of the wholly-owned subsidiaries.

Second, Beneficial Corporation also exercises complete financial control over the affairs of its subsidiaries. The local loan offices receive all cash for making consumer loans from the parent company, either by capitalization or by loan. Beneficial Data Processing Corporation performs all of the accounting for the local loan subsidiaries. The service subsidiaries provide their services to the local loan companies at cost, and themselves borrow needed funds from Beneficial Corporation. (I.D., Pars. 19, 20). Without the continuing support and intervention of the parent, neither the local loan subsidiaries nor the service subsidiaries would be independently viable.

Third, Beneficial Corporation also allows or encourages local loan subsidiaries to hold themselves out as part of a single nationwide Beneficial entity. Each of them is similarly named — Beneficial Finance Company of Pittsburgh, or of Knoxville, or of Charlotte. Moreover, they are jointly identified through advertising as the Beneficial Finance System, with offices nationwide and around the world. Consumers believed themselves to be dealing with a nationwide Beneficial organization. (Tr. 375, 426). As in P.F. Collier, supra, 427 F.2d at 269, Beneficial Corporation allowed its subsidiaries to trade on its own name and good will. Moreover, by clothing its subsidiaries with apparent authority to act for it, Beneficial Corporation is liable when they use that authority to deceive the public. Cf. Goodman v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, 244 F.2d at 591-93.

Fourth, Beneficial Corporation has set up a retirement plan for all employees of the local loan companies and the service subsidiaries and has contributed several million dollars to the plan. Beneficial Corporation has also set up various other employee plans, such as a stock plan and a Thrift Club plan (Tr. 208-10; I.D. Par. 22).

Finally, the very advertising slogan which is a subject of this case is copyrighted by Beneficial Corporation. That the parent owns the slogan while the subsidiaries use it is further evidence, if any is needed, of the closely intertwined nature of Beneficial Corporation and its flock of subsidiaries. But the copyright ownership by itself is also sufficient to fix liability on Beneficial Corporation. As respondents vigorously point out when arguing to keep the slogan, a copyrighted phrase is a property right. And the law is clear that one who places into another's hands the instrumentality by which unfair or deceptive acts or practices are accomplished may be held responsible for those practices. Federal Trade Commission v. Winsted Hosiery Co., 258 U.S. 483, 494 (1922); C. Howard Hunt Pen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 197 F.2d 273, 281 (3d Cir. 1952).

As we have noted, a sufficient standard is whether the parent, having latent power to halt illegal practices of its subsidiary, instead tacitly approved them. That standard is clearly met. In fact, Beneficial Corporation's control was more than latent, for the parent was intimately entwined with the management, the finances, the employees, and the marketing practices of its subsidiaries. The paper division of Beneficial's business into 1,800 separate companies does not mask overall existence of a single enterprise. See Zale Corporation, et al. v.

Federal Trade Commission, 473 F.2d 1317 (5th Cir. 1973). Whether looking at the pattern or framework of the whole enterprise or at the individual factors mentioned, we find Beneficial Corporation liable. Indeed, even though the common law standard argued by respondents is inapplicable, in this case that more stringent standard is met as well, for the subsidiaries were simply convenient fictions for Beneficial Corporation's use.

II. INSTANT TAX REFUND ADVERTISING

As the administrative law judge found, substantially all of Beneficial's tax preparation advertising has featured the "Instant Tax Refund" theme. The first advertisements, in late 1969 and early 1970, gave little or no explanation of what Beneficial was actually offering. For example, one radio commercial states:

> * * * Do you have a refund coming to you on your income taxes this year? Well, there's no need to wait weeks for your refund check. Get the money right now - even before you mail your return - with a cash advance from Beneficial. We call it the Instant Tax Refund, a special service of Beneficial Finance. Instant Tax Refund. At Beneficial you're good for more. * * * (CX 85(f).)

By February 1970, after initial public response demonstrated widespread misunderstanding of the Instant Tax Refund (Tr. 65-66), Beneficial began to alter its advertising. Broadcast advertisements since then have variously referred to the " 'Instant Tax Refund' Plan" or " 'Instant Tax Refund' loans," and have included such explanatory language as "lend you the equivalent of your refund in cash" or "qualify for a loan." A typical television advertisement is:

> * * * And the Beneficial "Instant Tax Refund" Plan. If you have a refund coming, Beneficial will lend you the equivalent of your refund in cash the instant you qualify for a loan. * * * (CX 84(f).)

Print advertisements also changed somewhat from their original form. After 1970 Beneficial placed an asterisk after the Instant Tax Refund reference with a corresponding asterisk below accompanied by explanatory language, or otherwise used the words "loan" or "Plan" with explanatory language. For example, CX 63 states:

> New Income Tax Service offers "Instant Tax Refund" Plan*
> *When you get your taxes prepared at Beneficial you can take advantage of our "Instant Tax Refund" Plan. The instant you qualify for a loan, Beneficial will lend you the equivalent of your refund — in cash — instantly * * * even before you mail your return. * * *

In truth, it is admitted, what Beneficial is offering is its everyday loan service. The Instant Tax Refund is not a refund at all but a personal consumer loan, with regular finance charges, costs, and repayment period. (complaint, Par. 7(1); Ans., Par. 7; I.D. Par. 48). Such a loan is always available to anyone meeting Beneficial's credit standards, whether or not the customer is owed a tax refund by the government, but Beneficial will not make any loan to a person failing to meet its credit standards, even if the customer is due a government refund. The size of the loan Beneficial wishes to sell is not related to any tax refund, but to the customer's credit limit (CX 143e, 143i; Tr. 169).

A.

Beneficial takes a narrow view of the dispute on appeal. According to Beneficial, the only issue which its Instant Tax Refund advertising presents is whether Beneficial offers real tax refunds. The broader issue, whether consumers are deceived over what Beneficial actually does offer, is presumably irrelevant. Beneficial suggests that deciding this case on other than the narrow issue of actual refunds will import a new theory neither charged nor litigated.

We reject the idea that any such narrow question is before us. Beneficial had ample notice of the issues in this case, which were, and are, whether the Instant Tax Refund advertising is unfair or deceptive under the Federal Trade Commission Act, and specifically whether the Instant Tax Refund advertising misrepresents that Beneficial is offering no more nor less than its normal consumer loan service with its normal finance charges. The complaint raises these issues by quoting Beneficial's advertising (Par. 5), charging that it seems to offer some "instant refund" (Par. 6(1)), and then alleging that in fact Beneficial is offering not a refund at all but a personal loan with finance charges (Par. 7(1)).[2] A clearer and more precise allegation is difficult to conceive. It certainly goes beyond the minimum standards of notice pleading acceptable in administrative hearings. A.E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 135 F.2d 453, 454 (7th Cir. 1943).

During litigation, Beneficial clearly understood that this case related to the total truth of its offer and not just to actual tax refunds. Consistent with the position taken in its prehearing brief before the law judge that its advertisements "fairly and fully inform the public precisely what is involved,"[3] Beneficial asked each of its consumer witnesses if they realized consumer loans with normal finance charges were offered (e.g., Tr. 364-65, 401, 460, 469-73). Beneficial also attempted to show that consumers understand the word "loan" to imply finance charges (e.g., Tr. 56-58, 114-15). Even assuming that only the narrow issue of actual tax refunds was alleged in the complaint, which we do not find, we have consistently held that a party cannot subsequently challenge as beyond the pleadings an issue which was litigated, if he has had actual notice and opportunity to defend. Grand Caillou Packing Co., 65 F.T.C. 799, 820-821 (1964), rev'd in part on other grounds sub nom. LaPeyre v. Federal Trade Commission, 366 F.2d 117 (5th Cir. 1966). See also, e.g., Armand Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 84 F.2d 973 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 299 U.S. 597 (1936); Rule 3.15(a)(2), 16 C.F.R. §3.15(a)(2). In short, Beneficial has had a full and fair opportunity to litigate whether its advertising misrepresented the total truth of its offer, and we will decide that point.

PAR. 6. [Respondents have represented that]

* * * * *

1. Respondents will provide taxpayers who have their returns prepared by respondents and to whom a refund is owned by the Internal Revenue Service with an "instant refund" at the time their returns are prepared.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents' "instant tax refund" is not a refund but a personal loan and the recipient of the loan is required to pay finance charges and other costs for such loan.

B.

Turning, therefore, to Beneficial's advertising, we conclude that the Instant Tax Refund advertisements, in both their plain and adorned forms, had a capacity and tendency to mislead the public about the truth of Beneficial's loan offer, and thus violated Section 5. We find this both on the basis of our own expertise and judgment, from having examined the advertising, see, e.g., Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 391-92 (1965), and on the basis of ample record evidence (e.g., Tr. 53-55, 115-18, 506-07, CX 159).

The early Instant Tax Refund advertising is, on its face, totally misleading about the true nature of Beneficial's offer. Instead of making clear that Beneficial is simply offering its everyday loan service, the advertising implies that Beneficial will give a special cash advance to income tax preparation customers with a government refund due, in the amount of their refund. The natural impression, since the Instant Tax Refund is stressed as exclusive and special, is that this cash advance is different from a normal consumer loan.

Beneficial was acutely aware that the early advertising was misleading consumers about the nature of its offer, for it made all the subsequent changes in an attempt to clarify the real meaning (Tr. 53-55, 115-19, 504-08). The extent of the early advertising's deception is epitomized by a report from Beneficial's advertising agency on the consumer impact of its first Instant Tax Refund campaign (CX 159):

> Results of this initial wave of interest depend on the office and its location. In center-> city offices, particularly those near ghetto areas, the impression gathered from managers was that many of the phone calls came from totally uncreditworthy "riff-raff" * * * people with no steady job record, with very low incomes, whose sole concern was in the Instant Tax Refund. Many thought they could simply get their government checks immediately at Beneficial. Others didn't have the required $5 deposit. There were many loud arguments and unpleasantnesses * * * including one or two incidents of violence being threatened. Managers in these situations tend to agree that advertising should have dealt more directly with the qualifications required to obtain an Instant Tax Refund.

> In other offices — in steady, stable white middle class neighborhoods — many customers also needed explanations about the loan aspects of the Instant Tax Refund. But naturally there were fewer hopeless applicants, and managers in places like that feel much better about the high response level and are much calmer about the advertising claim.[4]

In the face of this, we are unpersuaded that, as Beneficial argues, consumers could decipher the real meaning of its advertising because the Instant Tax Refund phrase was placed in quotations or because Beneficial's identity as a consumer loan business may have given a clue. At any rate, consumers are not obliged to guess about the meaning of advertising. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 302 U.S. 112, 116 (1937).

Beneficial contends that it eliminated any early faults by adding the explanatory language characteristic of its later advertising. Although, as we discuss infra, the later advertising is not appreciably less misleading than the early, even assuming that Beneficial did discontinue its early deception in this case we find it an insufficient defense. Whether a cease and desist order should be entered when discontinuance is claimed rests within the discretion of the Commission. Benrus Watch Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 352 F.2d 313, 322 (8th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 939 (1966). And the Commission has required respondents to meet a heavy burden to prevail on such a claim. Compare, e.g., Argus Camera, Inc., 51 F.T.C. 405 (1954), with Fedders Corp., Dkt. 8932, 3 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Par. 20,825 (Jan. 14, 1975) [85 F.T.C. 38]. Assuming discontinuance of the early deception to have occurred, we can detect no reason to accept that discontinuance as a defense here, for we have no assurance that the deception will not be resumed. Beneficial is still in the tax preparation business and could revert at any time to similar deceptive practices. See Giant Foods, 61 F.T.C. 326, 357 (1962), aff'd., 322 F.2d 977 (D.C. Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 967 (1964). Moreover, such changes as it made in its advertising came partly from the prodding of various regulatory agencies, so were not totally voluntary (Tr. 11, 55, 70-71, 506-07). See

[4] Although we have rejected Beneficial's narrow construction of the complaint, we note that this memorandum indicates some consumers at least did believe Beneficial actually would provide real tax refunds.

Eugene Dietzgen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 142 F.2d 321, 330 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 323 U.S. 730 (1944).

At any rate, no discontinuance occurred, for, as we have noted, despite continual revision Beneficial's later advertising did not succeed in shedding the deceptive and misleading characteristics. The addition of the words "loan" and "plan" and "qualify" was not, in our view, sufficient to clarify exactly what Beneficial was really offering. As the law judge noted, the advertising at best is open to two interpretations. Though some consumers may understand that regular consumer loans are offered,[5] another interpretation is that Beneficial is offering a special, tax-related service apart from its everyday loan business. Of course, where two interpretations of an advertisement are possible, one of which violates Section 5, the advertising is unlawful. Murray Space Shoe Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 304 F.2d 270, 272 (2d. Cir. 1962).

Beneficial insists that we examine the later advertisements in their entirety, and consider the overall explanation of the Instant Tax Refund phrase. Cf. Parker Pen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 159 F.2d 509, 512 (7th Cir. 1946). We have done so. But as noted we find the explanation confusing and misleading. For example, addition of the supposedly explanatory word "plan" seems to us to heighten the implication of the Instant Tax Refund's uniqueness, rather than clarify that it is not unique at all. Thus, we have no occasion to determine whether the explanation, considering the advertising as a whole, was sufficiently conspicuous to dispel the impression generated by the dominant Instant Tax Refund slogan, for nothing amounting to real explanation was included.

The testimony of consumers confirms our view that the later advertising has a capacity to mislead in a material respect. A number of consumers failed to understand that Beneficial was offering only its normal loan service with normal finance charges. Their reasonable impression was that they would pay only a small fee and that the main qualification for the Instant Tax Refund was being due an actual Government refund (Tr. 663, 691, 713-16, 775, 808-09). The consumers, had they realized from the advertising that the "Instant Tax Refund" was simply Beneficial's ordinary loan business, would not have gone to Beneficial's offices at all (Tr. 665, 729, 745-46, 778).

We may assume, as Beneficial would have us, that respondents never intended to deceive consumers. But intent is not an element of a deceptive advertising charge under Section 5. Regina Corp. v. Federal

[5] Beneficial produced a number of such consumers. It appears from their testimony, however, that most of them understood the Instant Tax Refund for what it was because of their prior dealings with loan companies and not because they independently comprehended the advertising (e.g., Tr. 371, 391, 423, 472, 480-81, 495).

Trade Commission, 322 F.2d 765, 768 (3d Cir. 1963). The simple fact is that Beneficial's Instant Tax Refund advertising had a capacity and tendency to deceive, and did in fact deceive, the consuming public.

C.

The law judge's order bans the use of the Instant Tax Refund phrase or similar words. He found that no qualifying language could remedy the deception and that only purging Beneficial's advertisements of the phrase would suffice. Beneficial vigorously contends that explanatory language could cure any fault and that forced abandonment of its copyrighted and heavily promoted phrase is unwarranted.

In some instances, it is true, respondents have been allowed to retain trade names which had become valuable business assets, because the misleading qualities of the names could be dispelled by explanation e.g., Federal Trade Commission v. Royal Milling Co., 288 U.S. 212 (1933). But Royal Milling and its progeny are not limitations on the Commission's authority to enter a fully effective order. If explanatory language is insufficient to qualify a deceptive trade name or is inherently contradictory, its effect is simply to confuse the public and the Commission in framing a proper remedy must excise the offending phrase altogether. See, e.g., Resort Car Rental Systems, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 518 F.2d 962 (9th Cir. Apr. 14, 1975); Bakers Franchise Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 302 F.2d 258, 262 (3d Cir. 1962); Carter Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 268 F.2d 461, 498 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 361 U.S. 884 (1959); United States Navy Weekly, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 207 F.2d 17, 18 (D.C. Cir. 1953). Moreover, the Commission has wide latitude in judgment, particularly in determining whether qualifying words will eliminate a deceptive trade name. Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U.S. 608, 613 (1946).[6]

In light of these principles, we see no reason for allowing Beneficial to retain the offending slogan. The Instant Tax Refund advertisements, we have held, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and have in fact misled consumers. In fact, since its inception in 1969, the Instant Tax Refund phrase has deceived continuously, and Beneficial's repeated efforts to explain it have not cured the false impression it leaves. Beneficial's inability to remedy the deception, which persists even in the qualifying phrase it offers on this appeal as a settlement, confirms what we believe to be obvious. No brief language is equal to the task of explaining the Instant Tax Refund slogan, for the phrase is inherently contradictory to the truth of Beneficial's offer. In truth, the Instant Tax Refund is not a refund at all, but only Beneficial's everyday loan service, complete with normal finance charges and credit checks; nor is it in the least related to any tax refunds, for the size of the loan Beneficial wishes to sell is geared to the customer's credit limit instead of his government refund and many people due a government refund do not qualify for an Instant Tax Refund loan at all; moreover, depending on the season of the year or the customer's sales resistance, the Instant Tax Refund may be called a Vacation loan, a Taxpayer loan, or a Bill Consolidation loan.

[6] Though we believe the Royal Milling line of cases is compatible with our normal responsibility to enter effective but not overbroad orders, to the extent it may actually be a limitation or exception to the Commission's authority to devise fully effective remedies, then we decline to expand the exception from trade names to advertising slogans. The Instant Tax Refund slogan is unlike the established company names in Royal Milling, for it is not the name of anything. It is an empty promotional phrase referring to nothing.

Nor are we inclined to temper our conclusion to ban the phrase simply because Beneficial has copyrighted it and promoted it heavily. The phrase, which is only six years old, has been deceptive from the start, so to protect it is to protect Beneficial's investment in deception. We reject the idea that the more heavily a false claim is advertised, the more tenderly we must treat it.

Beneficial argues that excision of the Instant Tax Refund slogan and words of similar import would prevent any reference to the concept of tax refund loans. This is quite true. The record is absolutely clear that, in Beneficial's business at least, no such concept exists. If, however, Beneficial should begin offering a special loan service actually related in some way to income tax refunds, it may seek to reopen the order. For now we believe the absolute prohibition necessary.[7]

In light of what we have said we must affirm the law judge's order and reject Beneficial's offer of settlement.

III. MISUSE OF CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONSHIP

Finally, respondents appeal the law judge's conclusion that Beneficial misused confidential information gathered in the course of its tax preparation business, by using it to solicit loans without consent. The law judge held Beneficial's practices exploitative, unscrupulous, deceptive, and unfair.

The essential facts are not contested. Beneficial entered the tax preparation business for the explicit purpose of generating loan customers. (I.D. Par. 54; Tr. 84). In practice the tax service, which Beneficial operated from the same offices as its loan business, fulfilled this goal; it was in fact the greatest source of new borrowers which Beneficial had developed in some time (I.D. Par. 55; Tr. 508).

[7] We are likewise unpersuaded by Beneficial's argument that the First Amendment bars this order. It is too clear to warrant discussion that the First Amendment does not protect commercial speech which has been found to be deceptive and misleading. Murray Space Shoe Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, 304 F.2d at 272. There is no constitutional right to disseminate false or misleading advertising. E.F. Drew & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 235 F.2d 735, 740 (2d Cir. 1956), cert. denied, 352 U.S. 969 (1957).

Beneficial used two different procedures to turn tax customers into borrowers. First, from the beginning of its tax preparation venture in 1969 until December 1971, Beneficial made no effort whatever to limit the use of customers' tax data to the preparation of tax returns. Under the procedure in effect during this period, Beneficial's employees prepared a tax interview sheet for each customer who presented himself for tax preparation. This sheet, which contained a variety of financial information, was sent to a computer firm for actual preparation of the return, and the customer frequently had to return a second time to pick up his completed return (I.D. Par. 58). Beneficial explicitly instructed its personnel to use the tax data appearing on the information sheet to solicit loans. For example, CX 26 states:

> Right on the Tax Interview Form it shows you what banks or loan companies the customer owes. It is an easy matter to go on from there and list other debts and show how all the bills can be consolidated, the bank loan can be paid off, the loan company can be paid off, the balance on the car can be cleared - all with a Bill Consolidation Loan.

In addition, if the customer were not sold a loan during the first interview, Beneficial solicited again during the second visit and continued to solicit thereafter by telephone and otherwise (I.D. Pars. 62, 64). Personnel were instructed to run a credit check on those who, on their first visit, were reluctant to borrow money, (I.D. Par. 63), and to present these customers on their second visit with completed loan papers awaiting only a signature (I.D. Par. 62).

After December 1971, Beneficial revamped its procedure because of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1971. Section 316 of that Act, 26 U.S.C. § 7216, imposed criminal penalties upon commercial tax preparers for using customers' tax data for non-tax purposes without consent. Under the new procedure, Beneficial continued to stress turning tax customers into loan customers, but Beneficial's employees required each tax customer to sign a supposed consent form before soliciting any loan. The form, which Beneficial called a BOR-56 Authorization, purported to authorize Beneficial to solicit the customer for "any business" in which Beneficial may engage, and to stipulate that any data appearing on a loan application was not given for tax preparation. In addition to completing a tax interview sheet, Beneficial's employees were instructed to complete for each customer a loan interview sheet containing similar or identical financial information and to base their loan solicitation on the latter document. Beneficial maintained a separate "customer loan folder" for the loan information (I.D. Pars. 65, 66).

A.

Beneficial contends for two reasons that our consideration of its loan solicitation practices should be limited. First, the pre-Revenue Act conduct is supposedly irrelevant, because, according to Beneficial, the law judge drew no legal conclusions from his extensive factual findings on this issue; apparently Beneficial argues that he tacitly dismissed this part of the case and the Commission should not alter his disposition. Second, the law judge's post-Revenue Act findings are, Beneficial says, beyond the scope of the complaint and thus should be dismissed.[8]

Neither of these arguments is supportable. As to the pre-Revenue Act conduct, the law judge's opinion clearly considered and drew legal conclusions from the record evidence. In addition to entering detailed factual findings (I.D. Pars. 53-64), the law judge explicitly held that Beneficial's pre-Revenue Act practices were "offensive to the public policy, unethical, unscrupulous, unconscionable and clearly unfair to the consumer." (I.D. at 36) [p. 148, herein]. Of course, even had the law judge actually ignored Beneficial's pre-Revenue Act conduct, the Commission on review could itself fully consider its lawfulness Rule 3.54(a), 16 C.F.R. §3.54(a).

Beneficial's second argument - that the law judge's theory of post-Revenue Act violation is beyond the scope of the complaint - must be rejected on the same grounds that its similar claim respecting the tax refund advertising was rejected. According to Beneficial, the complaint, which alleged misuse of the "tax return" and the tax "financial profile," does not encompass Beneficial's post-Revenue Act procedure of preparing a separate loan information profile for loan solicitation instead of referring directly to the tax documents. But we do not read the complaint so restrictively. It plainly alleges misuse of a confidential relationship by soliciting loans, without consent, using information given for tax purposes (complaint, Par. 8). Since the law judge explicitly found the post-Revenue Act consent form inadequate to differentiate tax information from so-called loan information in customers' minds, the law judge correctly construed the complaint when he applied it to the post-Revenue Act procedures. Moreover, even accepting the argument that the complaint does not by its explicit terms encompass the post-Revenue Act procedures, we see no indication that the real substance of the dispute was not clarified for Beneficial during adjudication. As we noted before, an administrative complaint is a flexible document; semantic deficiencies will not preclude full resolution of the issues where the party proceeded against has a reasonable opportunity to know the matters in controversy Avnet v. Federal Trade Commission, 511 F.2d 70, 76 (7th Cir. 1975). Beneficial has offered utterly no information suggesting it was prejudiced, or unfairly surprised, or otherwise unable to litigate the legality of its post-Revenue Act conduct. In fact, Beneficial itself highlighted the issue by raising the supposed lawfulness of its post-Revenue Act conduct as an affirmative defense.

[8] Apparently in connection with this second argument, Beneficial also seems to argue that the law judge was improperly influenced by a personal belief that a dual loan and tax business is per se unfair. However, the law judge offered no such opinion and in fact specifically declined to rule on the issue (I.D. at 37) [p. 149, herein]. The legality of dual operation was eliminated as an issue by complaint counsel on Mar. 13, 1974.

We conclude, therefore, that the substantive lawfulness of Beneficial's conduct, both pre-Revenue Act and post-Revenue Act, is properly before us.

B.

We first consider Beneficial's pre-Revenue Act conduct. The law judge found this conduct unfair, because it violated basic public policy respecting the confidentiality of tax data, and deceptive, because it was premised on omission of material facts.

In determining whether Beneficial's conduct was unfair, the appropriate standard is a broad one. The Commission > does not arrogate excessive power to itself if, in measuring a practice against the elusive, but congressionally mandated standard of unfairness, it, like a court of equity, considers public values beyond simply those enshrined in the letter or encompassed in the spirit of the antitrust laws.

Federal Trade Commission v. Sperry & Hutchinson, 405 U.S. 233, 244 (1972).

In accordance with this mandate, the law judge determined the applicable public policy relating to use of tax data from a wide range of relevant statutory and ethical sources. However Beneficial argues that applicable public policy can only be found in a law or canon running by its terms to Beneficial, and that public policy deduced and synthesized from analogous situations cannot govern its conduct. Accordingly, for the period before the Revenue Act explicitly applied a standard of confidentiality to its business, Beneficial would find no applicable policy.

This argument totally misapprehends the scope of unfairness under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. There is no doubt at this point that the Commission may adapt the substance of Section 5 to changing forms of commercial unfairness, and is not limited to vicariously enforcing other law. Therefore, in this case, as in others, those who engage in commercial conduct which is contrary to a generally recognized public value are violating the Federal Trade Commission Act, notwithstanding that no other specific statutory strictures apply Federal Trade Commission v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., Inc., 291 U.S. 304, 313 (1934); Federal Trade Commission v. Sperry & Hutchinson, supra. The passage of the Revenue Act reiterated, but certainly did not create, the policy of tax confidentiality which we apply here.[9]

The policy we apply is evident in the numerous incarnations of our society's concern for the confidentiality and proper use of personal tax data. This theme, broader than the letter of any one law, plainly links those public statutes which variously impose criminal penalties upon federal employees for revealing a tax return,[10] or allow disclosure of income tax returns only under Presidential order or regulation,[11] or forbid disclosure of state income tax returns.[12] The same policy of tax confidentiality is also manifested in the ethical standards of other commercial tax preparers. Accountants,[13] certified public accountants,[14] and lawyers[15] would all be in violation of their ethical canons if they used tax information received from a customer to solicit a loan without consent. While it is not our intent to inject entire professional ethics codes into Beneficial's business, we believe the various similar fiduciary requirements of professional income tax preparers reflect a basic ethical consideration which by its nature is equally applicable to anyone in a position to abuse the confidence of a client.[16]

The reason for this statutory and ethical concern is obvious. Personal financial data is the private business of the individual to whom it relates. Its inherent confidentiality requires that the relationship between the tax preparer and his customer be a fiduciary one. This basic fiduciary nature is reflected in the personal expectations of consumers (tr. 256, 778). Numerous witnesses testified that they expect confidentiality from tax preparers and regard loan solicitation based on tax data as breach of confidentiality (e.g., 493-94, 666, 724-25, 809-10).

Beneficial argues, however, that its misuse of tax information was minimal because the information was not transferred out of the company. However, even putting aside the evidence that Beneficial did in fact transfer the names of its tax customers outside the company while running credit checks, (CX 27, 34d; Tr. 37, 721-22), this argument ignores the fact that the confidential relationship is breached whenever the customer's information is used for the financial gain of the preparer. Whether or not respondents brokered the confidential information to other businesses, or simply capitalized on it themselves, is thus unimportant. By the same token, respondents' argument that customers expected to be solicited for loans because of Beneficial's reputation as a consumer loan business, and were not shocked at being solicited, ignores the record evidence that customers would not approve of any such loan solicitation made on the basis of their confidential tax data (Tr. 667, 725). The fact that some tax customers initiated loan discussions themselves, typically by volunteering the amount of their anticipated refunds, demonstrates to us not their disinterest in the confidentiality of their tax data, but rather the effectiveness of the Instant Tax Refund slogan in falsely convincing them that a regular consumer loan was somehow tax-related.[17]

[9] In light of the pervasive and specific policy of tax confidentiality, we, like the law judge, have no need to decide whether a broader consideration of personal privacy could govern this case. In declining to reach that issue, however, we do not suggest that a generalized right of personal privacy and personal control over private data is an inadequate foundation on which to ground a finding of unlawfulness under Section 5. In fact, the right of privacy has become a widely-valued public policy, with constitutional and statutory underpinning. Cf., e.g., Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 152 (1973); Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. §552a. Its violation in a commercial context would likely be unlawful under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[15] See Canon 4, Code of Professional Responsibility of the American Bar Association (Disciplinary Rule 4-101 and Ethical Consideration 4-5).

[16] Beneficial argues that some professional income tax preparers also solicit other business from their clients. However, in using tax data to identify other specialized needs of their clients, accountants and lawyers are fulfilling a professional obligation markedly different from Beneficial's practice of trying to sell loans to each of its tax customers (Tr. 142-45, 257-59). The point in looking to other income tax preparers is not to make Beneficial and them indistinguishable, but only to identify an irreducible minimum quantum of fairness and commercial integrity.

Thus, we conclude that Beneficial's loan solicitation practices were indefensible. In the face of the prevailing public policy, the common basic standards of ethical behavior, and the widespread expectations of consumers, Beneficial during the pre-Revenue Act period engaged in wholesale and intentional disregard of the privileged nature of its relationship with its tax customers, and the confidential status of their tax information. Its practices preyed on the vulnerability of customers who were entitled to expect, and did expect, that their information would be handled with integrity and discretion. We cannot disagree with the law judge's characterization of Beneficial's activities as exploitative, unscrupulous, and unconscionable. We find Beneficial's behavior legally unfair.

The same public expectation of confidentiality which makes Beneficial's conduct unfair also makes it deceptive. Although the public expects the fiduciary character of a taxpayer-tax preparer relationship to be honored, Beneficial entered such relationships with no intention of guarding tax information from unauthorized use, and in fact converted tax data for its own profit. Beneficial's failure to disclose these conditions had the capacity to mislead consumers into believing that the information they provided would only be used for preparing their tax returns. Such an omission of facts which are material to an intelligent purchasing decision is unlawful see, e.g., P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 186 F.2d 52, 58 (4th Cir. 1950). The law judge also found that full disclosure of material facts is particularly important in a confidential relationship. Though this is true, the general commercial duty to disclose material facts is sufficient to make Beneficial's actions deceptive.

[17] One of the questions "most frequently asked," according to an instruction sheet issued to the local loan offices, is "Do you have to see proof that the customer is really entitled to a tax refund loan?" (CX 143i). This question epitomizes the confusion generated by Beneficial's advertising, which seems to offer a special service based on income taxes, but in reality is not related to income taxes at all.

Finally, the law judge found Beneficial's conduct deceptive because, in conjunction with the Instant Tax Refund slogan, it is analogous to bait and switch advertising. Although Beneficial's practices are not a classic bait and switch, the conceptual similarities are striking. Bait advertising is an enticing but insincere offer of goods or services, designed to obtain leads for a different product or service see, e.g., 16 C.F.R. Part 238.0, Guides Against Bait Advertising. Beneficial's tax advertising was consciously designed to generate customers for the loan business and, even though the tax preparation service itself was a legitimate offer, the Instant Tax Refund advertised as part of the service was not a legitimate offer at all. Since Beneficial's tax advertising was designed to attract customers with an alluring offer, and the tax service was designed to switch the customers unwittingly to Beneficial's regular loan service, we find as an additional ground of deception that the loan solicitation practices were part of a pattern of conduct akin to bait and switch.

C.

We now turn to Beneficial's post-Revenue Act conduct, which on its face at least was an attempt to avoid use of confidential data. Beneficial argues that its new procedures cured the unfairness and deception in its early practices because it never used tax information to solicit loans after the Revenue Act became effective.

Even assuming this were true, it would not be an adequate defense to Beneficial's clear violations of law prior to the Revenue Act. As we noted earlier, discontinuance of unfairness or deception does not render a cease and desist order improper Coro, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 338 F.2d 149, 153 (1st Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 954 (1965). We have in rare occasions refrained from entering an order where discontinuance was voluntary, prolonged, and likely to be permanent. But here the discontinuance, assuming there were any, occurred only after a criminal statute prodded Beneficial into making changes. Given Beneficial's dual business and its persistent desire to turn tax customers into loan customers, we find no reason to refrain from issuing an order in this case because of Beneficial's supposed curing of its unlawful conduct.

At any rate, the new procedures did not in fact cure the deception and unfairness. Although the uninhibited conversion of private information which characterized the earlier period gave way to purported authorization forms and separated "tax" and "loan" folders, the net effect of the new procedure was to confuse consumers and continue to abuse their proper expectations concerning the use to which their confidential information would be put. We find Beneficial's post-Revenue Act practices unfair and deceptive in their own right.

The main factor distinguishing the new procedure from the old was the BOR-56 Authorization form which Beneficial required each tax customer to sign. Only if this paper were adequate to allow informed consumer consent to loan solicitation could a waiver of the fiduciary tax relationship occur. However, the law judge found the BOR-56 form totally inadequate on its face as a consent form, and we agree. It does not inform the customer that the fiduciary tax relationship is being terminated and that financial information given thereafter will be used for loan solicitation. Though it authorizes solicitation of "any business" it does not disclose what kind of business and it does not disclose that the solicitation is beginning even as the customer signs the form. Our independent view of the release form's inadequacy is reinforced by the testimony of consumer witnesses, some called by Beneficial, who had various opinions of the form's purpose, all wrong (e.g., Tr. 372, 395, 410, 486).

Obviously consumers have a right to waive the confidentiality of their tax data if they choose. And, since Beneficial does offer a useful service in both the tax and loan businesses, some tax customers will presumably wish to forego their purely fiduciary relationship with Beneficial. But this decision must be based on full disclosure and informed consent.

In light of the inadequacy of the BOR-56 form, the other changes in procedure after the Revenue Act become purely formal and without significance. Though Beneficial prepared what it called a Loan Interview Sheet for each customer, from the unsuspecting customer's point of view the information being gathered was still subject to the fiduciary tax relationship. Though Beneficial scrupulously separated what it called "loan" folders from the "tax" folders, so far as the customer understood every folder was a tax folder. For these reasons, we see no essential difference between Beneficial's post-Revenue Act conduct and its pre-Revenue Act conduct.

D.

The law judge entered an order designed to allow consumers to make an informed choice over waiving the confidentiality of their tax data. Beneficial argues that for several reasons the order is inappropriate.

Beneficial first argues that the Revenue Act of 1971, which provides criminal penalties for tax preparers, as a matter of law preempts the Federal Trade Commission Act in this area and precludes entering an order. Alternatively, Beneficial argues that, as a matter of administrative discretion, the Commission should defer to the Revenue Act either by entering an order coextensive with that Act or entering no order at all.

The contention that the Revenue Act has pro tanto deprived the Commission of authority over the commercial misuse of income tax information is not persuasive. The courts have repeatedly rejected the argument that the Federal Trade Commission Act is ousted because of the possibly concurrent operation of another statute enforced by a different agency. The jurisdiction of the Commission has been seen as cumulative e.g., Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 689-95 (1948) (Justice Department); Warner-Lambert Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 361 F. Supp. 948, 953 (D. D.C. 1973) (Food and Drug Administration); American Cyanamid Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 363 F.2d 757, 771 (6th Cir. 1966) (Patent Office); Baldwin Bracelet Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 325 F.2d 1012, 1014 (D.C. Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 923 (1964) (Tariff Commission). In Baldwin, as here, the supposedly preemptive law was a criminal statute implemented with Treasury Department regulations. See also Brandenfels v. Day, 316 F.2d 375, 378 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 824 (1963).

Had Congress intended to limit the jurisdiction of the Commission, it would have done so explicitly, as it has before cf., e.g., Packers and Stockyards Act, 42 Stat. 159, 169 (Aug. 15, 1921), amended, 72 Stat. 1749, 1750 (Sept. 2, 1958); McGuire Act, 66 Stat. 631, 632 (July 14, 1952). But the Revenue Act contains no repeal, and the legislative history does not refer to the Commission at all. Nor will we infer repeal, for repeals by implication are not favored. Only where two laws are clearly repugnant to each other and both cannot be carried into effect will the latter prevail. U.S. v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 198 (1939); L. Heller & Son v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F.2d 954, 957 (7th Cir. 1951). Here, though the civil requirements of the Federal Trade Commission Act may impose more stringent demands than the criminal standards of the Revenue Act, there is no repugnancy. Like the law judge we view Beneficial's possible compliance with the Revenue Act as irrelevant, and do not decide that issue.

Since the standards of the Revenue Act are irrelevant to this case, we see no reason to enter an order coextensive with that Act or to defer altogether. Our concern is to purge Beneficial's unlawfulness under Section 5. Because the fault we have found lies in the undisclosed use of confidential data, the law judge was correct in entering an order provision requiring full disclosure and consent before loan solicitation may begin. Under the order, Beneficial may not use any information given by a tax customer unless the customer has signed a consent form detailing, inter alia, the specific purpose for the consent, the exact information to be used, and the particular use intended. The lack of just this information is what makes the present BOR-56 form inadequate. Thus, the order provision is more than just reasonably related to the offense found, Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, 327 U.S. at 613; it is the most obvious and direct way to cure Beneficial's practices.

Beneficial also argues that the lack of a time limit in the order would make it impossible ever to give a loan to any tax customer who signed no consent, even years later. If Beneficial wished to solicit such a loan using information obtained because of the tax relationship, this is absolutely true. But if the loan should arise from the customer's wholly independent action, in a context far removed in time from the income tax experience, making the loan would likely not violate the order. At any rate, Beneficial could cure its supposed problem by securing a signed consent before obtaining information for the loan.[18]

Finally, Beneficial argues that the order does not allow it to solicit tax customers for additional tax business. We will add appropriate language to remedy this.

IV. CONCLUSION

Having considered the entire record, the initial decision of the administrative law judge, and the briefs, the Commission affirms the law judge to the extent set forth in this opinion. An appropriate order accompanies this opinion.

FINAL ORDER

This matter having been heard by the Commission upon respondents' appeal from the initial decision; and

The Commission having considered the oral arguments of counsel, their briefs, and the whole record; and

The Commission, for reasons stated in the accompanying opinion, having denied in part and granted in part the appeal; accordingly

It is ordered, That, except to the extent that it is inconsistent with the Commission's opinion, the initial decision of the administrative law judge be, and it hereby is, adopted together with the opinion accompanying this order as the Commission's final findings of fact and conclusions of law in this matter;

[18] Beneficial has raised other hypotheticals which, it says, demonstrate that the order may deprive it of loan business even from willing tax customers. However, we are not persuaded to modify the order by "fantasies." Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., supra, 352 U.S. at 431. Beneficial has recourse to our compliance procedures if actual situations arise which may be presented in evidentiary form. But Beneficial must expect some fencing in, and foregoing the hypothetical loan business may be a necessary price of simultaneously engaging in two essentially contradictory businesses.

It is further ordered, That the following cease and desist order be, and it hereby is, entered:

It is ordered, That respondents Beneficial Corporation and Beneficial Management Corporation, corporations, and their successors and assigns, and their officers, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the preparation of income tax returns or the extension of consumer credit in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using the term "instant tax refund," or any other word or words of similar import or meaning.

2. Using any guarantee without clearly and conspicuously disclosing the terms, conditions and limitations of any such guarantee; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the terms and conditions of any guarantee.

3. Representing, directly or by implication, that respondents will reimburse their customers for any payments the customer may be required to make in addition to his initial tax payment, in instances where such additional payment results from an error by respondents in the preparation of the tax return; Provided, however, That it shall be a defense in any enforcement proceeding for respondents to establish that they make such payments.

4. Failing to disclose, clearly and conspicuously, whenever respondents make any representation, directly or by implication, as to their responsibility for, or obligation resulting from, errors attributable to respondents in the preparation of tax returns, that respondents will not reimburse the taxpayer for any deficiency payment which results from said errors, Provided, however, That it shall be a defense in any enforcement proceeding for respondents to establish that they make such payments.

5. Representing, directly or by implication, that the percentage of respondents' customers who receive tax refunds is demonstrably greater than the percentage of individual taxpayers at large who receive refunds; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the magnitude or frequency of refunds received by respondents' tax preparation customers.

6. Representing, directly or by implication, that respondents' tax preparing personnel are tax experts or unusually competent in the preparation of tax returns or the rendering of tax advice; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the competence or ability of respondents' tax preparing personnel.

7. Using information concerning any customers of respondents, including the name and/or address of the customer, for any purpose which is not essential or necessary to the preparation of a tax return if such information was obtained by respondents as a result of the preparation of the customer's tax return which includes any information given by the customer after he has indicated, in any way, that he is interested in utilizing respondents' tax preparation services, unless prior to obtaining such information respondents have both (1) specifically requested from the customer the right to use the tax return information of the customer and (2) have executed a separate written consent signed by the customer which shall contain:

1. Respondent's name;
2. The name of the customer;
3. The specific purpose for which the consent is being signed;
4. The exact information which will be used;
5. The particular use which will be made of such information;
6. The parties or entities to whom the information will be made available;
7. The date on which such consent is signed;
8. A statement that the tax return information may not be used by the tax return preparer for any purpose other than that stated in the consent, and;
9. A statement by the taxpayer that he consents to the use of such information for the specific purpose described in subparagraph (3) of this paragraph.

Provided, however, That nothing herein shall prohibit respondents from using names and addresses only of customers for the purpose of communication with such customers solely concerning respondents' income tax preparation business.

Nothing in the above provision is intended to relieve respondents of any further requirements imposed on them by the Revenue Act of 1971, Pub. L. 92-178, title III, §316(a), Dec. 10, 1971; 26 U.S.C. §7216 or regulations issued pursuant to it.

It is further ordered, That respondents herein shall notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in the structure of the corporate respondents such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the respondent corporations which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, within 60 days after service of this order, file with the Commission a written report, signed by the respondents, setting forth in detail the manner and form of their compliance with this order.

ORDER PLACING MATTERS ON DOCKET FOR REVIEW

These matters are now before the Commission upon two applications for review and a certification by an administrative law judge[1] concerning the question of whether restitution under the Federal Trade Commission Act, should be regarded as an option in formulating remedies in these matters inasmuch as: (1) a United States Court of Appeals has held in Heater v. Federal Trade Commission, 530 F.2d 321 (9th Cir. 1974) that the Commission lacks the authority to impose such relief; and (2) the Commission has determined not to seek review of that decision.[2] Furthermore, each of these matters expressly or by implication raises fundamental questions concerning the implementation of the recently enacted Magnuson-Moss Warranty-Federal Trade Commission Improvement Act, Pub. L. 93-637 (Jan. 4, 1975).

[1] In Electronic Computer Programming Institute, complaint counsel had moved for issuance of a subpoena duces tecum seeking, in part, evidence needed to support restitutionary relief. The administrative law judge in that matter denied the motion on the grounds that it sought information which might not be in furtherance of the legitimate statutory authority of the Commission based on Heater v. F.T.C., 530 F.2d 321 (9th Cir. 1974). However, he granted complaint counsel leave to file an application for review of his ruling and to determine whether the matter should be placed on our suspense calendar pending the final outcome of the Heater case.

In Lafayette United Corporation, this question came to us under different circumstances. There, respondents had moved to strike and dismiss from the complaint the claim for restitution and to quash in part a subpoena duces tecum sought by complaint counsel. The law judge denied these motions but, in view of the Commission's decision not to appeal the Heater decision, he sua sponte certified to the Commission the question of whether it would be in the public interest to allow complaint counsel to continue to seek restitutionary relief.

Finally, in Control Data Corp., the law judge denied respondents' motion to strike from the complaint Paragraph 11, which, they argued, was intended solely to obtain retroactive restitution, but granted them leave to file an application for review of this ruling. The only question approved for review was to be the policy question of how the Commission will proceed in the area of restitution in light of Heater.

Section 206 of the Magnuson-Moss Act authorizes the Commission to file actions for consumer redress in federal courts if a final Commission cease and desist order has been entered against respondents for engaging in acts or practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Commission intends to exercise that authority whenever appropriate and reserves the right to proceed under that section with respect to the respondents in these cases if the statutory conditions are met.

The three matters now before the Commission raise the general issue of how the Commission intends to proceed in regard to consumer redress and several specific issues concerning the relationship of the administrative proceedings to possible later consumer redress actions under the Magnuson-Moss Act. Therefore, in order to determine the questions presented, the Commission needs to consider carefully, as to each of these matters, the following questions, based on the assumption that the Commission intends to seek consumer redress, if at all, pursuant to Section 206 of the Magnuson-Moss Act.

(1) To what extent, if any, should evidence be presented and findings be made in the administrative proceedings regarding the nature and extent of the injuries sustained by consumers as a result of the challenged acts or practices?

(2) To what extent, if any, should evidence be presented and findings be made on the issue whether the challenged acts or practices are such that "a reasonable man would have known under the circumstances [that they are] dishonest or fraudulent"?

It is ordered, That the above-captioned matters be placed on the Commission's docket for review pursuant to Section 3.23(b) of the Rules of Practice; and

The parties are invited to submit additional briefs on the aforesaid questions within thirty (30) days of the service of this order. Answering briefs may be submitted within ten (10) days after service of the aforesaid briefs.

[2] The complaints in these matters all contain a similarly worded paragraph which charges respondents with two distinct violations of Section 5: (1) unfairly retaining monies allegedly obtained by inducing persons, through false and deceptive representations, to pay for courses of instruction which will be virtually worthless in obtaining future employment; and (2) hindering competition by retaining monies obtained from consumers for their courses by false and deceptive representations. In each case, the notice order accompanying the complaint states that, if the facts as alleged therein are proved, the Commission may order restitution for past, present and future losses suffered by consumers.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that World Wide Systems, Inc., a corporation, and Francis J. Witherbee, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and also doing business as Associated Systems, Atlas Systems, Coastway American Systems and Great Lakes Development Corporation, and Steven L. Bradshaw, individually and as a former officer of said corporation, and also doing business as Associated Systems, Atlas Systems, Coastway American Systems, Great Lakes Development Corporation, New Horizons Unlimited and others, and Eugene C. Kobylarz, individually and doing business as New Horizons Unlimited, Rapidway Systems, Trailmasters and Roads and Lands, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent World Wide Systems, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office and place of business located at 1042 E. Washington St., Indianapolis, Ind.

Respondent Francis J. Witherbee is an individual and officer of respondent corporation and also does business as Associated Systems, Atlas Systems, Coastway American Systems and Great Lakes Development Corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent and said business entities, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is the same as that of said corporate respondent.

Respondent Steven L. Bradshaw is an individual and former officer of said corporate respondent and also does business as Associated Systems, Atlas Systems, Coastway American Systems, Great Lakes Development Corporation, New Horizons Unlimited and others. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of said business entities including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is 125 Belaire Dr., New Whiteland, Ind.

Respondent Eugene C. Kobylarz is an individual and does business as New Horizons Unlimited, Rapidway Systems, Trailmasters and Roads and Lands. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of said business entities including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is 5140 S. Madison Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and have been for some time last past, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of courses of study and instruction purporting to prepare graduates thereof for employment as heavy equipment operators, truck drivers, and related occupations. Said courses when pursued to completion include a series of lessons pursued by correspondence through the United States mails and a period of in-residence training at a place designated by respondents.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents now cause and for some time last past have caused, the publication of advertisements concerning the said courses in newspapers of general circulation and have caused the correspondence portion of their courses, when sold, to be sent from respondents' place of business in the State of Indiana to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States. Respondents utilized the services of salesmen and telephone solicitors who induced prospective purchasers of said courses located in States other than the State of Indiana to contact said salesmen at respondents' offices both within the State of Indiana and elsewhere, in person, by telephone, by mail, or otherwise. Said salesmen transmitted to and received from respondents contracts, checks, and other instruments of a commercial nature relating to the sale of said courses to said purchasers. Respondents maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said courses of study and instruction in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have published or caused to be published in the "Help-Wanted" and other columns of newspapers advertisements containing statements regarding job opportunities, training and wages for persons interested in becoming heavy equipment operators or truck drivers. Typical and illustrative, but not all inclusive of such advertisements, are the following:

SEMI-DRIVERS NEEDED

No experience necessary. Will Train. Earn $300 to $400 per week. For application call (317) 639-6138, or write to Associated Systems, 1040 East Washington St., Indianapolis, Indiana 46202.

GRADERS, SCRAPERS, BULLDOZERS, BACKHOES

No experience necessary. Will train. Earn $300.00 to $400.00 per week. For application call 317-545-6431, or write to World Wide Systems, 1042 East Washington St., Indianapolis, Indiana 46202.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the statements contained in the advertisements set forth in Paragraph Four and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, respondents represent directly or by implication, that:

1. Respondents operate, represent, or are affiliated with a construction company or a trucking company.

2. Respondents are offering employment to qualified applicants who will be trained as heavy equipment operators or truck drivers.

3. Persons receiving training from respondents will earn $300 - $400 per week as heavy equipment operators, truck drivers, or in related occupations upon completion of training.

4. There is a reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be a need or demand for heavy equipment operators or truck drivers which respondents' training is designed to meet.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents do not operate or represent, and are not affiliated with a construction company or trucking company, but, to the contrary, are engaged in the sale of courses of instruction to prospective purchasers.

2. Respondents do not offer employment to persons who have been trained as heavy equipment operators or truck drivers, but attempt to and do sell courses of instruction to said purchasers.

3. Few, if any, persons who received training from respondents pursuant to said offer have earned amounts such as $300-$400 per week as truck drivers, heavy equipment operators, or in related occupations as a result of such training.

4. Respondents had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be a need or demand for heavy equipment operators or truck drivers which respondents' training is designed to meet.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents cause persons who respond to advertisements to contact respondents' salesmen. For the purpose of inducing the sale of courses offered by respondents, such salesmen make to prospective purchasers many statements and representations, directly and by implication, regarding opportunities for employment as heavy equipment operators and truck drivers available to purchasers of said courses, the assistance furnished to graduates in obtaining employment and other matters. Some of the aforesaid statements and representations appear in brochures, pamphlets and other printed material furnished to said salesmen by respondents and in other statements and representations made orally by said salesmen. Among and typical, but not all inclusive, of such statements and representations are the following:

1. Respondents have been requested by construction and trucking companies to train operators and drivers for jobs as a heavy equipment operator or truck driver with their company upon completion of said training.

2. Graduates of said courses will thereby be qualified for employment as heavy equipment operators or truck drivers without further training or experience.

3. The nature of an initial payment by prospective enrollees of said courses prior to the undertaking of a formal obligation to respondents is not that of a nonrefundable tuition fee.

4. Respondents will permit enrollees of said courses to defer the balance of the cost of said courses remaining after the initial or registration fee has been paid until after the graduate of said courses has obtained employment as a heavy equipment operator or truck driver.

5. Respondents will handle or arrange financing of the balance of the cost of said courses remaining after the initial or registration fee has been paid.

6. Respondents provide a placement service which will secure a job as a heavy equipment operator or truck driver for graduates of said courses who want to work in such capacities.

7. Graduates of said courses who want to work are assured jobs as heavy equipment operators or truck drivers as a consequence of graduating from said courses.

8. Respondents operate and maintain school facilities, and provide training and instruction for prospective heavy equipment operators and truck drivers at these school facilities.

9. Respondents will train enrollees on the best and most up-to-date equipment used in the construction and trucking industries.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents have not been requested by construction or trucking companies to train people for jobs as heavy equipment operators or truck drivers, which jobs shall be offered by such companies to graduates of said training.

2. Graduates of said courses are not thereby qualified for employment as heavy equipment operators or truck drivers without further training or experience.

3. The sum of money that enrollees in said courses are required to pay prior to the undertaking of a formal obligation with respondents is a non-refundable fee.

4. Respondents generally do not permit enrollees of said courses to defer payment of the balance of the cost of said courses remaining after the initial or registration fee has been paid until after employment as a heavy equipment operator or truck driver has been obtained.

5. Respondents seldom if ever arrange financing to enable purchasers to pay the balance of the cost of said courses.

6. The placement service provided by respondents will not secure a job as a heavy equipment operator or truck driver for graduates of said courses who want to work in such capacities.

7. Graduates of said courses who want to work are not assured jobs as heavy equipment operators or truck drivers as a consequence of graduating from said courses.

8. Respondents do not operate and maintain any school facilities for either heavy equipment operator or truck driver training. Respondents have no resident training facilities and all enrollees are sent to an independent school for training.

9. The heavy equipment and trucks provided by the independent training school to which respondents send their enrollees are not the best and most up-to-date equipment used in the construction and trucking industries.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Seven hereof were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. Respondents offered for sale courses of instruction to prepare graduates thereof for jobs as heavy equipment operators and truck drivers without disclosing in advertising or through their sales representatives:

(1) The recent number and percentage of graduates of each school that were able to obtain the employment for which they were trained;

(2) the employers that hired any such graduates;

(3) the initial salary any such graduates received; and

(4) the percentage of recent enrollees of each school for each course offered that have failed to complete their course of instruction.

Knowledge of such facts would indicate the possibility of securing future employment upon graduation and the nature of such employment. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose a material fact, which, if known to certain prospective enrollees, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to purchase such course of instruction. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive, or unfair.

PAR. 10. In the further course and conduct of their business, and in furtherance of their purpose of inducing the purchase of their courses by the general public, respondents acting directly and furnishing the means and instrumentalities to their salesmen, directly or indirectly, have engaged in the following additional acts or practices:

Respondents have induced members of the general public to sign certain contracts entitled "Application." Respondents thereby have deceptively and misleadingly created the impression that said documents are not legally binding contractual agreements when in fact said documents are legally binding contractual agreements.

Therefore, respondents' statements, representations, acts or practices as set forth herein were, and are, false, misleading, unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

PAR. 11. Respondents have entered into contracts with purchasers of said courses of instruction which contain provisions for the cancellation of said contracts and the refund of tuition monies paid by said purchasers. In many instances, respondents have failed to offer to refund and refused to refund to purchasers who have cancelled their contracts such monies as may be due and owing according to the terms of said contracts.

The use by respondents of the aforesaid practice and their continued retention of said sums, as aforesaid, is an unfair act or practice and an act of unfair competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 12. (a) Respondents have been and are now using the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading or deceptive acts and practices, which a reasonably prudent person should have known, under all of the facts and circumstances, were unfair, false, misleading or deceptive, to induce persons to pay or to contract to pay over to them substantial sums of money to purchase or pay for courses of instruction which to such purchasers in connection with their future employment and careers was, and is, virtually worthless. Respondents have received the said sums and have failed to offer refunds and have failed to refund such sums to or to rescind such contractual obligations of substantial numbers of enrollees and participants in such courses who were unable to secure employment in the positions and fields for which they have been purportedly trained by respondents.

The use by respondents of the aforesaid acts and practices, their continued retention of said sums and their continued failure to rescind such contractual obligations of their customers, as aforesaid, are unfair acts or practices.

(b) In the alternative and separate from Paragraph Twelve (a) herein, respondents, who are in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of courses of vocational instruction, have been and are now using, as aforesaid, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices, to induce persons to pay over to respondents substantial sums of money to purchase courses of instruction.

The effect of using the aforesaid acts and practices to secure substantial sums of money is or may be to substantially hinder, lessen, restrain, or prevent competition between respondents and the aforesaid competitors.

Therefore, the said acts and practices constitute an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 13. By and through the use of the aforesaid acts, practices, statements and representations, respondents place in the hands of others the means and instrumentalities by and through which they mislead and deceive the public in the manner and as to the things hereinbefore alleged.

PAR. 14. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of similar courses of study and instruction.

PAR. 15. The use by respondents of false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and their failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, has had, and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true, and complete and to induce a substantial number thereof to purchase said courses of study and instruction offered by respondents by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 16. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

II

2. It is further ordered, That respondents herein present to each interested applicant or prospective student immediately prior to the commencement of any interview or sales presentation during which the purchase of or enrollment in any course of instruction offered by respondents herein is discussed or solicited a 5 in. x 7 in. card containing only the following language:

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, and having duly considered the comment filed thereafter pursuant to Section 2.34(b) of its rules, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional finding, and enters the following order:

ORDER

I

It is ordered, That The Standard Oil Company, an Ohio corporation (Sohio), its successors and assigns, do forthwith cease and desist from permitting any individual to serve on its board of directors if such individual is or would be at the same time a director of Diamond Shamrock Corporation.

II

It is further ordered, That Sohio shall, within thirty days after service of this order, and annually for a period ending five (5) years thereafter, request from each member of its board of directors a written statement which discloses the name, business, and location of operations of each other corporation of which such member is also a director, exclusive of The British Petroleum Company Limited, a United Kingdom Corporation, and any corporation in which Sohio or The British Petroleum Company Limited controls, directly or indirectly through subsidiaries, more than 50 percent of the voting stock; exclusive of any corporation which derives annual gross revenues of less than $1 million from the exploration, production, and sale of natural gas and crude petroleum and exclusive of any corporation not engaged in "commerce" as defined in Section 1 of the Clayton Act as amended or Section 4 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

If compliance with Paragraphs I and IV requires any member of Sohio's board of directors to resign or to be removed from the board of directors of Sohio or such other corporation, Sohio shall be allowed a reasonable period of time within which to take any legal or other steps which are necessary to secure compliance with this order. For purposes of this order, Sohio, The British Petroleum Company Limited and any corporation which Sohio or The British Petroleum Company Limited controls, directly or indirectly through subsidiaries, more than 50 percent of the voting stock shall not be considered competitors.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Ridgewood Realty, Inc., a corporation, and Mike A. Leprino, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts, and the implementing regulation promulgated under the Truth in Lending Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Ridgewood Realty, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Colorado, with its principal office and place of business located at 14618 W. 6th Ave., Golden, Colo.

Respondent Mike A. Leprino is an officer of corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 3. In the ordinary course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents regularly arrange for the extension of consumer credit or offer to extend or arrange for the extension of such credit, as "arrange for the extension of credit" and "consumer credit" are defined in Section 226.2 of Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

PAR. 4. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, respondents, in the ordinary course of their business as aforesaid and in connection with credit sales, have caused, and are causing, to be published, advertisements, as "credit sale" and "advertisement" are defined in Section 226.2 of Regulation Z, which advertisements aid, promote or assist directly or indirectly, the extension of other than open end credit.

PAR. 5. Respondents, in certain of the above-mentioned advertisements, have stated and are stating the amount of downpayment (in dollars and as a percentage of the sale price) or that no downpayment is required, or the amount of an instalment payment without also stating, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) of Regulation Z, all the following terms:

(a) the cash price; [the amount of the loan;]

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Kansas City Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

ALLORA, LTD., ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC. IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION AND WOOL PRODUCTS LABELING ACTS

Docket C-2705. Complaint, July 21, 1975–Decision, July 21, 1975

Consent order requiring a New York City importer of wool fabrics, among other things to discontinue false and deceptive labeling; to notify those who purchased the misbranded wool products of the fact that they were misbranded; and prohibiting the importation of wool products into the United States except upon filing bond with the Secretary of the Treasury in a sum double the value of the wool products and any duty thereon conditioned upon compliance with the Wool Products Labeling Act.

Appearances

For the Commission: Judith K. Braun.

For the respondents: Ellsworth F. Qualey, New York City.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Allora Ltd., a corporation, trading under its own name or as Allora-Tex, and Oscar Bobis, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts and the rules and regulations promulgated under the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Allora Ltd. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 450 Seventh Ave., New York, N.Y.

Individual respondent Oscar Bobis is an officer of Allora Ltd. He formulates, directs, and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

Respondents are engaged in the importation and sale of fabrics including but not limited to wool products.

PAR. 2. Respondents, now and for some time past, have imported for introduction into commerce, introduced into commerce, transported, distributed, delivered for shipment, shipped, offered for sale, and sold in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, wool products as "wool product" is defined therein.

PAR. 3. Certain of said wool products were misbranded by the respondents within the intent and meaning of Section 4(a)(1) of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, in that they were falsely and deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified with respect to the character and amount of the constituent fibers contained therein.

Among such misbranded wool products, but not limited thereto, were certain wool fabrics stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified by respondents as "30% acrylic, 25% wool, 23% cotton, 22% man made fibers," whereas, in truth and in fact, said products contained substantially different fibers and amounts of fibers than represented.

PAR. 4. Certain of said wool products were further misbranded by respondents in that they were not stamped, tagged, labeled or otherwise identified as required under the provisions of Section 4 (a)(2) of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and in the manner and form as prescribed by the rules and regulations promulgated under said Act.

Among such misbranded wool products, but not limited thereto, were wool products, namely wool fabrics, with labels on or affixed thereto, which failed to disclose the percentage of the total fiber weight of the said wool products, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 per centum of said total fiber weight, of (1) wool, (2) reprocessed wool, (3) reused wool, (4) each fiber other than wool, when said percentage by weight of such fiber was 5 per centum or more, and (5) the aggregate of all other fibers.

PAR. 5. Respondents' wool products described in "Paragraph Four" above were imported by the respondents into the United States and, as particularized in said paragraph, were not stamped, tagged, labeled or otherwise identified in accordance with the provisions of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939. The invoices of said imported wool products required by the Tariff Act of 1930 failed to set forth the information with respect to said wool products required under the provisions of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, to wit, the percentage of the total fiber weight of the said wool products, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 per centum of said total fiber weight, of (1) wool, (2) reprocessed wool, (3) reused wool, (4) each fiber other than wool, when said percentage by weight of such fiber was 5 per centum or more, and (5) the aggregate of all other fibers. The respondents did falsify the consignee's declaration provided for in said Tariff Act of 1930 insofar as it related to the above items of information enumerated in this paragraph in violation of Section 8 of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices of respondents as set forth above were, and are, in violation of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939 and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices, in commerce, under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Wool Products Labeling Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Allora Ltd., trading under its own name or as Allora-Tex, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 450 Seventh Ave., New York, N.Y.

Respondent Oscar Bobis is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the acts, practices and policies of said corporation and his address is the same as that of said corporation.

Respondents are engaged in the importation and sale of wool products including but not limited to wool fabrics.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED, That respondents Allora Ltd., a corporation, trading under its own name or as Allora-Tex, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Oscar Bobis, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, or any other device, in connection with the introduction, or importing for introduction, into commerce, or the offering for sale, sale, transportation, distribution, delivery for shipment or shipment, in commerce, of wool products, as "commerce" and "wool product" are defined in the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, do forthwith cease and desist from misbranding such products by:

1. Falsely and deceptively stamping, tagging, labeling, or otherwise identifying such products as to the character or amount of the constituent fibers contained therein.
2. Failing to securely affix to or place on, each such product a stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification showing in a clear and conspicuous manner each element of information required to be disclosed by Section 4(a)(2) of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That respondents Allora Ltd., a corporation, trading under its own name or as Allora-Tex, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Oscar Bobis, individually and as an officer of Allora Ltd., and respondents' representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, or other device, do forthwith cease and desist from importing or participating in the importation of wool products into the United States except upon filing bond with the Secretary of the Treasury in a sum double the value of said wool products and any duty thereon, conditioned upon compliance with the provisions of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That respondents notify, by delivery of a copy of this order by registered mail, each of their customers that purchased the products which gave rise to this complaint of the fact that such products were misbranded.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged, as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment, or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order to cease and desist contained herein.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Lumberjack Meats, Inc., a corporation; and Harold Abroms, individually and as an officer of said corporation, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Lumberjack Meats, Inc. is a corporation organized existing and doing business by virtue of the laws of the State of Alabama, with its office and principal place of business located at 210-26th Ave., West, Birmingham, Ala.

Respondent Harold Abroms is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondent Lumberjack Meats, Inc., is now and for some time last past has been engaged in the sale and distribution of a chicken, meat byproduct, meat, and soy protein concentrate product known as Bun Pals.

PAR. 3. Respondent Lumberjack Meats, Inc., causes the said product, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in Alabama to purchasers located in various other States of the United States. Respondent Lumberjack Meats, Inc., maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained a course of trade in said product in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. The volume of business in such commerce has been and is substantial.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents have disseminated and caused the dissemination of certain advertisements concerning the said product by the United States mails and by various means in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, including but not limited to advertisements inserted in newspapers located in various States of the United States and having interstate circulation among readers located outside the respective states of their publication, for the purpose of inducing and which were likely to induce, the purchase of said product in commerce, as "commerce" is used in Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and as a result of such newspaper advertising and the mailing of advertising copy to newspapers for publication, and the mailing of newspapers containing such advertising to out of state readers, respondents have disseminated and caused to be disseminated false advertising by United States mails within the meaning of Section 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 5. Typical of the statements and representations in such advertisements, disseminated as aforesaid, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following: [see pp. 293-298]

PAR. 6. Through the use of the above advertisements, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, respondents have represented directly or by implication that:

1. Bun Pals is an all meat product in the same sense as pork chops, boneless round, chuck roast, steak, and roast beef.
2. The price of Bun Pals is approximately one half (1/2) or less than the price of the comparative meat product.
3. Bun Pals contain more protein than boneless round, canned ham, and roast beef and as much protein as pork chops, chuck roast and steak.
4. Bun Pals contain less fat than boneless round, boneless chuck roast and steak.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact:

1. Bun Pals is not an all meat in the same sense as pork chops, boneless round, chuck roast and steak but instead the product is a combination of meat, meat byproducts, and soy protein concentrate which contains substantial quantities of non-meat ingredients.
2. The price of Bun Pals is substantially more expensive in relation to the comparative meat products than the ads depict. For example, Bun Pals are more than one half (1/2) the price of equal quantities of all comparative meat products shown in the aforementioned advertisements except steak. For the latter, the price is one third (1/3) as expensive rather than one fourth (1/4) as the ad depicts.
3. Bun Pals contain less protein than boneless round, canned ham, roast beef, pork chops, chuck roast and steak. In the instance of boneless round, the protein content of Bun Pals is less than one half (1/2) that of such product.
4. Bun Pals contain more fat than boneless round, boneless chuck roast and steak.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Six hereof, were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. Respondent, Lumberjack Meats, Inc., at all times mentioned herein, has been and is now in substantial competition with individuals, firms, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of meat, meat food products and soy concentrate products which are purchased by consumers to supply meat or a meat substitute in their diets.

PAR. 9. The use by corporate respondents of the aforesaid deceptive statements, representations and practices has had, and now has the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the mistaken belief that such statements and representations are true and complete, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of corporate respondents' product by reason of such erroneous and mistaken belief. As a result thereof, substantial trade has been and is being diverted to corporate respondents from its competitors.

PAR. 10. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Atlanta Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint making the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Representing directly or indirectly that the product "Bun Pals" or any other soy protein concentrate product is all meat or solely a meat product.

3. Representing directly or indirectly that the fat content of the product "Bun Pals" is equal to or less than that of boneless round, boneless chuck roast, and steak, or misrepresenting in any manner the fat content of respondents' products.
4. Comparing the price of any given quantity of the product "Bun Pals" or any other product with that of another product unless such price comparison is expressed in equal quantities using equivalent units whether the compared product be described in generic terms or as a particular brand.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That the individual respondent named herein shall promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, partnership or other business entity, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF MORTON-NORWICH PRODUCTS, INC., ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket C-2707. Complaint, July 21, 1975-Decision, July 21, 1975

Consent order requiring a Chicago, Ill., salt manufacturer and its advertising agency, among other things to cease failing to disclose in all advertisements for Morton Lite Salt that the product is not to be used by persons on sodium or potassium restricted diets, and misrepresenting that there is a connection between sodium intake and water retention or high blood pressure or that a reduction in sodium intake will promote or maintain good health.

Appearances

For the Commission: Walter B. Fisherow.

For the respondents: McBride, Baker, Wienke & Schlosser, Chicago, Ill. Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz, Wash., D.C., and Davis, Gilbert, Levine & Schwartz, New York City.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Morton-Norwich Products, Inc., a corporation, and Needham, Harper & Steers Advertising, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Morton-Norwich Products, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 110 N. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill.

PAR. 2. Respondent Needham, Harper & Steers Advertising, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal office and place of business located at 401 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PAR. 3. Respondent Morton-Norwich Products, Inc. is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the manufacture, advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of Morton Lite Salt, a food product consisting of equal parts of sodium chloride and potassium chloride.

PAR. 4. Respondent Needham, Harper & Steers Advertising, Inc. is now, and for some time last past has been an advertising agency for respondent Morton-Norwich Products, Inc. and has prepared and caused to be disseminated advertising material relating to Morton Lite Salt, including but not limited to the advertisements referred to herein.

PAR. 5. Respondent Morton-Norwich Products, Inc. causes Morton Lite Salt, when sold, to be transported from the place of its manufacture to purchasers located in various States of the United States. Respondent Morton-Norwich Products, Inc. maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a course of trade in said product in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of their said businesses, respondents have disseminated, and caused the dissemination of, certain advertisements concerning Morton Lite Salt by various means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, including but not limited to advertisements inserted in magazines and newspapers and by means of television broadcasts transmitted by television stations located in various States of the United States having sufficient power to carry such broadcasts across State lines, for the purpose of inducing, and which were likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of said product; and respondents have disseminated, and caused the dissemination of, advertisements concerning said product by various means, including but not limited to the aforesaid media, for the purpose of inducing, and which were likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of said product in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 7. Typically, such advertisements included the statement that Morton Lite Salt contains one half the amount of sodium of regular salt, and certain of such advertisements included the statement that said product was for use by persons who desire to or should reduce their intake of sodium. Such advertisements did not contain a warning that Morton Lite Salt should not be used by persons who are on a sodium or potassium restricted diet without the approval of a physician.

PAR. 8. Because Morton Lite Salt does contain a substantial amount of sodium (one half the amount of sodium that is contained in regular table salt), the product should not be used by persons on a sodium restricted diet unless such use is approved by a physician. Similarly, since Morton Lite Salt contains a substantial amount of potassium chloride, said product should not be used by persons on a potassium restricted diet unless approved by a physician. Therefore, a warning statement, to the effect that said product should not be used by persons on sodium or potassium restricted diets unless approved by a physician, should have been included in all such advertisements. Such a warning statement constituted a material statement, the omission of which made such advertisements false and misleading.

PAR. 9. At least one of such advertisements contained a representation to the effect that doctors and medical researchers have established a connection between sodium intake and high blood pressure or water retention and have established that, in effect, a reduction of the level of sodium intake will promote or maintain good health.

PAR. 10. In truth and in fact, while some medical authorities have suggested that there is data which apparently supports such a representation, it has not been established that there is a causal connection between sodium intake and high blood pressure or water retention, or that a reduction in the level of sodium intake will promote or maintain good health. Therefore, the representations set forth in Paragraph Nine are and were false and misleading.

PAR. 11. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury to the public and constituted, and now constitute, unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Bureau of Consumer Protection proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 (b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Morton-Norwich Products, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 110 N. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill.

Respondent Needham, Harper & Steers Advertising, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 401 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED, That respondent Morton-Norwich Products, Inc., a corporation, and respondent Needham, Harper & Steers Advertising, Inc., a corporation, their successors and assigns, either jointly or individually, and respondents' officers, agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution in or affecting commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, of Morton Lite Salt, or any product of similar composition, do forthwith cease and desist from disseminating any advertisement which:

1. Fails to clearly and conspicuously disclose, in the following words or in words of similar import, that such product is "Not To Be Used By Persons On Sodium Or Potassium Restricted Diets Unless Approved By A Physician;" or

2. makes any representation, directly or indirectly, that medical researchers or doctors have established (a) a connection between sodium intake and high blood pressure or water retention, or (b) that a reduction in the level of sodium intake will promote or maintain good health.

Nothing in this order shall be construed to prohibit respondents from disseminating any advertisement of Morton Lite Salt which:

A. Indicates that Morton Lite Salt contains one-half the sodium of regular salt; or

B. indicates that Morton Lite Salt is intended for persons (not including those on sodium or potassium restricted diets) who desire to reduce their intake of salt or sodium.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That respondents shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each officer or employee having direct responsibility for either the marketing or advertising of Morton Lite Salt.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondents, such as dissolution, assignment, or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That each respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after the effective date of the order served upon it, file with the Commission a report, in writing, signed by respondents, setting forth in detail the manner and form of their compliance with the order to cease and desist contained herein.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Kansas City Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Zodiac Construction, Ltd. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Colorado, with its office and principal place of business located at 456 S. Ironton #404, City of Aurora, State of Colorado.

Respondent Sol Dichter is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED, That respondents Zodiac Construction, Ltd., a corporation, its successors and assigns, its officers, and Sol Dichter, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives, salesmen and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with any advertisement to aid, promote or assist, directly or indirectly, any arrangement or extension of consumer credit as "consumer credit" and "advertisement" are defined in Regulation Z (12 CFR §226) of the Truth in Lending Act (Pub. L. 90-321, 15 U.S.C. §1601, et seq.), do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing in any such advertisement, directly or by implication, that no downpayment is required, the amount of the downpayment or the amount of any instalment payment, either in dollars or as a percentage, the dollar amount of any finance charge, the number of instalments or the period of repayment, or that there is no charge for credit, unless all of the following items are clearly and conspicuously stated, in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) of Regulation Z:

(a) the cash price; [the amount of the loan;]

(b) the amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;

(c) the number, amount and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended; and

(d) the amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate.

2. Stating in any advertisement the rate of a finance charge unless said rate is expressed as an annual percentage rate, using the term "annual percentage rate," as "finance charge" and "annual percentage rate" are defined in Section 226.2 and as required by Section 226.10(d)(1) of Regulation Z.

3. Failing, in any advertisement, to make all disclosures as required by Section 226.10 in the manner prescribed by Sections 226.6, 226.8 and 226.10 of Regulation Z.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in any corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

KENNECOTT COPPER CORPORATION

Docket 8765. Order, July 22, 1975

Denial of respondent's petition to reopen proceeding to consider the question of relief.

ORDER DENYING PETITION TO REOPEN PROCEEDINGS

On July 7, 1975, Kennecott Copper Corporation filed a "Petition to Reopen the Proceeding" pursuant to Section 3.72 of the Commission's Rules of Practice. The Bureau of Competition filed an "Answer in Opposition" on July 14, 1975. The arguments raised in both Petition and Answer are essentially the same as those presented before the Commission one year ago when it denied a similar petition by respondent to reopen. The Commission has again considered the arguments of petitioner and does not believe that adequate grounds have been shown to warrant reopening to consider the question of relief. The order in this matter was intended to separate Peabody from Kennecott in a way that would leave Peabody as a viable, vigorous competitor in the mining and sale of coal, as it was before its acquisition. We fully expect that Kennecott will come forth with a firm proposal as of October 1 to achieve this result, either via sale or spinoff. Accordingly,

IT IS ORDERED, That the "Petition to Reopen the Proceeding" be, and it hereby is, denied.

Commissioners Thompson and Nye dissenting.

DISSENTING STATEMENT

JULY 23, 1975

BY THOMPSON, Commissioner.

Respondent Kennecott has petitioned the Commission to reopen this matter for the purpose of receiving evidence on the question of whether, in view of certain alleged changes in the industry and in the economy at large since our divestiture order was entered and affirmed by the courts, reconsideration of that order might now be in the public interest. I believe this petition raises a number of serious issues that ought to be examined thoroughly by this Commission and thus would have granted it to the extent of ordering an administrative hearing on the relief question before one of our administrative law judges on an expedited basis, subject, however, to an agreement by respondent that no appeal would be taken from the decision rendered by the Commission on the basis of that supplementary record.

SEPARATE STATEMENT

SEPTEMBER 4, 1975

BY ENGMAN, Chairman.

In ruling on a similar petition to reopen filed by Kennecott approximately one year ago, I stated:

> Although the Commission has decided to deny the petition to reopen the Commission's order of divestiture in this matter, this action does not deny recognition of the importance of the ultimate question that will eventually confront the Commission - whether divestiture under a plan to be submitted by respondent will accomplish not only separation of Kennecott's ownership and control over Peabody, but also continuation of Peabody "as a going concern and effective competitor in the mining, production and sale of coal" as provided in the Commission's order. This question - which in my view is the crucial question underlying the issues that have been argued to us on this petition - cannot be determined now but must await completion of steps by Kennecott to develop an appropriate divestiture plan for submission to the Commission.

Nothing in the present petition causes me to believe that the situation is any different today than it was a year ago.

DISSENTING STATEMENT

SEPTEMBER 4, 1975

BY NYE, Commissioner.

I continue to believe these proceedings should be reopened for the purpose of assessing the changes in the structure of the coal industry which have occurred since the Commission filed its original order in this case over four years ago.

During just the last year, every government and private study of the national energy problem has concluded that the energy needs of the country can be met only by a massive increase in coal production.[1] The Federal Energy Administration has begun to order public utilities to convert their generating plants from oil and natural gas to coal.[2] More large oil companies and public utilities have entered the coal industry. The most recent production statistics indicate that 20 percent of the total industry production of coal was produced by firms which were either not involved in coal production, or only negligibly so, when the Commission entered its original order.

It thus appears indisputable that, since the Commission last examined the facts, the need for coal has increased dramatically, concentration in the coal industry has declined markedly, major companies have aggressively acquired and begun to exploit coal reserves, and the feared entrenchment of Peabody's dominance of the coal industry through Kennecott's ownership has not materialized.

There is no suggestion that any customer, competitor, or potential purchaser of Peabody will be prejudiced if the Commission undertakes the requested reexamination. Therefore, I find no substantial public interest to weigh against the benefit to be derived from examining the evidence concerning current developments in the coal industry. I would grant the petition to reopen.

IN THE MATTER OF

Docket 8883. Order, July 25, 1975

Denial of application of respondent General Mills, Inc., for stay of commencement of complaint counsel's deposition program pending appeal.

For the respondents: Bierbower & Rockefeller, Howrey, Simon, Baker & Murchison and Clifford, Warnke, Glass, McIlwain & Finney, Wash., D.C. Sullivan & Cromwell and Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York City. Chadwell, Kayser, Ruggles, McGee & Hastings and *Barnett P. ORDER DENYING APPLICATION OF RESPONDENT GENERAL MILLS, INC., FOR STAY OF COMMENCEMENT OF COMPLAINT COUNSEL'S DEPOSITION PROGRAM PENDING APPEAL

This matter is before us on the application of respondent General Mills, Inc., for a stay of the commencement of complaint counsel's deposition program pending appeal.

The administrative law judge, by order dated July 15, 1975, denied respondents' joint motion to nullify the law judge's order of June 19, 1975, granting complaint counsel's application for the taking of depositions. On July 18, 1975, respondents filed a joint request under Section 3.23(b) of the Commission's Rules of Practice, 16 C.F.R. §3.23(b), and on the same day, the law judge denied the application of respondent General Mills for a stay of the taking of depositions pending appeal.

The administrative law judge's order denying respondents' motion to nullify his previous order granting complaint counsel's application for the taking of depositions will be subject to interlocutory review by the Commission only if the order is certified by the judge and the Commission, in its discretion, permits the appeal. Rules of Practice Section 3.23(b), 16 C.F.R. Section 3.23(b), Missouri Portland Cement Co., 80 F.T.C. 1035 (1972).

Even if the order was subject to interlocutory review under Section 3.23(b), it would be reversible only if there was a clear abuse of discretion, e.g., Kellogg Co., Docket No. 8883, Order of May 29, 1974 Denying Applications for Review at 3, and respondent General Mills has failed to make the necessary showing.[1]

It is ordered, That the aforesaid application for a stay is denied.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION AND TRUTH IN LENDING ACTS

Docket C-2711. Complaint, July 25, 1975-Decision, July 25, 1975

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Maralco Enterprises, Inc., a corporation, New York School of Computer

[1] It is, therefore, unnecessary to decide whether the Commission has inherent power to review an interlocutory order of an administrative law judge upon the kind of showing of irreparable harm and clear abuse of discretion that might warrant the granting of extraordinary relief by a court of appeals from an interlocutory order entered by a district court.

Technology, Inc., a corporation, Education Beneficial, Inc., a corporation, Tuition Payments, Inc., a corporation, and Hyman Marcus, Bartholomew Colangeli, and Fred Rosenberg, individually and as officers of said corporations, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts and implementing regulation, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents Maralco Enterprises, Inc., New York School of Computer Technology, Inc., Education Beneficial, Inc., and Tuition Payments, Inc., are corporations organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with their principal office and place of business located at 200 W. 51st St., New York, N.Y.

Respondents Hyman Marcus, Bartholomew Colangeli, and Fred Rosenberg, are individuals and officers of the corporate respondents. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of the corporations, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their business address is the same as that of the corporate respondents.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale and sale of courses of instruction in computer programming to the public.

COUNT I

Alleging violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference herein as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, and for the purpose of inducing prospective students to enroll in their courses of instruction, respondents engage in the advertising of said courses of instruction in newspapers of interstate circulation, and the sale of said courses to consumers located in various States of the United States. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents also cause pamphlets, brochures, checks and other documents and communications pertaining to said courses to be transmitted by the United States mails and other means in commerce. Respondents maintain, and at all times mentioned herein, have maintained, a substantial course of trade in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing prospective students to enroll in their courses of instruction, respondents have made statements, both specific and implied, in advertising and promotional material, with respect to the ability, aptitude and training required to become a computer programmer or systems analyst, employment opportunities for graduates of the school, the nature and reliability of the trial period, pay levels for graduates of the school, and the method of instruction at the school. The following are typical and illustrative of the aforesaid statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof:

(b) A vital need exists for competent men and women to fill the personnel shortage created by the expanded use of computer equipment.

(c) In Government and Industry trained programmers are in demand.

(d) Individual instruction tailored to your ability.

(e) Among the computers that you will study are included: IBM 1401 - IBM 1440 - IBM 360 - COBOL - BAL - RPG - Honeywell 200 NCR 315 - RCA Spectra 70 - UNIVAC 418.

(f) Become a Computer Programmer and Systems Analyst.

(g) The NYSOCT course is one of the fastest ways to success.

(h) Trained personnel are in demand.

(i) In order to find out for yourself if you are qualified and suited for this field, we offer you a Free Trial Period of one full week* * *you will see for yourself whether you like this work and whether you have the ability to do programming.

(k) College degree not required.

In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing prospective students to enroll in their courses of instruction, respondents have made statements, both specific and implied, directly to said prospective students in the oral sales presentations made by their sales persons and other representatives. The following are typical and illustrative of the aforesaid statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof:

(b) Graduates of respondents' school who do not have a college degree can readily find employment as computer programmers.

(c) A substantial number or percentage of the recent graduates of respondents' courses of instruction earn a salary in excess of $150 per week.

(d) In respondents' courses of instruction, students will be taught a significant number of occupationally useful programming languages.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the aforementioned statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, respondents represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. The courses of instruction offered by respondents qualify graduates for employment in the field of data processing as computer programmers and systems analysts.

2. Requirements such as a college education are not necessary for the placement of graduates of said courses in any position in the field of electronic data processing for which said students were trained.

3. There is a reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be a significant or substantial need or demand for trained people in the field of computer programming which said training is designed to meet.

4. Graduates of said courses of instruction are virtually assured of placement in positions for which they have been trained.

5. A substantial number or percentage of the recent graduates of said courses of instruction earn a salary in excess of $150 per week.

6. In said courses of instruction, students will be taught a significant number of occupationally useful programming languages.

7. In their said courses of instruction, respondents provide individual instruction adapted to the needs and ability of each student.

8. The one week free trial period offered by respondents is for the purpose of allowing the prospective student to determine his qualifications and suitability for the field of computer programming.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. Said courses of instruction do not qualify students for employment in the field of data processing as computer programmers or systems analysts.

2. In a substantial number of instances a college degree is required to secure a position, for which training was offered, in the field of electronic data processing.

3. Respondents had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be an urgent need or demand for trained people in the field of computer programming which respondents' training is designed to meet. The only reasonable basis for such claims would be competent and reliable statistical evidence obtained prior to the making of such statements.

4. Respondents had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that graduates of their courses of instruction are virtually assured of placement in positions for which they have been trained.

5. Respondents had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that a substantial number or percentage of the recent graduates of said courses of instruction earn a salary in excess of $150 per week.

6. Respondents do not teach a significant number of occupationally useful programming languages. In fact, a substantial amount of said courses consist of instruction in obsolete programming languages of no occupational usefulness to graduates.

7. Respondents do not provide individual instruction adapted to the needs of each student.

8. The one week free trial period offered by respondents is not for the purpose of allowing the prospective student to determine his qualifications and suitability for the field of computer programming, but instead serves as an extension of the sales presentation given by respondents. During this trial period respondents' instructors attempt to persuade prospective students to enroll by repeating to said prospective students representations similar to those set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five above.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business, and for the purpose of inducing prospective students to enroll in their said courses of instruction, respondents have posted in their place of business photographs of graduates of their school who have succeeded in securing employment as computer programmers, along with their names, addresses, places of employment and starting salaries. Such photographs and accompanying information have been shown to prospective students during the course of the initial sales presentation.

Said photographs and accompanying information have also been included in direct mail flyers sent by respondents to prospective students. On these flyers is the following statement: "The pictures in this brochure are of recent graduates of our school.* * *"

PAR. 8. By and through the use of the aforesaid photographs and accompanying information, and oral statements made directly to prospective students, respondents have represented that they have had significant success within the recent past in placing their graduates in positions as programmers, and at salaries in the range indicated in said photographs.

PAR. 9. In truth and in fact:

Respondents have, in the recent past, been unable to place a significant number of their students in positions as programmers. A significant number of the photographs used in the aforesaid advertising material are of persons who graduated from said courses of instruction in 1966, 1967 and 1968.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Seven and Eight hereof were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 10. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing prospective students to enroll in their courses of instruction, respondents have represented directly to said prospective students in the oral sales presentations made by their sales persons and other representatives, that said courses of instruction will serve as the equivalent of practical programming experience, and that, therefore, graduates of said courses can represent to prospective employers that they are qualified and experienced programmers, thus allowing them to begin work with the status of experienced programmers and not as programmer trainees, or permitting them to obtain jobs which require programming experience.

PAR. 11. In truth and in fact:

Said courses of instruction do not serve as the equivalent of practical programming experience, and graduates of said courses cannot expect to begin work with the status of experienced programmers.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Ten hereof, were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 12. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents have attempted to place and have placed graduates of said courses in positions as computer programmers by suggesting to these graduates that they present resumes containing false information concerning job experience to prospective employers. Respondents have provided graduates with such resumes and have aided in their preparation. Respondents advise their graduates to include in the aforesaid resumes that they have, in the past, worked as computer programmers for substantial periods of time for fictitious companies. Respondents suggest further that a telephone number be given for the firm listed, that number being the telephone number of respondents' place of business. In the event that a prospective employer attempts to verify the aforesaid information, graduates are informed that such verification will be provided by respondents. In truth and in fact, much of the information suggested by respondents is false.

The acts and practices as set forth in Paragraph Twelve hereof were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 13. Respondents offered for sale courses of instruction intended to prepare graduates thereof for entry-level employment as computer operators, computer programmers or computer technicians without disclosing in advertising or through their sales representatives: (1) the percentage of recent graduates of each school for each course offered, that were able to obtain employment in the positions for which they were trained; (2) the employers that hired any such recent graduates for each course offered; (3) the initial salary any such recent graduates received for each course offered; and (4) the percentage of recent enrollees of each school for each course offered that have failed to complete their course of instruction. Knowledge of such facts would be an indication of the probability of graduating from respondents' courses and would indicate the possibility of securing future employment upon graduating and the nature of such employment. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose material facts, which if known to a consumer would be likely to affect his or her consideration of whether or not to purchase such courses of instruction. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 14. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of courses covering the same or similar subjects.

PAR. 15. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading, unfair or deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices, and their failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, have had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and complete, and to induce a substantial number thereof to purchase respondents' courses by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 16. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violations of the Truth in Lending Act, and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference herein as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 17. In the ordinary course of their business as aforesaid, respondents regularly extend consumer credit and arrange for the extension of consumer credit, as "consumer credit" and "arrange for the extension of consumer credit" are defined in Section 226.2(f)(k) of Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

PAR. 18. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, in the ordinary course of their business as aforesaid, and in connection with their credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Section 226.2(n) of Regulation Z, respondents have caused and are causing their customers to enter into contracts, termed by them as "enrollment agreements," for the sale of respondents' services. On these contracts, respondents specify a particular amount as the cost of their service, which they term "tuition." The full amount of this tuition is, however, charged only to those who elect to pay on an installment basis. Students who pay the entire amount on or before a specified date are given a discount from the tuition which in most cases equals 10 percent.

On these contracts, respondents provide certain consumer credit cost disclosures. Respondents do not provide any other consumer credit information.

PAR. 19. By and through the use of these contracts, and in connection with their credit sales, respondents:

1. Offer a reduction from the cash price to those who elect to meet their obligation on or before a specified date, and fail to disclose, as required by Section 226.8(o)(i) of Regulation Z:

a. The rate of discount and the date by which or period within which the discount may be taken;

b. The amount of the discount, designated as a "finance charge," using that term;

c. The "annual percentage rate," using that term.

2. Fail to accurately disclose the "cash price," using that term, as required by Section 226.8(c)(i), computed in accordance with Section 226.8(o)(7) of Regulation Z.

3. Fail to use the term "cash downpayment" to describe the amount of the downpayment in money, as required by Section 226.8(c)(2) of Regulation Z.

4. Fail to use the term "unpaid balance of cash price," to describe the difference between the cash price and the total downpayment, as required by Section 226.8(c)(3) of Regulation Z.

5. Fail to use the term "amount financed" to describe the amount of credit extended, as required by Section 226.8(c)(7) of Regulation Z.

6. Fail to use the term "total of payments" to describe the sum of the payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness, as required by Section 226.8(b)(3) of Regulation Z.

7. Fail to use the term "deferred payment price" to describe the sum of the cash price and the finance charge, as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(ii) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 20. In the ordinary course of their business as aforesaid, respondents have caused to be published advertisements of their courses of instruction, as "advertisement" is defined in Regulation Z. These advertisements aid, promote or assist, directly or indirectly, extensions of consumer credit in connection with the sale of these courses. By and through the use of the advertisements, respondents state the period of payment which can be arranged in connection with a consumer credit transaction, without also stating all of the following items in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) thereof:

1. The cash price;
2. The amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required as applicable;
3. The number, amount and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if credit is extended;
4. The amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate;
5. The deferred payment price.

PAR. 21. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failures to comply with the provisions of Regulation Z constitute violations of that Act and, pursuant to Section 108(c) thereof, respondents have thereby violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondents Maralco Enterprises, Inc., New York School of Computer Technology, Inc., Education Beneficial, Inc., and Tuition Payments, Inc., are corporations organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with their principal office and place of business located at 200 W. 51st St., New York, N.Y.

Respondents Hyman Marcus, Bartholomew Colangeli and Fred Rosenberg are officers of the corporate respondents. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of the corporations, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their business address is the same as that of the corporate respondents.

ORDER

I

It is ordered, That respondents Maralco Enterprises, Inc., New York School of Computer Technology, Inc., Education Beneficial, Inc., and Tuition Payments, Inc., corporations, their successors and assigns, and their officers, and Hyman Marcus, Bartholomew Colangeli, and Fred Rosenberg, individually and as officers of said corporations, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, or under any other name, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, or sale of courses of instruction in electronic data processing, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Failing to send by certified mail, return receipt requested, to each person that shall contract with respondents for the sale of any course of instruction, a notice which shall disclose the following information and none other:

(b) Paragraphs containing the information set forth below, which shall be compiled and updated at least once every month. Such information shall be computed separately for each course of instruction offered by respondents at each school, location or facility.

(1) A paragraph as follows: "The information below relates to the (name of vocational school). The placement rate is the percentage of graduating students who obtained employment within three months of their graduation, in positions for which they were trained by this school."

(2) The "Placement Rate," using this term, to be determined as follows:

A. Respondents shall ascertain whether each graduate has obtained employment within three months of graduation in a position for which respondents' course has prepared him. If such employment has been obtained, respondents shall further ascertain the name of the employer, the position and the starting salary obtained by the graduate.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 7 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Docket 8905. Complaint, Dec. 1, 1972-Decision, July 28, 1975.

Consent order requiring a New York City department store organization, among other things to divest itself of all stocks, assets, properties, etc., which it acquired in 1972, comprising Ayr-Way Stores, Inc.

For the Commission: Martin A. Rosen, Peter J. Brickfield, and David B. Loken.

For the respondents: W.S. Jackson, Milbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy and Theodore J. Carlson, Gould & Wilkie, New York City. Abe Krash, Arnold & Porter, Wash., D. C.

Complaint

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Associated Dry Goods Corporation has violated the provisions of Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18) through its acquisition of L.S. Ayres and Company, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, issues this complaint, stating its charges as follows:

I. Definitions

1. For purposes of this complaint, the following definitions shall apply:

(a) "Department stores," as referred to herein, includes retail establishments normally employing 25 people or more, having sales of apparel and soft goods combined amounting to 20 percent or more of total sales and engaged in selling each of the following lines of merchandise:

(i) Furniture, home furnishings, appliances, radio and TV sets;
(ii) A general line of apparel; and
(iii) Household linens and dry goods.

For establishments classified as department stores, sales of each of the lines listed above must be less than 80 percent of total sales. However, an establishment with total sales of $5 million or more is classified as a department store even if sales of one of the merchandise lines described above exceed the maximum percent of total sales, provided that the combined sales of the other two groups is $500,000 or more.

This definition corresponds to Bureau of Census Industry Classification No. 531. Both discount department stores and conventional department stores (including, as to both categories, chain store operations) fall within such definition; the essential difference between these two types of department stores being that the discount department stores utilize mostly self service techniques and operate at a lower gross margin of profit than most conventional department stores and, as a consequence, compete primarily as to price.

(b) "GMAF stores," as used herein, refers to all retail establishments included in the following Bureau of Census Major Industry Group and Industry Classifications.

Census Number	Descriptions
Classification #531	Department stores
Major Industry Group #56	Other stores primarily engaged in the sale of apparel.
Classification #533	Limited price variety stores
Classification #539	General merchandise stores, dry goods stores and sewing and needlework stores.
Major Industry Group #57	Furniture, home furnishings, appliances and equipment stores.

(c) The "Louisville Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area" is comprised of Jefferson County, Kentucky and Clark and Floyd Counties, Indiana.

(d) The "Evansville Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area" is comprised of Vanderburgh and Warrick Counties, Indiana and Henderson County, Kentucky.

(e) The "Lexington Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area" is comprised of Fayette County, Kentucky.

II. Associated Dry Goods Corporation

2. Associated Dry Goods Corporation (Associated) is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, with its principal office located at 417 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

3. Associated is one of the largest department store organizations in the United States, with net sales during the fiscal year ended Jan. 29, 1972, of approximately $849 million. Prior to the instant acquisition it operated 15 store divisions, each consisting of a main store and-with one exception-one or more branch stores, located in 17 states and the District of Columbia. Altogether, the 15 divisions operated a total of 86 stores, occupying in the aggregate approximately 16,904,600 square feet of floor area. New stores and enlargements nearing completion and expected to open in 1972 will provide an additional 878,000 square feet of floor area.

4. Each of Associated's store divisions, and their constituent stores, are major retail institutions in the markets in which they are located. Nine of the 15 store divisions are the result of a series of acquisitions of major department store operations consummated since 1955, including: J.W. Robinson Co. (Southern California), Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co. (Upstate New York), Stix, Baer & Fuller (Missouri), The Denver Dry Goods Company (Colorado), Joseph Horne Co. (Western Pennsylvania), The H.S. Pogue Company (Southwestern Ohio), Goldwaters (Phoenix, Arizona), Erie Dry Goods Company (Erie, Pennsylvania) and The Diamond (West Virginia). A major portion of Associated's business, in terms of square footage of floor area, sales volume and geographic areas of operations, is attributable to these acquisitions.

5. Associated does business in the Louisville, Lexington and Evansville Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas (SMSA's) through its Stewart Dry Goods Company division (Stewart's). Stewart's operates two department stores, its main store, and a branch, in the Louisville SMSA, two branch department stores in the Lexington SMSA and a single branch department store in the Evansville SMSA.

6. The two Stewart's department stores in the Louisville SMSA, combined, have 715,500 square feet of floor area and had combined sales of approximately $27 million in 1971. Stewart's is the leading department store operation in the Louisville market in terms of floor area and the second ranking department store operation and GMAF store operation in terms of sales volume.

7. The Stewart's branch department store in Evansville has 134,400 square feet of floor area and had sales of approximately $4.7 million in 1971. It is the second largest individual department store in the Evansville SMSA in terms of floor area and ranks fourth among individual department stores in sales volume. Stewart's has the fifth ranking department store operation in the Evansville SMSA, in terms of sales, and is the fifth ranked GMAF store operator in that market.

8. Associated is, and has been, engaged in "commerce" within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

III. L.S. Ayres and Company

9. Prior to its acquisition by Associated Dry Goods Corporation on or about Apr. 20, 1972, L.S. Ayres and Company (Ayres) had been a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office located at 1 W. Washington St., Indianapolis, Ind.

10. Ayres was the leading independent department store organization in the State of Indiana, with net sales during the fiscal year ended Jan. 29, 1972, of approximately $213 million. It operated 30 conventional and discount department stores and 12 apparel specialty shops in various metropolitan markets in the States of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Kentucky, and a wholesale furniture business in Indianapolis, Ind. Ayres' department stores occupied in the aggregate approximately 3,867,000 square feet of floor area. New stores and enlargements nearing completion and expected to open in 1972 will provide an additional 271,000 square feet of floor area.

11. L.S. Ayres and Company was founded in 1872 and assumed its present name in 1874. Prior to 1958, substantially all of the company's operations were conducted in its main department store in downtown Indianapolis, Ind. Since then the company has undertaken an extensive expansion program. In 1958, it opened its first conventional department store branch, and has since opened four other such branches and acquired five additional conventional department stores. In 1961, it opened its first discount department store, and has since opened 19 additional similar stores. In 1968, it opened the first of its apparel specialty shops. Eleven additional similar shops have since been established. The substantial growth of Ayres as a department store operator and GMAF store operator has been accomplished preponderantly through internal expansion.

12. Ayres was doing business in the Louisville, Lexington and Evansville SMSA's at the time the instant acquisition was consummated. Its initial entry into these markets was accomplished through the opening of two discount department stores in Evansville in the mid 1960's. Its most recent store opening in these markets was the establishment of a specialty apparel shop in Lexington in August 1971, representing its initial entry into that market.

13. In the Louisville SMSA, Ayres was operating (and Associated now operates) two conventional department stores, two discount department stores and an apparel specialty shop. Two additional discount department stores are scheduled for opening in August 1972. The conventional stores, representing Ayres' initial entry into the Louisville market, were acquired late in 1969. The apparel specialty shop was opened in 1970 and the two existing discount department stores were opened in 1971.

14. The four department stores formerly operated by Ayres in the Louisville SMSA, combined, have approximately 328,000 square feet of floor area and had combined sales of approximately $16 million during 1971. In terms of square footage of floor area, they made Ayres the third largest department store operation in the Louisville market. Upon the opening of the two additional discount department stores, in August 1972 Ayres would have become the second largest department store operation in Louisville in terms of floor area, exceeded only by Stewart's. With regard to sales volume, Ayres was the fifth ranking department store operator and the eighth ranking GMAF store operator in the Louisville SMSA. With the opening of additional stores, and increased consumer familiarity with and acceptance of the Ayres name, Ayres' market share and market rank as a department store operator and GMAF store operator in the Louisville SMSA and market rank could have been expected to increase appreciably.

15. The two department stores in the Evansville SMSA formerly operated by Ayres (and presently operated by Associated) have 176,000 combined square feet of floor area and had combined sales of approximately $9.5 million during 1971. Ayres had the second largest department store operation in the Evansville market in terms of floor area. With regard to sales, it was the third ranking department store operator and GMAF store operator in said market.

16. Ayres was engaged in "commerce" within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

IV. The Acquisition

17. On or about Apr. 20, 1972, Associated acquired the assets of L.S. Ayres and Company, consisting of all of the stock of Ayres' wholly owned operating subsidiaries, in exchange for common stock of Associated having a market value on the above date of approximately $80 million. The Associated stock was then distributed to Ayres' shareholders and Ayres was dissolved as a corporate entity.

V. Nature of Trade and Commerce

A. Generally

18. GMAF stores comprise the leading group of retail operations in the United States, with a sales volume approaching $100 billion in 1970. GMAF store sales represent approximately 25 percent of all retail sales in the United States.

19. Department stores are the leading component within the GMAF store group, accounting for approximately 38 percent of GMAF store sales, as of 1970. Department stores are the third most important group of retail stores in the United States, exceeded in sales volume only by grocery stores and automotive dealers. Their national sales volume of approximately $38.5 billion in 1970 represented over 10 percent of all retail sales in the country. The percentage of all retail sales accounted for by department store sales has, moreover, been rising in recent years.

20. Department stores constitute a distinct line of commerce, recognized as such by the consuming public, the trade, and agencies and organizations which gather and disseminate information on retailing as a distinct line of commerce.

21. The department store industry has been subject to a significant and continuing merger trend in recent years, and is substantially and increasingly dominated by multi-unit organizations. A number of leading multi-unit organizations are currently subject to Federal Trade Commission consent orders in connection with previous acquisitions and mergers.

B. Louisville, Evansville and Other Markets

22. Department store sales in the Louisville SMSA totalled approximately $270 million in 1971, and GMAF store sales totalled approximately $520 million. Associated's 1971 sales through its two Louisville department stores were approximately $27 million. Ayres' 1971 department store sales in the Louisville SMSA were approximately $16 million. In addition, Ayres' specialty apparel shop had total 1971 sales of approximately $200 thousand in said market. These sales represent the following approximate shares of 1971 sales in the respective lines of commerce in the Louisville SMSA.

	Associated	Ayres	Combined
Department stores	10.1%	5.9%	16.0%
GMAF stores	5.2%	3.1%	8.3%

Prior to the instant acquisition, Associated ranked second in sales among department stores and among GMAF stores in said market. Following the acquisition, Associated ranks first in both lines of commerce.

With regard to existing concentration, prior to the acquisition the four leading sellers in the Louisville SMSA accounted for approximately 41.3 percent of department store sales and 22.8 percent of GMAF store sales. The eight leading sellers accounted for approximately 64.3 percent of department stores sales and 38.3 percent of GMAF store sales. Following the acquisition such figures are approximately as follows:

	Top 4	Top 8
Department stores	47.3%	68.2%
GMAF stores	25.9%	40.7%

23. Department store sales in the Evansville SMSA totalled approximately $80 million in 1971, while GMAF store sales totalled approximately $158 million. Associated's 1971 department store sales in said market totalled approximately $4.7 million. Ayres' 1971 total department store sales in the Evansville SMSA were approximately $9.6 million. In addition, Ayres' specialty apparel shop had total 1971 sales of approximately $180 thousand in said market. These sales represent the following approximate shares of 1971 sales in the respective lines of commerce in the Evansville SMSA.

	Associated	Ayres	Combined
Department stores	5.9%	12.1%	18.0%
GMAF stores	3.0%	6.1%	9.1%

Prior to the instant acquisition, Associated ranked fifth in sales among department stores and GMAF stores in said market. Following the acquisition, Associated ranks third in both lines of commerce.

With regard to existing concentration, prior to the acquisition the four leading sellers in the Evansville SMSA accounted for approximately 71.5% of department store sales and 38.5% of GMAF store sales. The eight leading sellers accounted for approximately 47.7% of GMAF store sales. Following the acquisition such figures are approximately as follows:

	Top 4	Top 8
GMAF stores	41.4%	48.8%

24. In addition to competition between Associated and Ayres in the Louisville and Evansville SMSA's, the two companies are potential significant competitors in a number of other metropolitan areas in or near the midwestern United States, including, for example, Indianapolis, Ind., Dayton, Ohio and Lexington, Ky. Initial actual competition in the Lexington SMSA commenced in 1971, with the establishment of Ayres' specialty apparel shop. Associated's Stewart's division opened an additional branch department store in Lexington in May 1972, located in the same shopping center as Ayres' recently established apparel shop.

VI. Effects of the Acquisition

25. The effect of the acquisition of Ayres by Associated may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the department store industry and/or the GMAF store industry, throughout the United States or in certain sections thereof. In particular, the effects of such violation have been and may be the following, among others:

(a) Actual and potential competition between Associated and Ayres in the department store industry and/or the GMAF store industry has been eliminated, prevented or lessened in the Louisville and Evansville SMSA's.

(b) Potential competition between Associated and Ayres in the department store industry and/or the GMAF store industry has been eliminated, prevented or lessened in other metropolitan areas in or near the midwestern United States.

(c) Associated, a significant competitive factor in the department store industry and the GMAF store industry in the Louisville and Evansville SMSA's, has eliminated Ayres as another significant competitive factor in such markets.

(d) Concentration in the department store industry and the GMAF store industry will be preserved and increased in the Louisville and Evansville SMSA's, in other metropolitan areas in or near the midwestern United States and throughout the United States.

VII. Violation Charged

26. The effect of Associated's acquisition of Ayres may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §18), as more fully described in Paragraph 25, above.

DECISION AND ORDER

Respondent and complaint counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, and admission by respondent of all jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted it, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days having duly considered the comment filed thereafter pursuant to Section 2.34(b) of its rules;

Now, in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 3.25(d) of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Associated Dry Goods Corporation is a corporation, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, with its principal office and place of business located at 417 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of this proceeding and of the respondent, and this proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

I

Respondent shall, as soon as possible and in no event later than two years from the effective date of this order, divest all of the assets, properties, stores, good will, rights, privileges and interests of whatever nature, real, personal, tangible and intangible (subject to liabilities and to the other provisions of this order) comprising Ayr-Way Stores, Inc., a division of respondent Associated. Divestiture shall include but shall not be limited to the Ayr-Way stores and warehouse listed in the schedule attached hereto as Exhibit A and all Ayr-Way facilities opened after Dec. 1, 1974, and prior to divestiture.

Respondent may, but shall not be required to divest the names, trademarks, service names, service marks, or logos "Ayr-Way" or "Ayr-Way Stores, Inc." Nothing in this order shall be deemed to require the divestiture of respondent of the names, trademarks, service names, service marks, or logos "Associated Dry Goods Company," "Ayres," "L.S. Ayres" or "L.S. Ayres and Company, Inc.," or to require the divestiture of any other assets relating to the business of Associated Dry Goods Corporation or L.S. Ayres and Company, Inc.

Divestiture shall be in a manner which preserves the assets and business of Ayr-Way Stores, Inc. as a going concern and fully effective competitor.

In the event that respondent elects to divest itself of the assets or capital stock of Ayr-Way Stores, Inc. by a sale of such assets or capital stock other than by means of a public offering of capital stock which is registered pursuant to the Securities Act of 1933, the acquirer or acquirers shall be approved in advance by the Commission. Nothing in this order shall be deemed to preclude divestiture to a firm which is engaged in operating department stores or GMAF stores, as defined by the Complaint, if such acquirer is otherwise acceptable to the Commission. Respondent shall not knowingly sell, divest, or otherwise transfer, directly or indirectly, any assets or stock of Ayr-Way Stores, Inc. to any person (other than an underwriter or selling dealer) who is at the time of the transfer the beneficial owner of more than two (2) percent of the outstanding stock of Associated.

If divestiture has not been effected within the two-year period provided by this order, the Commission, on request submitted at least 30 days prior to the expiration of the period shall grant respondent an opportunity to file a written submission which it will consider before issuing any further order or orders which may be deemed appropriate.

II

Associated or its subsidiaries may be obligated on the effective date of this order as lessee, guarantor or otherwise with respect to leases pertaining to Ayr-Way stores, its land or buildings, and other obligations of Ayr-Way. Associated will use its good faith efforts to obtain releases of such obligations in connection with the divestiture. In the event that Associated is unable to obtain such releases, the divestiture herein provided shall be deemed to have been accomplished notwithstanding the continuance of any such obligations on the part of Associated, Provided, That at the time of divestiture the acquiring entity assumes responsibility for the operation of the divested facilities; and Provided further, That the continuance of any such obligation on the part of Associated does not give rise to any influence or control, on the part of Associated in, over or with respect to the operations by said entity of the facilities divested.

In the event of default by the acquiring entity with respect to any such lease or other obligation upon which Associated may remain obligated, Associated shall be entitled, without being deemed to have violated any provisions of this order, to take whatever action may be necessary with respect to the defaulted facility or facilities to hold itself harmless from the consequences of any such default or defaults, including the right to repossess and to reoperate any such retail facility or facilities the lease of which is in default, Provided, That Associated notifies the Commission within 48 hours of taking such action, and Associated shall redivest itself of any such retail facilities so repossessed within one year from the date of repossession unless a longer period is approved by the Commission, or unless the Commission approves the continued operation by Associated of any such facility.

Associated shall not utilize the names, trademarks, service names, service marks, or logos "Ayr-Way" or "Ayr-Way Stores, Inc.," in the course of any retail business operated by Associated for a period of at least two years from the date of the divestiture.

III

(1) Pending divestiture, respondent shall make every reasonable effort to maintain and preserve the assets and business of Ayr-Way Stores, Inc. in good operating condition with such replacements and additions and such effective overall organization as may be necessary to divest Ayr-Way Stores, Inc. as a viable competitive entity; Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall be deemed to require respondent to continue to operate any store which has become so unprofitable that sound business judgment requires its closing or which is rendered inoperative as a result of force majeure or other event beyond the control of respondent.

(2) Whether the operation of a particular store has become so unprofitable during the pendency of divestiture that sound business judgment requires its closing shall be determined on the basis that such operation shall have yielded an aggregate operating loss during the last previous two calendar years, taken together. An "operating loss" occurs when the total operating revenues of a store fail to cover its total reasonable operating costs. "Operating costs" shall not include taxes on net income or any provision for the general and administrative overhead of L.S. Ayres and Company, Inc. or Associated Dry Goods Corporation. Other general and administrative expenses, provision for doubtful accounts and inventory adjustments shall be deemed to be reasonable if they do not exceed by more than one-third Associated Dry Goods' average for stores of similar size. Corrections to year-end statements and inventory shall be made in accordance with the methods and procedure used by Ayr-Way Stores, Inc. for the two years prior to the making of corrections.

(3) The judgment of respondent that a particular store should be closed prior to divestiture shall be communicated in writing to the Commission at least 30 days before the proposed closing, together with a full statement of (a) the reasons for such closing; (b) in case unprofitability is alleged, the store's sales and profitability history; (c) respondent's plans, if any, for the disposition of the store's assets, the consideration to be received therefor and the identity of proposed transferees so far as then known; and (d) such other information, including production of and/or access to original accounting records, as may be required for consideration of the proposed closing.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within ninety (90) days from the date of service of this order, and every one hundred eighty (180) days thereafter until the divestiture required by this Order has been completed submit in writing to the Commission, a report setting forth its plans, actions and progress in complying with the divestiture required by this order and such other reports related to the divestiture as may, from time to time, be requested by the Commission.

IN THE MATTER OF

SAXONY POOLS, INC., ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket 8962. Complaint Apr. 19, 1974-Decision, July 28, 1975*

Consent order requiring a Linden, N.J., seller and distributor of swimming pools, among other things to cease using bait and switch tactics; misrepresenting prices; misrepresenting their product as "maintenance free;" furnishing false or misleading guarantees.

Appearances

For the Commission: John A. Crowley and Alan F. Rubinstein.

For the respondents: Edward B. Dreskin, Newark, N.J., and Edwin S. Rockefeller, Bierbower & Rockefeller, Wash., D.C.

COMPLAINT*

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Saxony Pools, Inc., a corporation, and Simon Sax, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1.* Respondent Saxony Pools, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business located at 416 E. Elizabeth Ave., Linden, N.J.

Respondent Simon Sax is the president of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is 45 Hassa St., Linden, N.J.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents cause advertisements designed to secure leads to potential purchasers of swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products to be placed in various newspapers and other publications. The respondents are responsible for the content of said advertisements.

* Reported as amended by the administrative law judge's order of Aug. 23, 1974, to reflect that there have been changes in the name and address of the corporate respondent and in the address of the individual respondent.

PAR. 4. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents sell and distribute the aforementioned swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products by causing said swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products to be shipped from the places of business of their various suppliers in the United States to purchasers at retail in States other than the States from which such shipments originate.

There is now, and has been, at all times mentioned herein, a substantial and continuous course of trade in said swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of their business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products, respondents have made statements and representations with respect thereto in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation, of which the following are typical and illustrative, but not all inclusive:

> Low Low Pre-Season Priced! $499 Completely Installed
> Only $599 Completely Installed
> Unbelievably Priced from ONLY $599 Completely Installed
> NEVER NEEDS MAINTENANCE

PAR. 6. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid and for the purpose of inducing the sale of their products, respondents, their representatives, agents or employees have made, and are now making oral statements and representations to the effect that respondents' products are fully guaranteed for a period of ten years and that customers will receive a lifetime filter with their pool and that one of respondents' pools has been advertised in a national magazine at a price of $5,000 and respondents' lower price for said pool is a special price and that the pools of some customers will be used as "demonstrators."

PAR. 7. By and through the use of the aforesaid statements and representations and others of similar import and meaning, but not specifically set out herein, separately and in connection with oral statements and representations of their salesmen or representatives, respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

1. The offers set out in their advertisements are bona fide offers to sell swimming pools of the kind therein described and on the terms and conditions stated.

2. Their advertised offer of a pool for $499 is a special offer made only during the "pre-season" period.

3. Respondents' pools are maintenance free or will not require periodic inspection or servicing to remain in useable condition.

4. Some of the swimming pools sold by respondents are fully guaranteed for a period of ten years.

5. The filter provided with respondents' pools is a "Lifetime Filter" without qualification as to what period is covered by the term lifetime.

6. One of respondents' pools has been advertised in a nationally distributed magazine at a price of $5,000 and, therefore, respondents' customers are being offered a bargain or special price for said pool which would effect a savings amounting to the difference between the nationally advertised price and the price at which the pool is being sold.

7. The pools of certain of respondents' customers will be used for the purpose of demonstrating respondents' pool and as a result of such use, said customers will receive a discount from the purchase price of the pool or will receive a referral fee or monetary allowance for each pool sale resulting therefrom.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact:

1. The offers set out in respondents' advertisements are not bona fide offers to sell swimming pools of the kind therein described at the prices or on the terms and conditions stated but are made for the purpose of obtaining leads to persons interested in the purchase thereof. After obtaining such leads, individual respondent Simon Sax or respondents' salesmen or representatives call upon such persons and disparage respondents' advertised swimming pools and otherwise discourage the purchase thereof and attempt to sell and frequently do sell different and more expensive swimming pools.

2. The advertised offer of a $499 pool is not a special offer made only during the "pre-season" period. Said pool is advertised regularly at the represented price and on the terms and conditions therein stated.

3. Respondents' pools are not maintenance free. In fact, they require such maintenance as is usual and customary for swimming pools.

4. Respondents' swimming pools are not warranted in every respect without limitations or conditions for a period of ten years or any other period of time. Such warranty or guarantee as may be provided by respondents is subject to numerous terms, conditions and limitations with respect to the duration of the warranty or guarantee and fails to set forth the nature and extent of the warranty or guarantee, the identity of the warrantor or guarantor and the manner in which the warrantor or guarantor will perform thereunder.

5. The "Lifetime" filter provided with respondents' swimming pools is not guaranteed for a period denominated as a lifetime. The filter is guaranteed by the filter manufacturer for a five year period with a pro rata share of the repair or replacement cost being borne by the purchaser after the first year.

6. Respondents have not sold their pool for $5,000, but use this price to mislead potential customers into the belief that they are receiving a special or discount price. In fact respondents do not have a regular selling price for this pool; the price for which the pool is sold is often substantially below $5,000 and varies from purchaser to purchaser depending upon the resistance of the particular customer.

7. After the installation of respondents' swimming pool is completed, the purchaser's pool will not, in a substantial number of instances, be used for demonstration or advertising purposes by respondents. As a result of allowing, or agreeing to allow their pools to be used as models, purchasers are not granted reduced prices, nor do they receive allowances, discounts, commissions or referral fees.

Therefore, the statements and representations, as set forth in Paragraphs Five, Six and Seven hereof, were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in competition, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of swimming pools and other merchandise of the same general kind and nature as sold by respondents.

PAR. 10. The use by the respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices had had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' swimming pools and other merchandise by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 11. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents were and are to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore issued its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereof with violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the respondents having been served with a copy of that complaint; and

The Commission having withdrawn the matter from adjudication for the purpose of considering settlement by the entry of a consent order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as set forth in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Saxony Pools, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business located at 416 E. Elizabeth Ave., Linden, N.J.

Respondent Simon Sax is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his business address is the same as that of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Saxony Pools, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers and Simon Sax, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, distribution or installation of swimming pools or any home improvement product, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using any advertising, sales plan or procedure involving the use of false, deceptive or misleading statements or representations designed to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of other merchandise.

2. Representing directly or indirectly that any products or services are offered for sale when such is not a bona fide offer to sell said products or services.

3. Disparaging any product, installation or service which is advertised or offered for sale by respondents.

4. Representing, directly or by implication, through the use of terms such as special, preseason, reduced or sale price, or words of similar import and meaning, that a swimming pool or any home improvement product has been reduced in price unless the lower price constitutes a significant reduction from the price at which such merchandise has been sold in substantial quantities by respondents in the recent regular course of business or when the price for such merchandise has not been established by respondents through offering said merchandise for sale in good faith for a substantial period of time in the recent regular course of business; or misrepresenting in any manner that respondents' purchasers or prospective purchasers will be granted reduced prices or will receive discounts, referral fees or allowances of any type.

5. Representing that the swimming pools or any home improvement products sold or offered for sale by respondents are maintenance free, or employing representations of similar meaning and import.

6. Representing directly or indirectly that any of respondents' products, installations or services are warranted or guaranteed, unless the nature and extent of the warranty or guarantee, the identity of the warrantor or guarantor and the manner in which the warrantor or guarantor will perform thereunder are clearly and conspicuously disclosed in immediate conjunction therewith; and unless respondents promptly and fully perform all of their obligations and requirements, directly or impliedly represented, under the terms of each such warranty or guarantee.

7. Representing, directly or by implication, through the use of the term "Lifetime," or through any other phrase or term, that the filter will last for the period of a lifetime or for any other period of time which is in excess of the time period covered by the filter's guarantee or warranty.

8. Representing directly or indirectly that any saving is afforded in the purchase of merchandise from the respondents' retail price unless the price at which the merchandise is offered constitutes a reduction from the price at which said merchandise is usually and customarily sold at retail by the respondents in the recent regular course of business.

9. Misrepresenting in any manner the amount of savings available to purchasers of respondents' merchandise, or the amount by which the price of merchandise has been reduced either from the price at which it has been usually and customarily sold by respondents in the recent regular course of business, or from the price at which it has been usually and customarily sold at retail in the trade area where the representation is made.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall maintain business records adequate to establish that the pricing claims and similar representations of the type referred to in Paragraph 4 of this order constitute a significant reduction from the prices at which such merchandise has been sold in substantial quantities or offered for sale in good faith by respondents for a substantial period of time in the recent regular course of their business.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to all operating personnel, agents or representatives concerned with the promotion, sale, distribution or installation of swimming pools or any home improvement product and secure from each such person a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

SERR OF WASHINGTON, D.C., INC., ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SECTIONS 5 AND 12 OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket 8991. Complaint, Aug. 28, 1974-Decision, July 28, 1975

Consent order requiring a Washington, D.C., promoter of a hair implant replacement system, among other things to cease misrepresenting the nature, appearance and other related characteristics of its system; and failing to disclose that their system involves surgical procedures and continually requires special care. Further, respondents are required to devote 15 percent of all of their advertisements to warning prospective customers of the inherent dangers associated with their system of hair implant replacement.

For the respondents: Kamerow & Kamerow and Sheldon B. Kamins, Deckelbaum, Wolpert & Ogens, Wash., D.C.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Serr of Washington, D.C., Inc., and Herb Mann, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Serr of Washington, D.C., Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the District of Columbia with its principal office and place of business located at 1219 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C.

Respondent Herb Mann is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents promote, among other products and services, a process called "PERMA-SURG" which is an implant hair replacement system, hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "System." The system involves a surgical procedure whereby a synthetic suture (prolene) is stitched into the scalp of respondents' customers. Hairpieces are then attached to the sutures. Respondents sell, install and maintain the system, except that the surgical procedure itself is performed by a medical doctor.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents promote the system by advertising in newspapers and magazines of general circulation which are distributed across State lines. As a result of such newspaper and magazine advertising, respondents have maintained a substantial course of trade in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and as a result of such newspaper and magazine advertising, have disseminated and caused to be disseminated false advertisements by United States mails, within the meaning of Section 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of the implant hair replacement system, respondents have made numerous statements and representations in advertisements inserted in newspapers and magazines of general circulation.

Typical of the statements and representations contained in said advertisements, but not all-inclusive thereof, are the following:

> She'll swear its your own hair* * *so will everybody else!
> "PERMA-SURG" is not a hair weave-not a hairpiece.
> A revolutionary new medical process.
> A licensed M.D. performs this simple cosmetic procedure painlessly and most important, effectively.
> Comb it, brush it, wash it in the shower. Sleep in it, swim in it * * * and it won't come off.

PAR. 5. Through the use of the above advertisements, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, and by oral statements and representations made by employees and agents of the respondents, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. The system does not involve wearing a device or cosmetic which is like a hairpiece or toupee;

2. After the system has been applied, the hair applied becomes part of the anatomy like natural hair, and has the following characteristics of natural hair.

(a) The same appearance in all applications as natural hair, upon normal observation, and upon extreme close-up examination;

(b) It may be cared for like natural hair, particularly in that actions such as washing, combing, brushing and mussing may be performed on it in the same manner as might a person with natural hair.

(c) The wearer may engage in physical activity and movement with the same disregard for his hair as he would if he had natural hair.

3. After the system has been applied, the wearer can care for it himself, and will not have to seek professional or skilled assistance in maintaining the system, and that the customer will not incur maintenance costs over and above the cost of applying the system.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The system does involve the wearing of a hairpiece or toupee.

2. The hairpiece or toupee differs from natural hair in many respects, including, but not limited to, the following:

(a) It does not have the same appearance as natural hair in a substantial number of instances. It is often discernible as a hairpiece or toupee upon normal observation, and upon extreme close examination.

(b) It cannot be cared for like regular hair but requires special care and handling. Strong pulling on the hair, such as may be expected to occur in washing, combing, brushing and mussing, can cause pain because of the pressure exerted on the sutures in the scalp, may cause bleeding, and may cause the sutures to pull out. As a consequence, washing the hair and scalp is difficult. Because washing is difficult, foreign particles and dead skin tissue tend to accumulate beneath the implant hair application and become a significant source of irritation. The hair styles into which the hairpiece may be combed or brushed without professional treatments are limited.

(c) The wearer may not engage in physical activities with as much disregard for his hairpiece as might a person with natural hair. The wearer must at all times be careful that the hair does not pull or get pulled, or become tangled, or strained. Discomfort and pain may be caused by common actions, such as rolling the head on a pillow during sleep.

3. The wearer cannot in most instances care for the hairpiece himself; he must seek professional or skilled assistance on many occasions. The System involves a surgical procedure by which a synthetic thread is sutured into the scalp. In some instances, one or more of the sutures may become loose or may be rejected by the body. These and other medical problems associated with the surgery or the continuing presence of synthetic thread in the scalp may require subsequent visits to a medical doctor. A substantial additional charge for such service could be incurred. Respondents' applied hair is subject to bleaching in sunlight and other discoloration normally associated with hairpieces, and where the hairpiece has been color dyed, loss of dye through washing and normal wear; thus replacement hairpieces are required at intervals in order to maintain a color match with any natural hair the wearer may have.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents, have represented in advertisements the asserted advantages of the system, as hereinbefore described. In many cases, respondents have represented their system to be painless and have not disclosed in such advertisements that surgical procedure is a required step in the system. In no case have respondents' advertisements disclosed that:

(a) Clients may experience discomfort and pain as a result of the surgical procedure, from the synthetic sutures themselves, and from pulling normally incident to wearing the hairpiece;

(b) Clients will be subject to the risk of irritation, infections, and skin diseases as a result of the surgical procedure and as a result of the synthetic sutures remaining in the scalp;

(c) Permanent scarring to the scalp may result from the required surgical procedures, and as a result of the synthetic sutures remaining in the scalp.

The consequences described in this paragraph have in fact occurred, and to a reasonable medical certainty can be expected to occur, and respondents knew, and had reason to know, that they could be expected to occur.

Therefore, respondents' failure to disclose such material facts was, and is, unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been and are in substantial competition in commerce with corporations, firms, and individuals, in the sale of cosmetics, devices and treatments for the concealment of baldness.

PAR. 9. The use by respondents of the above unfair and deceptive representations and practices and their failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead consumers, and to unfairly influence consumers to sign contracts for the application of the implant hair replacement system, and to make partial or full payment therefor, without being informed of the seriousness of the surgical procedure, and the possibilities of discomfort, disease or disfigurement related thereto, and related to the continual presence of the synthetic suture in the scalp.

PAR. 10. The respondents' acts and practices alleged herein are to the prejudice and injury of the purchasing public, and to respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and false advertisements disseminated by United States mails, and in commerce, in violation of Section 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having issued a complaint charging that the respondents named in the caption hereof have violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The Commission having duly determined upon motion submitted by respondents that, in the circumstances presented, the public interest would be served by a withdrawal of the matter from adjudication for the purpose of negotiating a settlement by the entry of a consent order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in the complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing a consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedures described in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Serr of Washington, D.C., Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the District of Columbia, with its office and principal place of business located at 1219 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C.

Respondent Herb Mann is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation and his business address is the same as that of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Serr of Washington, D.C., Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns and its officers, and Herb Mann, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device or through franchisees or licensees, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the implant replacement system or other hair replacement product or process involving surgery (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "System"), in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, or by the United States mails within the meaning of Section 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication that:

1. The system does not involve wearing a device or cosmetic which is like a hairpiece or toupee;

2. After the system has been applied, the hair applied becomes part of the anatomy like natural hair, and has the following characteristics of natural hair.

a. the same appearance in all applications as natural hair, upon normal observation, and upon extreme closeup examination;

b. it may be cared for like natural hair, particularly in that actions such as washing, combing, brushing and mussing might be performed on it in the same manner as might a person with natural hair;

c. the wearer may engage in physical activity and movement with the same disregard for his hair as he would if he had natural hair.

3. After the system has been applied, the wearer can care for it himself, and will not have to seek professional or skilled assistance in maintaining the system, and that the customer will not incur maintenance costs over and above the cost of applying the system.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in advertising, offering for sale, selling or distributing the system, disclose clearly and conspicuously that:

1. The system involves a surgical procedure resulting in the implantation of synthetic sutures in the scalp, to which hair is affixed.

2. By virtue of the surgical procedure involving implantation of synthetic sutures in the scalp, and by virtue of the synthetic suture remaining in the scalp, there is a risk of discomfort, pain, infection, scarring, and other skin disorders.

3. Continuing special care of the system is necessary to minimize the probabilities and risks referred to in subparagraph two of this paragraph, and such care may involve additional costs for medications and assistance.

4. The purchaser is advised to consult with his personal physician about the system before deciding whether to purchase it.

Respondents shall set forth the above disclosures separately and conspicuously from the balance of each advertisement or presentation used in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, and shall devote no less than 15 percent of each advertisement or presentation to such disclosures. Provided, however, That in advertisements which consist of less than ten column inches in newspapers and periodicals, and in radio and television advertisements with a running time of one minute or less, respondents may substitute the following statement, in lieu of the above requirements:

No less than 15 percent of such advertisements shall be devoted to this disclosure, such disclosure shall be set forth clearly and conspicuously from the balance of each of such advertisements, and if such disclosure is in a newspaper or periodical, it shall be in at least eleven point type.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the sale of the system, provide prospective purchasers with a separate disclosure sheet containing the information required in the immediately preceding paragraph of this order, subparagraphs one (1) through four (4) thereof, and that respondents require that, prior to executing any contract to purchase said system, such prospective purchasers, sign and date the disclosure sheet after the sentence, "I have read the foregoing disclosures and understand what they mean," and that Serr of Washington, D.C., Inc. provide a copy of said disclosure sheet to the customer and retain such signed disclosure sheet for at least three years.

It is further ordered, That, in connection with the sale of the system, no contract for application of the system shall become binding on the purchaser prior to midnight of the third day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed, and that:

1. Respondents shall clearly and conspicuously disclose, orally prior to the time of sale, and in writing on any contract, promissory note or other instrument executed by the purchaser in connection with the sale of the system, that the purchaser may rescind or cancel any obligation incurred by mailing or delivering a notice of cancellation to the office responsible for the sale prior to midnight of the third day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed.
2. Respondents shall provide a separate and clearly understandable form which the purchaser may use as a notice of cancellation.
3. Respondents shall not negotiate any contract, promissory note, or other instrument of indebtedness to a finance company or other third party prior to midnight of the fifth day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, serve a copy of this order upon each present and every future licensee or franchisee, and upon each physician participating in application of respondents' system, and obtain written acknowledgment of the receipt thereof; and that respondents obtain from each present and future licensee or franchisee an agreement in writing, (1) to abide by the terms of this order, and (2) to cancellation of their license or franchise for failure to do so; and that respondents cancel the license or franchise of any licensee or franchisee that fails to abide by the terms of this order. Respondents shall retain such acknowledgments and agreements for so long as such persons or firms continue to participate in the application or sale of respondents' system.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions or departments.

It is further ordered, That the corporate respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in said respondent, such as dissolution, assignment, or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, licensees, or franchisees, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That in the event that the corporate respondent merges with another corporation or transfers all or a substantial part of its business or assets to any other corporation or to any other person, said respondent shall require such successor or transferee to file promptly with the Commission a written agreement to be bound by the terms of this order; Provided, That if said respondent wishes to present to the Commission any reasons why said order should not apply in its present form to said successor or transferee, it shall submit to the Commission a written statement setting forth said reasons prior to the consummation of said succession or transfer.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent Herb Mann promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Xerox Corporation, hereinafter referred to as Xerox or respondent, has violated and is violating Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, issues this complaint, stating its charges as follows:

I Definitions

PARAGRAPH 1. For purposes of this complaint, the following definitions shall apply:

(a) "Office copier" (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "copier") means a machine for the convenient reproduction of an original document. The term "office copier" includes electrostatic and thermographic process copiers and accessories physically attached to such copiers. Said term does not include either specialized use copiers, such as engineering drawing and microfilm copiers, or offset, mimeograph, or spirit duplicator machines.

(b) "Plain paper copier" means a copier which makes copies on plain, untreated paper.

(c) "Coated paper copier" means a copier which requires the use of chemically treated or coated paper.

II Respondent

PAR. 2. Xerox is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its executive office located at Stamford, Conn. Respondent was incorporated in 1906 as the Haloid Company, and its name was changed to Haloid Xerox Inc. in 1958 and to Xerox Corporation in 1961.

PAR. 3. In 1971, Xerox's total revenues were approximately $2 billion, net income after taxes was approximately $213 million, and total assets were approximately $2.2 billion. Xerox's after tax return on stockholder's equity averaged 21.2 percent for the period 1967 through 1971. In 1971, approximately 50 percent of Xerox's total revenues were derived from its domestic business in office copiers and supplies and approximately 25 percent of Xerox's total revenues were derived from Rank Xerox. In 1971, Xerox was approximately the 52nd largest domestic industrial firm in terms of total revenues and approximately the 17th most profitable such firm based on return on stockholder's equity.

III Other Persons

PAR. 4. The Rank Organisation, Ltd. [Rank] is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the United Kingdom, with principal offices in London, England.

PAR. 5. Fuji Photo Film Co., Ltd. [Fuji] is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Japan, with principal offices in Tokyo, Japan.

PAR. 6. Rank Xerox, Ltd. [Rank Xerox] is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the United Kingdom with principal offices in London, England. It was organized by Rank and Xerox for the purpose of manufacturing and distributing office copiers throughout the world except the United States (including United States territories and possessions) and Canada. In 1964, Xerox purchased from Rank certain property rights and assets, including the right to manufacture and distribute Xerox copiers in Central and South America, for $3.3 million plus 5 percent royalties on rentals and sales in said territory. From 1956, when it was organized, until December 1969, Rank Xerox's voting stock was owned equally by Rank and Xerox. In December 1969, Xerox acquired for $12.5 million a 51 percent ownership of said voting stock. In 1971, Rank Xerox had revenues of approximately $500 million, assets of approximately $690 million, and net profits of approximately $196 million.

PAR. 7. Fuji Xerox Co., Ltd. [Fuji Xerox] is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Japan. It was organized by Rank Xerox and Fuji for the purpose of manufacturing and distributing office copiers in Japan, Thailand, Cambodia, Laos, Philippines, Vietnam, Indonesia, Korea and Taiwan (Formosa). Fuji Xerox's voting stock is owned equally by Rank Xerox and Fuji.

IV Nature of Trade and Commerce

PAR. 8. The relevant market is the sale and lease of office copiers in the United States, hereinafter referred to as the office copier market. This market includes as a relevant submarket the sale and lease of plain paper office copiers in the United States, hereinafter referred to as the plain paper submarket. The office copier market is dominated by the plain paper submarket and Xerox dominates the plain paper submarket.

PAR. 9. (a) In 1971, revenues from the sale and lease of office copiers were approximately $1.1 billion and total revenues from the sale and lease of office copiers and supplies were approximately $1.7 billion; Xerox accounted for approximately 86 percent of the former and 60 percent of the latter. In 1971, revenues from the sale and lease of plain paper copiers and supplies were approximately $1.0 billion; Xerox accounted for approximately 95 percent of said revenues.

(b) Approximately 25 firms are presently engaged in the office copier market. Of these 23 sell or otherwise distribute coated paper copiers and three sell or otherwise distribute plain paper copiers. After Xerox, the next largest firm in the office copier market accounted for approximately 10 percent of 1971 revenues from the sale or lease of office copiers and the sale of supplies therefor.

PAR. 10. The office copier market has had and continues to have high barriers to entry and barriers to effective competition among existing competitors.

V Jurisdiction

PAR. 11. In the course and conduct of its business, Xerox has shipped or caused to be shipped office copiers to customers located throughout the United States and has also entered into licensing and distribution arrangements with foreign corporations. There is now and has been for many years a constant substantial and increasing flow of Xerox office copiers and Xerox technical information and marketing rights in "commerce" as that term is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Except to the extent that competition has been hindered, frustrated, lessened and eliminated by the acts and practices hereinbelow alleged in this complaint, Xerox has been and is in competition with other corporations, partnerships, individuals or firms engaged in the sale and distribution of office copiers and supplies.

VI Violations

PAR. 12. (a) Xerox has monopoly power in the relevant market and submarket.

(b) Xerox has the power to inhibit, frustrate, and hinder effective competition among firms participating in the relevant market and submarket.

PAR. 13. Xerox has engaged in marketing acts, practices and methods of competition including, but not limited to,

(a) following a lease only policy pursuant to which Xerox refuses to sell and discourages the sale of its office copiers,

(b) using package leasing plans and quantity discount rental price plans,

(c) discriminating in price among customers,

(d) maintaining a stock of depreciated copiers and planning to use or using such copiers to inhibit, frustrate, or hinder price competition,

(e) announcing new copier models and taking orders thereon before availability of such copiers in response to introduction of competing copiers by actual or potential competitors,

(f) requiring that it be the exclusive source of maintenance and repair service for leased Xerox office copiers,

(g) falsely disparaging competitive supplies,

(h) tying supplies to the lease of office copiers.

PAR. 14. Xerox has engaged in acts, practices and methods of competition relating to patents including, but not limited to,

(a) monopolizing and attempting to monopolize patents applicable to office copiers,

(b) maintaining a patent barrier to competition by attempting to recreate a patent structure which would be equivalent in scope to expired patents,

(c) developing and maintaining a patent structure of great size, complexity, and obscurity of boundaries,

(d) using its patent position to obtain access to technology owned by actual or potential competitors,

(e) entering into cross-license arrangements with actual or potential competitors,

(f) including in licenses under United States Patent Number 3,121,006 provisions having the effect of limiting licensees to the manufacture and sale of only coated paper copiers,

(g) offering patent licenses applicable to plain paper copiers with provisions which, in effect, limit the licensee to the manufacture or sale of low speed copiers,

(h) including in patent licenses provisions having the effect of precluding the licensee from utilizing Xerox patents in the office copier market,

(i) entering into and maintaining agreements with Battelle Memorial Institute, Inc. and Battelle Development Corporation, Delaware corporations with principal offices at Columbus, Ohio, hereinafter referred to collectively as Battelle, pursuant to which Battelle is required to convey to Xerox all patents, patent applications, and know-how coming into its possession relative to xerography.

(j) preventing actual and potential competitors from developing plain paper copiers while permitting them to develop coated paper copiers.

PAR. 15. (a) For many years, and at least as of 1969, Rank Xerox was a substantial, viable, separate corporation capable of competing in the office copier market and plain paper submarket.

(b) Xerox has entered into and maintained agreements with Rank and Rank Xerox which have effectively divided up the world market for plain paper copiers among Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox.

(c) In December 1969, Xerox acquired a 51 percent interest in Rank Xerox voting stock and continues to maintain such interest.

PAR. 16. Xerox has engaged and is engaging in acts, practices and methods of competition as hereinabove alleged, for the purpose and with effect of

(a) monopolizing the office copier market and the plain paper submarket,

(b) preserving, maintaining, and furthering a highly concentrated market structure with high barriers to entry,

(c) hindering, restraining, foreclosing and frustrating competition in the office copier market and plain paper submarket and the entry of new competitors into said markets,

(d) materially reducing the independence of Rank Xerox, the influence of Rank Xerox as a potential competitor and the probability that Rank Xerox would enter competition in the office copier market or plain paper submarket,

(e) foreclosing Rank, Fuji, Rank Xerox, and Fuji Xerox from competing with Xerox in the Western Hemisphere, including the United States, and foreclosing Xerox from competing in export trade from the United States,

(f) depriving consumers of the benefits of competition.

PAR. 17. The aforesaid acts, practices, and methods of competition in commerce are unfair and constitute violations of Section 5 (a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The executed agreement dated Mar. 27, 1975, as modified, containing the following consent order, an admission by respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules,

Now in conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 3.25(d) of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Xerox Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business located at High Ridge Park, Stamford, Conn.

A. The licensee may, at his option, designate up to a total of three order patents which shall be licensed or sublicensed royalty-free; Provided, however, That, in each country, the licensee may substitute another order patent as royalty-free for any order patent previously designated as royalty-free which the licensee has discontinued using in that country. On order patents other than the three designated as royalty-free by the licensee, Xerox may, in its sole discretion, charge a royalty not to exceed 1/2 percent per PATENT up to a maximum accumulated royalty of 1 1/2 percent of the licensee's net revenues for each royalty-bearing product which is manufactured, leased or sold by or for the licensee. With respect to any royalty-bearing product of the licensee which the licensee uses or consumes himself, the royalty shall be computed on the basis of the net revenues that would have been received by the licensee in an ordinary commercial transaction. The royalty shall be computed separately for each royalty-bearing product on the basis of order patents subject to royalty which are used in such royalty-bearing product. In no event shall more than three royalty-free patents apply to any one royalty-bearing product at any one time irrespective of the number of licenses granted by Xerox with respect to such royalty-bearing product. For the purpose of this Paragraph IV A, a patent and all Corresponding Patents in all countries shall count as one patent. The licensee need not take a license under any corresponding patent.

B. Xerox may require that a licensee agree not to sue Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox, or their customers or suppliers, for PATENT infringement or royalties with respect to any office copier, photosensitive element, toner, developer, paper or container (such as toner cartridges) for consumable supplies manufactured by or for them prior to the date of issuance of this order, or to maintain any such suit.

C. To the extent the licensee has the power to grant licenses or sublicenses, Xerox may require the grant to Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox of a nonexclusive license for the full unexpired term under any, some or all patents of the licensee to make, have made, use or vend any, some or all of the following: (a) office copiers (including the right to have made parts, components, and raw materials for use therein), (b) toner, developer, paper and similar consumable supplies, (c) toner, developer, paper, and similar consumable supplies which may be used in future office copiers, (d) containers (such as toner cartridges) for consumable supplies, and (e) photosensitive elements, as hereinafter provided in this Paragraph IV C.

(1) Xerox may (at any time) require the license of one patent of the licensee to Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox for each Xerox patent licensed to the licensee in excess of the first three order patents licensed to the licensee but in so doing Xerox may not require the license of (a) a greater number of present patents of the licensee than the number of Xerox present patents licensed to the licensee, or (b) a greater number of future patents of the licensee than the number of Xerox future patents licensed to the licensee. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for purposes of determining how many present patents or future patents of the licensee which Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox are entitled to license, the licensee shall have the right, if exercised at the time of first receipt of a license from Xerox under Paragraph II of this order, to have the first three order patents licensed from Xerox count, at the licensee's option, as Xerox present patents, or as Xerox future patents or as any combination of Xerox present patents and Xerox future patents, irrespective of the actual character of such order patents. For the purpose of determining the number of patents under this Paragraph IV C(1), (a) a patent and all corresponding patents in all countries shall count as one patent, and (b) the substitution of a previously unlicensed order patent shall count as an additional patent unless the patent for which substitution is made was dedicated, revoked, disclaimed, or has expired or lapsed, or was held invalid or unenforceable. Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox need not take a license under any corresponding patent. A licensee shall have no obligation to grant a license to Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox in any country in which, by reason of governmental action, Xerox has been prevented from granting or causing to be granted a patent license requested pursuant to this order. Xerox shall have no obligation to grant licenses in any country in which, by reason of governmental action, the licensee is prevented from granting licenses to Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox pursuant to the terms of this Paragraph IV C(1).

(2) The license of present patents of the licensee shall not become effective until four years after the date of issuance of this order or four years after an office copier product (of the licensee or its licensee) using an invention covered by the patent first becomes commercially available, whichever is later. The license of future patents of the licensee shall not become effective until four years after the date the future patent of the licensee is issued or four years after an office copier product (of the licensee or its licensee) using an invention covered by the patent first becomes commercially available, whichever is later. This Paragraph IV C(2) shall not apply to IBM, except that IBM may require that the effective date of licenses pertaining to polychromatic color office copier products not become effective for up to three years from the date of issuance of this order for present patents and three years from the date IBM's future patents are issued. With respect to corresponding future patents the date such patents are issued shall be the date that the first such corresponding future patent is issued.

(3) Xerox may (at any time) require the immediate license to Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox of any of the present or future patents of the licensee (a) which would be infringed by a Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox office copier manufactured by any of them following the date of issuance of this order if the invention covered by the patent is the same as that embodied in an office copier manufactured by any of them prior to the date of issuance of this order, or (b) which would be infringed by a Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox office copier product which any of them makes commercially available during the six years following the date of issuance of this order if the invention of the patent was embodied in a device which, as of the first publication or public use anywhere in the world of the invention covered by the patent of the licensee or application therefor (i) actually had been built and incorporated in an engineering model or prototype model of the office copier by Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox and (ii) was part of a Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox funded product program. As used in this Paragraph IV C(3), "engineering model" means the first complete assembly of all the sub-assemblies of the office copier; and "prototype model" means the product development stage which follows the engineering model, if any. Licenses granted pursuant to this Paragraph

IV C(3) shall not be subject to the provisions of Paragraph IV C(1) (except that they shall count for the licensee as patents licensed to Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox if and when they become entitled to a license pursuant to that paragraph) or Paragraph IV C(2), but shall be subject to all other provisions of this order. The burden of establishing the right to a license under this Paragraph IV C(3) shall be on Xerox.

(4) Xerox may require a licensee to grant to Xerox, Rank Xerox, and Fuji Xerox a nonexclusive license under all improvement patents on Xerox patents licensed to the licensee. Such licenses shall not be subject to the provisions of Paragraph IV C(1) (except that improvement patents of the licensee shall count for the licensee as patents licensed to Xerox, Rank Xerox, and Fuji Xerox if and when they become entitled to a license pursuant to that paragraph) but shall be subject to all other provisions of this order.

(5) Xerox shall grant to the licensee a nonexclusive license under all Xerox improvement patents on patents licensed to Xerox. Such licenses shall be subject to all the provisions of this order except that they shall not count for Xerox as patents licensed by Xerox, Rank Xerox, and Fuji Xerox for purposes of Paragraph IV C(1).

(6) The licensee may charge Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox a reasonable royalty for patents licensed to any or all of them pursuant to this order, computed on the basis of the net revenues of Xerox, Rank Xerox, and Fuji Xerox for each royalty-bearing product which they manufactured, leased or sold. With respect to any royalty-bearing product of Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox, which they use or consume themselves, the royalty shall be computed on the basis of the net revenues that would have been received in an ordinary commercial transaction. The royalty shall be computed separately for each royalty-bearing product on the basis of the patents which are used in such royalty-bearing product.

(7) Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox may require that they be permitted to sublicense any PERSON in which they own, directly or indirectly, 50 percent or less, but not less than 20 percent of the voting stock if such person makes its present and future patents available for licensing pursuant to Paragraph II of this order. All such persons shall be identified to anyone making written request, and a list of all such persons current as of the date of issuance of this order shall be filed on the public record of the Commission. Any changes in said list shall be filed with the Commission within 30 days after they occur.

(8) A license to Xerox pursuant to this Paragraph IV C shall contain the provisions specified in Paragraphs IV H and IV I of this order and may contain the provisions specified in Paragraphs IV D, IV E, IV F, IV G, and IV J of this order.

(9) If Xerox grants a license under order patents either pursuant to the terms of Paragraph II of this order or otherwise, the license agreement shall contain the irrevocable covenant of the licensee to license such of its patents as are licensed to Xerox on reasonable terms and conditions (including the license to itself of its licensees' patents or improvement patents) to any other person who is entitled to a license from Xerox pursuant to Paragraph II of this order, Provided That such license need not be effective prior to the effective date of the licensee's license to Xerox. Within 60 days following execution of a license agreement subject to this Paragraph IV C (9), Xerox shall submit to the Commission a copy thereof in camera.

D. Reasonable provisions may be made for the retention of books and records and for periodic royalty reports by the licensee to the manager of patent licensing of the licensor, and for inspection of such books and records by an independent auditor or any other person reasonably acceptable to both the licensor and the licensee who shall report to said manager only the amount of the royalty due and payable. The manager of patent licensing of the licensor shall not disclose the content of said periodic royalty reports to any director, officer, employee, agent or representative of the licensor other than the members of his staff and employees necessarily involved in recording and depositing checks in a routine manner, who shall be similarly bound, unless the royalty owed is not timely paid. In the event that the licensor does not have a manager of patent licensing, a mutually agreeable employee of the licensor shall be designated in his stead.

E. Notwithstanding any other provision of this order, any party taking a sublicense under the terms of this order may be required to reimburse the sublicensor for any payments it is legally required to make and does make to the original licensor on account of activities of the sublicensee under any sublicense granted pursuant hereto.

F. Reasonable provisions may be made for cancellation of the license granted to the licensee upon failure of the licensee to make the reports, pay the royalties, or permit the inspection of his books and records as hereinbefore provided, and, upon a wrongful act of the licensee respecting the restrictions on use or disclosure of know-how contained in Paragraph VII of this order, for Xerox to apply to the Commission for leave to cancel said license, in which event the decision of the Commission shall be final and non-appealable by either Xerox or the licensee.

G. The license may be nontransferable.

H. The license must provide that the licensee may cancel the license in whole or as to any specified PATENTS at any time by giving 30 days notice in writing to the licensor; however, the licensor shall have the option to continue in effect any right granted to the licensor pursuant to Paragraph IV C of this order.

I. The license must provide for the arbitration specified in Paragraph VIII of this order and for suspension thereof pursuant to Paragraph VIII C of this order.

J. In granting a license pursuant to Paragraph II of this order, there shall be no discrimination by Xerox, Rank Xerox, Fuji Xerox or any person in the royalty charged as among royalty-paying licensees who procure the same rights under the same patents; but nothing herein contained shall prevent Xerox, Rank Xerox, Fuji Xerox or any person from negotiating nonexclusive licenses and cross-licenses outside the terms (except Paragraph IV C(9) of this order) of this order with anyone who so elects.

It is further ordered, That nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any licensee or applicant for a license from attacking in any proceeding or controversy the validity, scope or enforceability of any present or future patent, nor shall this order be construed as imputing any validity, enforceability or value to any such patent.

VI

It is further ordered, That Xerox shall allow each person who is a licensee of a Xerox patent on the date of issuance of this order to obtain a license pursuant to the terms of this order; however, Xerox, Rank Xerox and Fuji Xerox shall have the right to continue in effect any industrial property rights under the terms previously granted to Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox by the licensee, and such licensee shall have the right to continue in effect any industrial property rights under the terms previously granted to the licensee by Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox.

VII

It is further ordered, That:

A. During the period ending five years after the date of issuance of this order, Xerox shall make available to licensees of United States order patents under a license pursuant to the terms of this order who make written application therefor all know-how (1) in existence on the date of issuance of this order or (2) made available to any other United States manufacturer (except a supplier to Xerox) or United States marketer of office copier products for use in connection with such PRODUCTS during the five year period. The delivery of the know-how requested shall begin within 30 days and shall be completed within 120 days after the initial application therefor is received by Xerox; the response to subsequent requests shall be completed within a reasonable period of time. Such know-how shall be of such a nature as to enable one skilled in manufacturing electro-mechanical office machinery and in the technologies embodied in office copier products or comparable technologies to manufacture, refurbish, recondition and service Xerox Corporation's office copier products. Upon written application, Xerox shall provide written clarification respecting such know-how where such clarification is reasonably necessary. Xerox may make a reasonable charge for the cost of collecting and duplicating know-how which it discloses and for the time spent in clarification. At the option of such licensee, Xerox shall disclose know-how pertaining to photosensitive elements, supplies, raw materials and particular office copier models and shall limit its charge to such know-how. Xerox may require the licensee to agree that all know-how disclosed to the licensee by Xerox shall be considered a Xerox trade secret and to undertake, in good faith, to use the know-how only in connection with the manufacture in the United States of office copier products by or for the licensee and not to disclose or permit the disclosure of the know-how to anyone other than a supplier who is or will be manufacturing in the United States and who enters into a similar agreement and undertaking respecting disclosure and use, unless the licensee can establish that such know-how (1) was previously known to the licensee prior to the disclosure by Xerox, or (2) is or becomes part of the public domain through no wrongful act of licensee, or (3) is subsequently otherwise legally acquired by licensee, or (4) was or is disclosed by Xerox to third parties on a non-confidential basis.

B. Commencing 120 days after the date of issuance of this order Xerox shall make available to know-how licensees a list of the persons whose know-how Xerox claims to be prohibited from disclosing. Such list shall be subject to the restrictions on use and disclosure of know-how provided in this Paragraph VII. Xerox need not make know-how available to IBM.

VIII

It is further ordered, That:

A. Upon receipt of a written application for a patent license or for a patent license and disclosure of know-how under the terms of this order, Xerox shall advise the applicant in writing of the terms of such license and/or know-how disclosure. If a dispute arises between Xerox and a licensee or applicant regarding their respective rights under this order (except where certain matters are specifically referable to the Commission as provided in Paragraph IV F of this order), and if the parties to the dispute are unable to resolve it within 90 days after the existence of such dispute is communicated in writing to Xerox or to the licensee or applicant, the dispute shall be determined by arbitration pursuant to this Paragraph VIII. Notwithstanding the provisions of Paragraph V of this order, no dispute between Xerox and a licensee or applicant with respect to the validity, enforceability, infringement or scope of any patent shall be subject to arbitration pursuant to this order.

B. Unless otherwise agreed to by the parties, arbitration shall be held at a location in the United States designated by the licensee or applicant and in accordance with the Commercial Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association. The award of the arbitrator shall be final and binding on both parties. The arbitrator shall, upon a proper showing, issue protective orders and/or receive evidence in camera in the same manner as an administrative law judge of the Federal Trade Commission.

C. Within 10 days after the initiation of arbitration, Xerox shall notify the Commission of the parties to the arbitration, the name of the arbitrator, and the nature of the dispute. Xerox shall notify the Commission of the dates of arbitration hearings and other arbitration proceedings, if any, as soon as possible. Copies of all papers in the nature of pleadings shall be served upon the Commission, and the Commission or its designee shall have the right to attend any arbitration proceeding. The Commission may, in its sole discretion, at any time before evidence has been submitted, suspend the provisions of this Paragraph VIII respecting arbitration and itself resolve any or all disputes subject thereto. The Commission will not assert any claim that Xerox has violated this order with respect to the subject matter of the arbitration where Xerox has complied with the award of the arbitrator.

D. Pending the completion of any negotiation, arbitration or Commission action respecting a dispute subject to this Paragraph VIII, Xerox and the applicant shall enter into a license, and Xerox shall make disclosure of know-how, pursuant to the terms of this order with respect to the matters not in dispute. Upon conclusion of any negotiation, arbitration or Commission action, the disputed license or know-how disclosure may provide for such adjustments as the parties agree to or as the arbitrator or Commission, as the case may be, deems appropriate.

IX

It is further ordered, That for the period ending six years after the date of issuance of this order, Xerox shall make available (a) English language translations of all order patents issued after the date of issuance of this order to Xerox, Rank Xerox, and Fuji Xerox by France, The Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, and The Netherlands, and (b) copies of all English language corresponding patents at a reasonable charge not to exceed the cost of reproduction and, if the translation is made at the instance of the requesting person, the cost of translation.

X

It is further ordered, That for the period ending 10 years after the date of issuance of this order, Xerox shall not, directly or indirectly, acquire from any person (including The Rank Organisation Limited and Fuji Photo Film Co., Ltd.) any exclusive rights, whether by license or otherwise to any patents or know-how for use in office copier products except those (a) resulting from the work of Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox employees, Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox consultants, or research organizations doing sponsored research for Xerox, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox, or (b) under which Xerox grants or causes to be granted to any person making written application a non-exclusive, royalty-free, unrestricted license to make, have made, use or vend office copier products under such patent or know-how. Any exclusive rights acquired by Xerox in accordance with part (a) of this Paragraph X shall be on such terms as will permit Xerox to comply with the licensing provisions of Paragraph II of this order. This Paragraph X shall not apply to any acquisition or exclusive license of a foreign patent or of the right to use the know-how in a foreign country by Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox.

XI

It is further ordered, That Xerox shall not dispose or permit the disposition of any patents or rights thereunder so as to deprive it of the power to grant or cause to be granted the licenses required by this order.

XII

It is further ordered, That for the period ending 10 years after the date of issuance of this order Xerox shall not, directly or indirectly, acquire any interest in a person (including The Rank Organisation Limited and Fuji Photo Film Co. Ltd.) engaged in the manufacture, sale, lease or development of office copiers, or toner, developer, paper or photosensitive elements used in office copiers or form a joint venture involving any such products with any such person (except The Rank Organisation Limited or Fuji Photo Film Co. Ltd. so long as either is a party to a joint venture with Xerox or Rank Xerox relating to office copier products). This paragraph shall not apply (1) to the acquisition by XEROX of an interest in or joint venture with any person in which at the time of the acquisition or joint venture it had a stock interest, other than a PERSON in which Xerox had such an interest by reason of an investment in employee funds such as pension or retirement plans (Xerox shall promptly file with the Commission a list of the persons in which it has a stock interest as of the date of issuance of this order and to which this exception is to apply. Said list shall be updated as part of the annual compliance reports required by Paragraph XIX of this order), or (2) to any acquisition by Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox of a person not engaged in the manufacture, sale, lease or development of office copiers but who is engaged in the manufacture, sale, lease or development, solely outside of the United States, of toner, developer, paper or photosensitive elements used in office copiers, or to the formation of a joint venture by Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox involving any such products with any such PERSON, or (3) to a joint venture involving new capacity for the production of paper with a person other than one engaged in the manufacture, sale, lease or development of office copiers, or toner, developer or photosensitive elements used in office copiers, or (4) to the acquisition by Xerox of an interest in any PERSON the sole purpose of which is an investment in employee funds such as pension or retirement plans. Such acquisitions, however, shall not be deemed immune or exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws (including the Federal Trade Commission Act) by reason of anything contained in this order.

XIII

It is further ordered, That during the period ending 10 years after the date of issuance of this order, Xerox shall not, directly or indirectly, make contracts in the United States restricting employees working in its office copier products business from in the future working for any other person, provided that Xerox may make contracts which prohibit the use or disclosure of trade secrets and confidential information as prohibited by Xerox' present form of "Proprietary Information and Conflict of Interest Agreement" which has been submitted to the Commission.

XIV

It is further ordered, That during the period commencing on a date not later than nine months after the date of issuance of this order and ending five years after said commencement date, Xerox shall not, directly or indirectly, utilize in the United States any price plan for the sale or lease of an office copier which depends upon the customer purchasing or leasing one or more additional office copiers of a different model. Any minimum qualifying level for a pricing plan or price schedule respecting any office copier shall be based solely on volume, revenues, number of office copiers, or the like of the same model.

XV

It is further ordered, That:

A. During the period ending 10 years after the date of issuance of this order, Xerox shall, in addition to instructing its employees in the United States not to comment on the quality of competitive toner or developer, place a notice in a location conspicuous to the key operator on each office copier sold or leased by it in the United States stating the following: "Xerox Corporation manufactures and distributes toner and developer for use in this machine. Other suppliers may also provide toner and developer for this machine. It may be necessary to adjust the machine to accommodate toner or developer which is provided by either Xerox or any other supplier."

B. In the event that Xerox shall publish reasonable specifications for the toner and developer used in a particular machine, Xerox (1) may include the following additional statement in the aforementioned notice: "The toner and developer used in this machine must comply with specifications published by Xerox Corporation.," (2) shall promptly notify all suppliers of toner and developer, who request such notification, of any changes in such specifications, and shall promptly notify a supplier when his toner or developer does not comply with such specifications in a letter signed by an officer of Xerox, and (3) may not require suppliers of toner or developer for Xerox' office copiers to provide to Xerox' customers a certification that the toner or developer supplied by them meets such specifications.

C. Xerox shall promptly notify all suppliers of toner and developer, who request such notification, of changes in Xerox office copiers which may affect the useability of the toner and developer in such office copiers.

D. Nothing herein contained shall prevent Xerox from advising a customer, in a letter signed by an officer of Xerox, that a non-Xerox toner or developer is not useable in a particular Xerox office copier, provided that Xerox simultaneously advises the supplier of such toner or developer in a letter signed by an officer of Xerox, that (1) in the opinion of Xerox, the supplier's toner or developer is not useable in a particular office copier model, and (2) disputes regarding the useability of the toner and developer are subject to arbitration pursuant to this order. Disputes regarding the useability of non-Xerox toner and developer or the reasonableness of Xerox specifications shall be subject to arbitration in accordance with Paragraph VIII (b) and (c) of this order.

E. Xerox may not, directly or indirectly, require in the United States that it be the sole supplier of toner or developer for leased or sold office copiers; however, it may impose such a requirement with respect to a new model during the six months from the date such model first becomes commercially available. For purposes of this Paragraph XV, "new model" includes collectively the basic office copier model and all subsequent models not embodying material variations in the xerographic processor thereof.

XVI

It is further ordered, That during the period ending 10 years after the date of issuance of this order, (1) Xerox shall not in the United States take orders or announce that it will take orders for the sale or lease of an OFFICE COPIER more than three months prior to the time when it is reasonably expected to be commercially available, (2) Xerox shall not promote any new office copier in any area of the United States more than three months prior to the time that Xerox reasonably expects such new office copier to be first commercially available in that area except for national advertising which includes a statement that the model is available only in the areas where Xerox reasonably expects such model to be commercially available, and (3) at the time Xerox announces that it will take orders for the lease of an office copier in the United States, it shall also announce the selling price of such office copier.

XVII

It is further ordered, That within 30 days after the date of issuance of this order and annually thereafter until the expiration of all future patents, Xerox shall submit for publication in the Official Gazette of the United States Patent Office a notice (1) identifying by number, title, date of issue and category of subject matter (to an extent acceptable to the Commission) all United States patents which it is empowered to license together with all foreign patents based on the patent application from which each United States patent originates; (2) stating that Xerox shall grant licenses under (a) its order patents to make, have made, use and vend office copier products under the terms of this order, and (b) patents required to be licensed pursuant to the terms of Paragraph X of this order, if any; (3) stating that Xerox shall disclose know-how to a licensee of its United States order patents for use in connection with the manufacture of office copier products in the United States under the terms of this order; and (4) stating that a copy of this order and a list of patents licensed to Xerox which are subject to the provisions of Paragraph II and IV C(9) of this order, if any, are available from Xerox upon written request. Beginning 30 days following the date of issuance of this order, and until the expiration of all Xerox future patents, Xerox shall send a copy of this order and of the current edition of such notice to each person who inquires as to the availability of a license for office copier products, or to whom Xerox has offered such a license at any time after Jan. 1, 1970.

XVIII

It is further ordered, That Xerox notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in the respondent, Rank Xerox or Fuji Xerox which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other such change.

XIX

It is further ordered, That Xerox shall file with the Commission reports, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it intends to comply, is complying, and has complied with this order. Said reports shall be filed 60 days and 180 days after the date of issuance of this order, and yearly thereafter on the anniversary date of the order during the period in which Xerox has obligations under this order, and shall contain such information and documents as are requested by the Bureau of Competition or the Commission relating to compliance with this order.

Order Affirming Denial of Respondent's Motion to Stay Proceedings, or, in the Alternative, for Permission to Supplement the Record with Newly Discovered Evidence

This matter is before us on respondent's application for review of the administrative law judge's order, dated June 11, 1975, denying respondent's motion to stay proceedings pending the outcome of its Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA") suit against the Commission in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or, in the alternative, for leave to supplement the record with newly discovered evidence which might be obtained by reason of the lawsuit.

By order dated June 24, 1975, the administrative law judge certified his ruling for review by the Commission pursuant to Section 3.23(b) of the Commission's Rules of Practice, 16 C.F.R. §3.23(b).

Respondent's motion offers too speculative a ground to warrant staying further proceedings since it assumes that respondent will ultimately obtain the documents and that the documents will contain information necessary to a resolution of the issues in this case. See Encyclopaedia Britannica, Inc. Docket 8908, order of May 22, 1975 Denying Motion to Postpone Oral Argument.

The administrative law judge's denial of respondent's motion, in the alternative, for permission to supplement the record with newly discovered evidence obtained from the Commission by reason of its FOIA request is also affirmed. The denial was without prejudice to respondent's right to renew the motion "* * * if and when respondent is in a position to move admission of specific and identified documents it may obtain under the FOIA into this record while the administrative law judge has jurisdiction of this proceeding." Such motions should be granted, at the very least, only upon a showing that the newly discovered evidence is relevant. It would, accordingly, be premature to decide whether any materials which might be obtained as a result of the FOIA litigation should be included in the record.[1]

It is ordered, That the law judge's denial of respondent's motion for a stay of further proceedings and, in the alternative, for leave to supplement the record be, and it hereby is, affirmed.

AMREP CORPORATION

Docket 9018. Order, July 29, 1975

Denial of (1) respondent's motion for a stay of proceedings insofar as it invokes the administrative discretion of the Commission; and (2) respondent's request for oral argument on this matter.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR A STAY

This matter is before us on the administrative law judge's certification, pursuant to Section 3.22 of the Rules of Practice, of respondent's motion for a stay of these proceedings insofar as it invokes the administrative discretion of the Commission. The law judge rejected respondent's argument that it was entitled to such a stay as a matter of law to avoid prejudice to the rights of certain of its officers who are the subjects of a grand jury investigation now being conducted by the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

For the reasons stated in the law judge's order, we conclude that none of the arguments raised in respondent's motion warrant a discretionary stay of these proceedings.* We find nothing in this matter which would warrant an oral argument as requested by respondent. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid motion, as certified by the law judge's order of June 30, 1975, be, and it hereby is, denied.

[1] We reject respondent's argument that the administrative law judge lacked authority to rule on its motion for a stay. Disposition of respondent's motion involved questions relating to the timing of the taking of evidence and the completion of the evidentiary record. The questions were, accordingly, addressed to the administrative law judge's fact-finding function. Compare Philip Morris, Inc., 79 F.T.C. 1023 (1971).

* Respondent has also filed a reply to complaint counsel's answer to its motion. Although the reply is not specifically authorized by the Commission's Rules of Practice, the Commission has, in its discretion, considered the arguments raised therein in reaching its decision.

It is further ordered, That respondent's request for oral argument on this matter be, and it hereby is, denied.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Credit Data Northwest, a partnership doing business as Seattle Credit Bureau; Olympia Credit Bureau, Inc., Credit Bureau of Spokane, Inc., and Retail Credit Grantors Bureau, Ltd., corporations, individually and as partners in Credit Data Northwest; Terry B. Smith, individually and as general manager of Credit Data Northwest; and Allen F. Leiter, individually and as credit reporting manager of Credit Data Northwest; hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of the Fair Credit Reporting Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues this complaint stating its charges as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. For the purposes of this complaint and the accompanying order to cease and desist, "consumer report" and "consumer reporting agency" are defined as set forth in Sections 603(d) and (f) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act, respectively. Furthermore, "member" is defined as persons, partnerships, corporations or other entities which have contracted with respondents to receive consumer reports upon request in return for monetary dues, report fees and the obligation to report consumer credit information to respondents.

"Nonmember" is defined as persons, partnerships, corporations or other entities which apply and pay for consumer reports on a single report basis without previous contractual arrangements and for a higher fee than members.

PAR. 2. Credit Data Northwest is a partnership existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, under the assumed name Seattle Credit Bureau, with its office and principal place of business located at 1601 Second Ave., Seattle, Wash. Said respondent is a "consumer reporting agency" and is the sole successor and assign of Seattle Credit Bureau, Inc., a dissolved Washington corporation, and as such is liable for the acts and practices which were engaged in by Seattle Credit Bureau, Inc. Reference hereinafter to acts or omissions of "respondents" shall be deemed to include reference to acts or omissions of the former Seattle Credit Bureau, Inc. Credit Data Northwest is also liable for its own acts and practices as hereinafter alleged.

Olympia Credit Bureau, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, with its office and principal place of business located at 203 E. Fifth St., Olympia, Wash. Said respondent is a partner in Credit Data Northwest and is a "consumer reporting agency."

Credit Bureau of Spokane, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, with its office and principal place of business located at W. 521 Maxwell St., Spokane, Wash. Said respondent is a partner in Credit Data Northwest and is a "consumer reporting agency."

Retail Credit Grantors Bureau, Ltd. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the province of British Columbia, Canada, with its office and principal place of business located at 400 Robson St., Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. Said respondent is a partner in Credit Data Northwest and is a "consumer reporting agency," doing business in the United States of America.

Terry B. Smith is the general manager of Credit Data Northwest, former president of Seattle Credit Bureau, Inc., and president of Olympia Credit Bureau, Inc. His address is 1601 Second Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Allen F. Leiter is credit reporting manager of Credit Data Northwest and a former officer of Seattle Credit Bureau, Inc. His address is 1601 Second Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Terry B. Smith and Allen F. Leiter formulated, directed and controlled the acts and practices of the former Seattle Credit Bureau, Inc. when it was operating as a consumer reporting agency, and now formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of Credit Data Northwest in its operations as a consumer reporting agency.

PAR. 3. All the acts and practices alleged hereafter occurred subsequent to Apr. 25, 1971, the effective date of the Fair Credit Reporting Act, in the ordinary course of respondents' business. Allegations of respondents' present acts or practices include past acts or practices.

PAR. 4. Respondents fail to maintain reasonable procedures designed to limit the furnishing of consumer reports to the purposes listed in Section 604 of the Fair Credit Reporting Act. Typical and illustrative, but not all inclusive, of the manner in which respondents fail to maintain such reasonable procedures are the following:

A. Respondents fail in certain instances to make reasonable efforts to verify the identity of new member and nonmember consumer report applicants.

B. Respondents fail in a substantial number of instances to require nonmember consumer report applicants to certify the purpose for which the consumer report is sought and that it will be used for no other purpose.

C. Respondents give in a substantial number of instances consumer reports to applicants who have stated purposes for which the reports were sought other than those purposes listed in Section 604 of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

D. Respondents fail to specifically inquire of prospective members concerning the particular purposes for which information will be used, to set out such purposes in writing, and to require that prospective members certify to such purposes and certify that the information will be used for no other purposes as required by Section 607(a) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

E. Respondents fail to require members, such as private clubs, attorneys, private investigators and such other classes of members who respondents have substantial cause to believe have reason to obtain consumer reports for impermissible purposes under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, to certify the purposes for which the consumer reports are sought at the time of their request for such reports and that the information will be used for no other purpose.

F. Respondents fail to make reasonable efforts to verify the uses certified by member and nonmember consumer report users.

Therefore, respondents are in violation of Sections 604 and 607(a) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 5. Respondents fail to maintain reasonable procedures designed to avoid the inclusion in consumer reports of adverse items of information which antedate the report by more than the applicable period specified in Section 605 of the Fair Credit Reporting Act, including, but not limited to, the failure to omit from consumer reports information concerning the delinquency of accounts when such delinquencies occurred more than seven years prior to the giving of the consumer report.

Therefore, respondents are in violation of Section 607(a) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 6. Respondents fail to follow reasonable procedures to assure maximum possible accuracy of the information concerning the individuals to whom the consumer reports relate. Illustrative of the manner in which respondents fail to follow such reasonable procedures is the failure to distinguish between persons with identical or similar names with the result that consumer reports contain information on the wrong individual.

Therefore, respondents are in violation of Section 607(b) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 7. When the completeness or accuracy of an item of information in his or her file is disputed by a consumer, respondents fail in certain instances to:

A. Reinvestigate within a reasonable time;

B. Reinvestigate with the original creditor when an account placed for collection is disputed;

C. Record, after reinvestigation, the current status of information disputed by the consumer;

D. Promptly delete information which is found to be inaccurate or not verifiable after reinvestigation; and

E. Inform the consumer of results of reinvestigations adverse to the position of the consumer.

Therefore, respondents are in violation of Section 611(a) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 8. Respondents fail in certain instances to:

A. Clearly and conspicuously disclose to the consumer his or her right to request that notification of deletions of information, and/or consumer statement, codification, or summary thereof with respect to disputed information, be sent by respondents to persons designated by the consumer and who have received the deleted or disputed information within the previous two years for employment purposes or within the previous six months for any other purpose;

B. Furnish notification of deletions of information and the consumer statement, codification or summary thereof to any persons specifically designated by the consumer and qualified under Section 611(d) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act to receive such information.

Therefore, respondents are in violation of Section 611(d) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 9. When a dispute cannot be resolved and the consumer submits a brief statement of his or her version of the nature of the dispute, respondents fail in certain instances to clearly note in subsequent consumer reports containing the information in question that it is disputed by the consumer and provide either the consumer statement or a clear and accurate codification or summary thereof.

Therefore, respondents are in violation of Section 611(c) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 10. The acts and practices and omissions set forth in Paragraphs Four through Nine are in violation of the Fair Credit Reporting Act and, pursuant to Section 621(a) of that Act, respondents have thereby violated Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

EXHIBIT A

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS UNDER THE FAIR CREDIT REPORTING ACT

The Fair Credit Reporting Act became law on April 25, 1971. It was passed by Congress to protect consumers against the distribution of inaccurate or obsolete information and to ensure that consumer reporting agencies, such as Seattle Credit Bureau, exercise their responsibilities in a manner that is fair and equitable to consumers.

Under this law you can take steps to protect yourself if you have been denied credit, insurance, or employment, or if you believe you have had difficulties because of a consumer report on you.

THE FAIR CREDIT REPORTING ACT GIVES YOU THE RIGHT:

1. To be told the name and address of the consumer reporting agencies responsible for preparing a consumer report that was used to deny you credit, insurance, or employment or to increase the cost of credit or insurance.
2. To be told by a consumer reporting agency the nature, substance and names of sources of the information (except medical) collected about you.
3. To take anyone of your choice with you when you visit the consumer reporting agency to check your file.
4. To obtain all information to which you are entitled, free of charge, if you request a consumer interview within thirty days after you have been denied credit, insurance or employment. Otherwise, the reporting agency is permitted to charge a reasonable fee for giving you the information.
5. To be told the names of persons or businesses who have received a consumer report on you within the preceding six months, or within the preceding two years if the report was furnished for employment purposes.
6. To have incomplete or incorrect information reinvestigated, unless the request is frivolous, and, if the information is found to be inaccurate or cannot be verified, to have such information removed from your file.
7. To have the agency notify (at no cost to you) those you specify who have previously received the incorrect or incomplete information within two years if the report was for employment purposes or within six months for any other purpose, that this information has been deleted from your file.
8. When a dispute between you and the reporting agency about information in your file cannot be resolved, you have the right to have your version of such dispute placed in the file and included in future consumer reports.

9. To request the reporting agency to send your version of the dispute (for a reasonable fee) to those you name who received reports concerning the disputed information within the past six months (two years if received for employment purposes).

10. To request the consumer reporting agency to incorporate into your file all verifiable relevant credit information supplied by you, including good credit references.

11. To sue a reporting agency for damages if it willfully or negligently violates the law and, if you are successful, you can collect attorney fees and court costs.

12. In most instances not to have adverse information reported after seven years. One major exception is bankruptcy, which may be reported for fourteen years.

THE FAIR CREDIT REPORTING ACT DOES NOT:

1. Give you the right to request a report on yourself from the consumer reporting agency.

2. Give you the right when you visit the agency to receive a copy of or physically handle your file.

3. Compel anyone to do business with an individual consumer.

4. Apply when you request commercial (as distinguished from consumer) credit or business insurance.

5. Authorize any federal agency to intervene on behalf of an individual consumer.

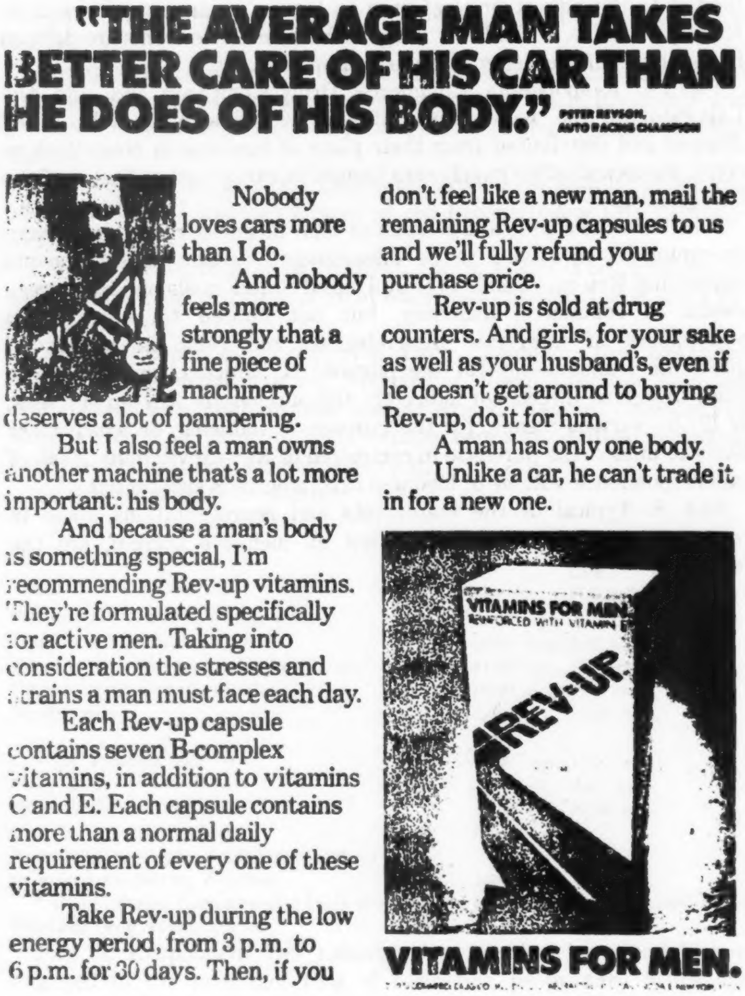
PAR. 6. Respondents Commerce Drug Company, Inc. and Del Laboratories, Inc. have caused Rev-up vitamins, when sold, to be shipped and distributed from their place of business in New York to retail stores and other purchasers located in various other States of the United States.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents have disseminated or caused to be disseminated certain advertisements concerning Rev-up vitamins (1) by United States mails and by various means in commerce, including, but not limited to, insertion in newspapers of interstate dissemination and radio broadcasts of interstate transmission, for the purpose of inducing, or which were likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of Rev-up vitamins, or (2) by various means, for the purpose of inducing, or which were likely to induce, the purchase in commerce of Rev-up vitamins. Each of said respondents' volume of business in commerce is substantial.

PAR. 8. Typical of the statements and representations made in respondents' advertisements, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:



"THE AVERAGE MAN TAKES BETTER CARE OF HIS CAR THAN HE DOES OF HIS BODY."

PETER REVSON,
AUTO RACING CHAMPION

Nobody loves cars more than I do.

And nobody feels more strongly that a fine piece of machinery deserves a lot of pampering.

But I also feel a man owns another machine that's a lot more important: his body.

And because a man's body is something special, I'm recommending Rev-up vitamins. They're formulated specifically for active men. Taking into consideration the stresses and strains a man must face each day.

Each Rev-up capsule contains seven B-complex vitamins, in addition to vitamins C and E. Each capsule contains more than a normal daily requirement of every one of these vitamins.

Take Rev-up during the low energy period, from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. for 30 days. Then, if you don't feel like a new man, mail the remaining Rev-up capsules to us and we'll fully refund your purchase price.

Rev-up is sold at drug counters. And girls, for your sake as well as your husband's, even if he doesn't get around to buying Rev-up, do it for him.

A man has only one body.

Unlike a car, he can't trade it in for a new one.

VITAMINS FOR MEN.

PAR. 9. Through the use of such advertisements and others not specifically set out herein, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that:

A. The stresses and strains a man undergoes create a condition which will be benefited by consumption of a vitamin product like Rev-up vitamins.

B. Active men need a specially formulated vitamin product like Rev-up vitamins.

C. There is a low-energy period in men from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. each day.

D. Rev-up vitamins will make one feel like a "new man."

PAR. 10. At the time the representations set forth in Paragraph Nine were made, respondents had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that such representations were true.

Therefore the advertisements and representations referred to in Paragraphs Eight and Nine were and are deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 11. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents Commerce Drug Company, Inc. and Del Laboratories, Inc. have been and are now in substantial competition in commerce with corporations, firms and individuals selling and distributing nonprescription vitamin products.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondent Levine, Huntley & Schmidt, Inc. has been, and now is, in substantial competition in commerce with other advertising agencies.

PAR. 13. The use by respondents of the aforesaid deceptive and unfair advertisements has had the tendency and capacity to mislead members of the public to rely thereon and to purchase substantial quantities of Rev-up vitamins.

PAR. 14. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted and now constitute unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce and unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. [HD,5; Decision and Order]

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Seattle Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

IN THE MATTER OF

ELKHORN MINING COMPANY T/A FREE ENTERPRISE URANIUM-RADON MINE, ET AL.

Docket C-2721. Complaint, Aug. 5, 1975–Decision, Aug. 5, 1975

Consent order requiring a Boulder, Mont., owner and operator of a uranium mine, among other things to cease misrepresenting the curative or physiological effect of radon gas on disease; and failing to disclose to prospective customers that radon gas has any provable physiological effect on disease, including arthritis, sinusitus, eczema and asthma.

For the Commission: Thomas C. Armitage.

For the respondents: John F. Bell, Bolkovatz & Romine, Helena, Mont.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Elkhorn Mining Company, a corporation dba Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine, Radon Research Foundation, a corporation, and John T. Lewis, individually and as an officer of Elkhorn Mining Company (hereinafter respondents), have violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that a proceeding would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint:

PARAGRAPH 1. Elkhorn Mining Company is a Montana corporation with its office located at Boulder Bank Bldg., Boulder, Mont. It does business under the name Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine.

Radon Research Foundation is a Montana nonprofit corporation with its office located at Boulder Bank Bldg., Boulder, Mont. It had no receipts or disbursements in the past three years. It employed no one to do research. All expenses were paid by the Elkhorn Mining Company or its former president Wade V. Lewis personally. It distributes promotional literature for the Free Enterprise Mine and authors promotional literature distributed by the Elkhorn Mining Company. Its activities therefore inure to the monetary benefit of the Elkhorn Mining Company. It is therefore subject to Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction, 15 U.S.C. §44.

John T. Lewis is an individual and officer of Elkhorn Mining Company. He formulates, directs and controls the policies of said corporation, and his address is the same as that of said corporation.

PAR. 2. Respondents carry on the following business: The Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine is a vertical shaft some eighty-five feet in depth with a horizontal shaft at the bottom some four hundred feet in length. Persons afflicted with various diseases, principally arthritis, are taken into this mine for a fee. In the mine shaft they remain for various periods of time breathing air which contains radon, a gaseous element derived from the decaying uranium surrounding the shaft. It is claimed that breathing radon will benefit these persons by curing or improving various afflictions.

PAR. 3. Respondents advertise in media of interstate dissemination and ship advertisements and brochures in commerce through the mails.

PAR. 4. Respondents' advertisements and brochures claim that the cause of arthritis is known and that cause is hormone deficiencies. Respondents claim that radon gas, derived from the ore in the mine, stimulates the production of ACTH, a hormone, which in turn stimulates the production of hydrocortisone. These hormones, it is claimed, are beneficial to and curative of arthritis, bursitis, sinusitis, asthma, eczema, skin affliction, and kindred ailments.

PAR. 5. Illustrative of respondents' advertising claims are the following quotations:

> NATURE'S RADON THERAPY and IONIZATION are now recognized as REACHING THE CAUSE OF ARTHRITIS and many kindred afflictions.
> NATURE reaches CAUSE OF ARTHRITIS.
> Visit the Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine at Boulder, Montana, for arthritis, sinusitis, asthma, skin afflictions and kindred ailments.
> * * * radiation due to RADON GAS transmutation elements in the air of the mine workings, is of such type and amount as to stimulate the master pituitary gland in its production of ACTH, this body product thereupon acting upon the adrenal cortex to produce hydrocortisone, the great pain killer.
> Research through Radon Research Foundation indicates there are two basic causes of arthritis and kindred glandular connected ailments:
> 1. AN EXTERNAL CAUSE: Stress, strain or shock of physical, mental or emotional origin.
> 2. AN INTERNAL CAUSE: Retardation of the glands' activities, resulting in non-normal production of body hormones.
> Exposure to the mild radiation from breathing transmuted elements from radon, a gas * * * represents a scientific break-through, offering a remedy reaching a principal CAUSE of rheumatoid arthritis and allied glandular afflictions.
> It (radon gas) exerts an influence on the autonomic nervous system, improves the circulatory state, and causes removal of waste from the organism and an activation of hormone producing organs, particularly the pituitary-adrenal system.

PAR. 6. These statements and others contained in respondents' advertisements and promotional literature are false, misleading and deceptive as follows:

A. Radon gas and the Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine do not have any curative or physiological effect upon any disease or bodily condition, including arthritis, sinusitus, eczema or other skin afflictions, or asthma.

B. Radon gas does not have any beneficial effect on the autonomic nervous system, the circulatory state, the removal of waste, and the utilization of oxygen by defense cells of the body.

C. There is no one cause for arthritis. There are more than sixty (60) forms of joint disease now recognized by the American Rheumatism Association, and it is unlikely that any two have the same cause. Some of these causes are well known; a number of causes are unknown.

D. The role of stress, either internal or external, in causing or aggravating arthritis is unknown.

E. Below normal production of adrenal hormones is a well-known condition named Addison's Disease. Underproduction of hormones is not related to any form of joint disease.

F. Lack of or deficiency in ACTH and hydrocortisone does not cause joint disease.

G. Radon gas does not increase production of ACTH, hydrocortisone, or any other hormone.

H. White blood cells are the most sensitive to radiation. If the radiation in respondents' mine is not great enough to affect these cells, it does not affect the body at all. If, on the other hand, the radiation is sufficient to affect white blood cells, it is dangerous and requires careful monitoring. The level of radiation in respondents' mine is in fact not dangerous to humans.

I. Even if the production of ACTH and hydrocortisone were increased by the inhalation of radon gas, the beneficial effects would be only symptomatic, failing to reach the causes of arthritis.

J. The use of radon gas does not represent a scientific breakthrough.

K. Such "cures" as are claimed by customers of respondents' mine are either of psychosomatic origin or are due to the coincidental cyclical remission of arthritis.

PAR. 7. Respondents further fail to disclose, prior to the purchase of visits to the mine by customers, a number of material facts as follows:

A. Neither radon gas nor the Free Enterprise Mine has any physiological effect on any disease or bodily condition, including arthritis, sinusitis, eczema or other skin afflictions, or asthma.

B. Any benefits claimed by visitors to the Free Enterprise Mine are psychosomatic or are due to the coincidental cyclical remission of a disease.

C. Patients should consult their doctors before and/or after going to the Free Enterprise Mine. They may be missing the benefits of known and medically approved forms of therapy. Lack of medically accepted treatment of arthritis may result in greater pain and possible permanent disability.

Knowledge of these facts may affect a customer's decision as to whether to purchase visits to respondents' mine.

PAR. 8. The above-described conduct constitutes unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty days, and having duly considered the comments filed thereafter pursuant to Section 2.34 of its rules, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

A. Respondent Elkhorn Mining Company is a Montana corporation with its office located at Boulder Bank Bldg., Boulder, Mont. It does business under the name Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine.

Respondent Radon Research Foundation is a Montana corporation with its office located at Boulder Bank Bldg., Boulder, Mont.

Respondent John T. Lewis is an individual and officer of Elkhorn Mining Company. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his address is the same as that of said corporation.

B. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Elkhorn Mining Company, a corporation dba Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine, Radon Research Foundation, a corporation, their successors and assigns, and their officers, and John T. Lewis, individually and as an officer of Elkhorn Mining Company, and respondents' agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, do forthwith cease and desist from representing directly or by implication, that:

A. Radon gas or the Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine has any curative or physiological effect upon any disease or bodily condition, including arthritis, sinusitus, eczema or other skin afflictions, or asthma.

B. Radon gas has any beneficial effect on the autonomic nervous system, the circulatory state, the removal of waste, or the utilization of oxygen by defense cells of the body.

C. There is a single cause of arthritis or that the cause or causes of arthritis are known.

D. Arthritis is caused by or has any relationship to stress, either internal or external.

E. Arthritis or any form of joint disease is caused by hormone deficiencies of any type.

F. Arthritis is caused by underproduction of ACTH or any hormone associated with the pituitary gland or the adrenal gland.

G. Radon gas increases production of ACTH, hydrocortisone, or any other hormone.

H. Exposure to any radioactive gas has any physiological effect on any disease or bodily condition.

I. ACTH or hydrocortisone, no matter how administered, results in anything but temporary symptomatic relief of arthritis.

J. The use of radon gas represents a scientific breakthrough.

K. Improvements in condition claimed to result from visits to the Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine are neither psychosomatic nor the result of coincidental remission of a disease.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall clearly and conspicuously (a) include in all advertising and promotional materials for radon gas or the Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine, and (b) provide by means of a separate written statement furnished to each prospective customer prior to the time he or she pays for the Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine visit, the following form of notice:

NOTICE

You are advised to consult with your doctor before and/or after going to the Free Enterprise Uranium-Radon Mine. You may be missing the benefits of known and medically approved forms of treatment. Lack of medically accepted treatment of arthritis may result in greater pain and possible permanent disability.

This notice is made pursuant to order of the Federal Trade Commission.

In addition to the above, the separate written statement shall set forth the following language:

It is further ordered, That respondents shall maintain such records as will fully disclose the manner and form of their compliance with this order.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. For the respondent: Pro se.

COMPLAINT

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondent named in the caption hereof, and the respondent having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Atlanta Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondent with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing Regulation promulgated thereunder; and

The respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

2. Representing in any such advertisement, directly or by implication, that no downpayment is required, the amount of the downpayment or the amount of any installment payment, either in dollars or as a percentage, the dollar amount of any finance charge, the number of installments or the period of repayment, or that there is no charge for credit, unless all of the following items are clearly and conspicuously stated, in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) of Regulation Z:

(b) the number, amount, and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended;

(c) the amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate.

3. Failing, in any consumer credit transaction or advertisement, to make all disclosures, determined in accordance with Section 226.4 and Section 226.5 of Regulation Z, in the manner, form and amount required by Sections 226.6, 226.8, 226.9 and 226.10 of Regulation Z.

It is further ordered, That respondent deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future personnel of respondent engaged in the consummation of any extension of consumer credit or in any aspect of preparation, creation, or placing of advertising, and that respondent secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said copy of this order from each such person.

It is further ordered, That the respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That the respondent herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation, as amended, promulgated thereunder, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Heftler Realty Sales, Inc., a corporation, and Clyde M. Taylor, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts and the implementing regulation, as amended, promulgated under the Truth in Lending Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Heftler Realty Sales, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal office and place of business located at 9450 Sunset Dr., Miami, Fla.

Respondent Clyde M. Taylor is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale and sale of condominium units and single family homes to members of the public.

PAR. 3. In the regular course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents regularly advertise the availability and cost of consumer credit and offer to extend or arrange for the extension of such credit, as "consumer credit" is defined in Section 226.2 of Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, as amended, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

PAR. 4. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, respondents, in the ordinary course of business as aforesaid, have caused, and are causing to be published, advertisements, as "advertisement" is defined in Section 226.2 of Regulation Z, which advertisements aid, promote or assist, directly or indirectly, the extension of other than open end credit.

PAR. 5. Respondents, in certain of these advertisements, have stated, and are stating, the rate of a finance charge, as "finance charge" is defined in Section 226.2 of Regulation Z, and have not expressed said rate as an annual percentage rate, using the term "annual percentage rate," as "annual percentage rate" is defined in Section 226.2 of Regulation Z, in violation of Section 226.10(d)(1) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 6. Respondents, in certain of these advertisements, have stated, and are stating, the amount of the downpayment required, that no downpayment is required, or that the downpayment is a certain percentage of the stated sales price without also stating all of the following items, in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) thereof:

a. The cash price;

b. the amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;

c. the number, amount, and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended; and

d. the amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate.

PAR. 7. By and through the aforesaid failures to make disclosures, respondents have failed to comply with the requirements of Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, as amended, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failure to comply with Regulation Z constitutes violations of that Act and, pursuant to Section 108 thereof, respondents have thereby violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Atlanta Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Acts and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Heftler Realty Sales, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal office and place of business located at 9450 Sunset Dr., Miami, Fla.

Respondent Clyde M. Taylor is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his address is the same as that of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding, and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Heftler Realty Sales, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Clyde M. Taylor, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with any advertisement to aid, promote or assist directly or indirectly any extension of consumer credit, as "consumer credit" and "advertisement" are defined in Regulation Z (12 C.F.R. §226) of the Truth and Lending Act (Pub.L. 90-321; 15 U.S.C. §1601, et seq.), do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Failing to state the rate of a charge for consumer credit expressed as an "annual percentage rate," using that term, as prescribed by Section 226.10(d)(1) of Regulation Z.

2. Representing in any such advertisement, directly or by implication, that no downpayment is required, the amount of the downpayment or the amount of any installment payment, either in dollars or as a percentage, the dollar amount of any finance charge, the number of installments or the period of repayment, or that there is no charge for credit, unless all of the following items are clearly and conspicuously stated, in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) of Regulation Z:

a. The cash price;

b. the amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;

c. the number, amount and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended; and

d. the amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate.

3. Failing, in any advertisement, to make all disclosures as required by Section 226.10 of Regulation Z and in the manner prescribed therein.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That the respondent corporation, its successors and assigns, shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR LEAVE TO FILE ANSWERING BRIEF

Respondents herein on July 31, 1975 filed with the Commission a motion for leave to file a brief in answer to complaint counsel's appeal from the initial decision of the administrative law judge, the thirty-day period of time for the filing of said answering brief allowed by Section

3.52(c) of the Commission's Rules of Practice having expired. As grounds for the request respondents state that the work schedule of counsel, complicated by shortage of personnel in the office, prohibited the brief from being filed on time. Respondents also contend that inasmuch as oral argument has been waived, no prejudice is likely to occur with respect to any party. Annexed to said motion is respondents' "Answering Brief."

Complaint counsel have filed an answer in opposition to respondents' motion wherein they point out that respondents' answer to the complaint in this proceeding, respondents' proposed findings and respondents' notice of intention to appeal the initial decision have all been untimely filed.

The Commission has concluded that good cause has not been shown for the relief requested and is therefore of the opinion that respondents' motion should be denied and that all copies of the "Answering Brief" filed with said motion should be returned to respondents by the secretary.

Accordingly, It is ordered, That the aforesaid request by respondents for leave to file an answering brief be, and it hereby is, denied.

Docket No. 8990. Complaint, Aug. 7, 1974-Decision, Aug. 18, 1975

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that respondent Spiegel, Inc. has violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, issues this complaint:

PARAGRAPH 1. Spiegel, Inc. is a Delaware corporation, with its office and principal place of business located at 2511 W. 23rd St., Chicago, Ill.

PAR. 2. Respondent is a catalog retailer, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of clothing, household goods, appliances, tools, tires and various other articles of merchandise. Allegations below of respondent's present acts or practices include past acts or practices.

PAR. 3. In the course of its mail-order catalog business, respondent receives orders from purchasers in various States at its place of business in Illinois and causes its products when sold to be shipped from Illinois to purchasers located in various States of the United States. Thus, respondent maintains a substantial course of business in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course of its business, respondent regularly extends credit (hereinafter referred to as retail credit accounts) for the purpose of facilitating consumers' purchase of respondent's products.

PAR. 5. In the course of its collection of retail credit accounts, respondent regularly sues allegedly defaulting retail mail-order purchasers who reside in States other than Illinois (hereinafter referred to as out-of-State defendants) in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois. Courts located in the State and county where out-of-State defendants reside or where they signed the contracts sued upon could be used for these suits. Almost all out-of-State defendants have received respondent's catalogs or other advertising material, and executed purchase orders or contracts, in their home States. Almost all out-of-State defendants have had no pertinent contact with the State of Illinois other than their dealings with respondent.

PAR. 6. The distance, cost and inconvenience of defending such suits in Illinois place a virtually insurmountable burden on out-of-State defendants. Respondent thus effectively deprives these defendants of a reasonable opportunity to appear, answer and defend. Therefore, such use of distant or inconvenient forum is unfair.

PAR. 7. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair acts or practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INITIAL DECISION BY HARRY R. HINKES, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

JANUARY 31, 1975

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

In a complaint issued by the Federal Trade Commission on Aug. 7, 1974, respondent, Spiegel, Inc., was charged with unfair acts or practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in suing defaulting retail mail-order purchasers who reside in States other than Illinois in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois. By answer duly filed respondent admitted all of the material factual allegations of the complaint but denied any violation of law. The record was thereupon closed and the parties have submitted proposed findings and briefs. Pursuant to the admitted factual allegations of the complaint, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Spiegel, Inc., is a Delaware corporation, with its office and principal place of business located at 2511 W. 23rd St., Chicago, Ill.

2. Respondent is a catalog retailer, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of clothing, household goods, appliances, tools, tires and various other articles of merchandise. Allegations below of respondent's present acts or practices include past acts or practices.

3. In the course of its mail-order catalog business, respondent receives orders from purchasers in various States at its place of business in Illinois and causes its products when sold to be shipped from Illinois to purchasers located in various States of the United States. Thus, respondent maintains a substantial course of business in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

4. In the course of its business, respondent regularly extends credit (hereinafter referred to as retail credit accounts) for the purpose of facilitating consumers' purchase of respondent's products.

5. In the course of its collection of retail credit accounts, respondent regularly sues allegedly defaulting retail mail-order purchasers who reside in States other than Illinois (hereinafter referred to as out-of-State defendants) in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois. Courts located in the State and county where out-of-State defendants reside or where they signed the contracts sued upon could be used for these suits. Almost all out-of-State defendants have received respondent's catalogs or other advertising material, and executed purchase orders or contracts, in their home States. Almost all out-of-State defendants have had no pertinent contact with the State of Illinois other than their dealings with respondent.

6. The distance, cost and inconvenience of defending such suits in Illinois place a virtually insurmountable burden on out-of-State defendants.

COMMENT

The respondent states:

> The material factual allegation charged in the complaint is that suits filed by Spiegel in Cook County, Illinois, are inconvenient to defaulting debtors who reside in another state.

This is an oversimplification of this case. In fact, the complaint alleges that respondent Spiegel, Inc., in the course of its mail-order catalog retailer business, regularly sues in the courts of Illinois allegedly defaulting retail mail-order purchasers who reside in States other than Illinois (hereinafter referred to as out-of-State defendants) and that such acts and practices are to the prejudice and injury to the public and constitute unfair acts and practices in commerce in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. This distinction is important as will be explained below.

In recent years the limits of permissible in personam jurisdiction over out-of-State defendants have undergone great modification and expansion. Originally physical presence within the forum State was required, Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1877), regardless of how temporary the presence may have been. This concept of jurisdiction changed in Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U.S. 352 (1927), where a Massachusetts nonresident motorist statute was upheld and in Doherty & Co. v. Goodman, 294 U.S. 623 (1935), where jurisdiction over nonresidents was recognized for claims resulting from doing business within the State. In International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310 (1945), the Supreme Court laid down the constitutional requirements for the assertion of jurisdiction:

> Due process requires only that in order to subject a defendant to a judgment in personam, if he be not present within the territory of the forum, he have certain minimum contacts with it such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice."

The court considered relevant both an estimate of the inconveniences to each party and an estimate of the quality and nature of the activity being conducted by the nonresident defendant within the forum.

The "minimum contacts" theory of International Shoe was further defined in later Supreme Court decisions. In McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220 (1957), a foreign insurance company was sued in California for payment under a life insurance policy. The company had never solicited nor done any insurance business in California apart from this one policy which was transacted by mail. In personam jurisdiction of the foreign insurance company was upheld, the Court noting that the insurance contract was delivered in California, the premiums were mailed from there, the insured was a resident of the State and died there and that there was a substantial State interest in protecting residents from insurers who refused to pay. In Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235 (1958), the Court held that a Florida court had no personal jurisdiction over a Delaware trustee corporation when the only connection between the trustees and Florida was some correspondence between the settlor and the trustees, holding that the act done or the transaction consummated in the forum must be one "by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws."

Respondent points to a number of statutes which have been enacted in a number of States conferring jurisdiction upon the courts of that State over persons transacting any business within the State whether or not such persons are resident or present in the State. Not only is such a jurisdictional statute in effect in the State of Illinois, (Smith-Hurd, Ill. Stat., Supp. 1967, c.110 Sec. 17) but more than one-half of the States have enacted such so-called long-arm statutes in one form or another (4 Wright & Miller Fed. Practice and Procedure, Sec. 1068). Similarly, the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws have promulgated and the American Bar Association has approved the Uniform Interstate and International Procedure Act containing a long-arm provision and Congress has enacted a long-arm statute for the District of Columbia (13 D.C. Code Sec. 423, 1973 ed.). Respondent argues, therefore, that the validity of long-arm jurisdiction is beyond question.

But that is not the issue before us. The validity of the Illinois statute is not involved. Its application to the persons specified in this proceeding is involved and a determination must be made whether such out-of-State defendants have contacts with the forum sufficient to comport with fair play. To this end respondent cites the fact that the out-of-State defendants purposefully and intentionally mailed to Illinois a purchase order for merchandise, instructing Spiegel to ship merchandise from Chicago. Respondent argues that, thus, the out-of-State defendants transacted business within Illinois and submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the courts of Illinois as to causes of action arising from such business transactions. But respondent concedes, as it must, that such in personam jurisdiction over out-of-State defendants in Illinois courts is proper only if the nonresidents have contacts with the forum, Illinois, sufficient to comport with due process and where the nonresidents have committed any of the acts specifically enumerated in the long-arm statute. Stated differently, the question is whether Spiegel, a mail-order house in the State of Illinois, can sue an out-of-State retail mail-order purchaser of its merchandise in the courts of Illinois.

This practice has been decried by many commentators and assumed to be violative of due process by many courts, but, to the best of my knowledge, has never been specifically adjudicated in a litigated action. The language of some court decisions is instructive on this point.

In In-Flight Devices Corporation v. Van Dusen Air Incorporated, 466 F.2d 220, 233 (1972), it was stated:

> In our economy the seller often initiates the deal, tends to set many, if not all of the terms on which it will sell, and, of course, bears the burden of producing the goods or services, in the course of which production injuries and other incidents giving rise to litigation frequently arise. The buyer, on the other hand is frequently a relatively passive party, simply placing an order, accepting the seller's price and terms as stated in his product advertisement and agreeing only to pay a sum upon receipt of the goods or services.

The court went on to note that if the buyer vigorously negotiates terms, inspects production, travels to the forum, conducts substantial interstate business and the like, then his contacts with the forum are increased and the expectation and likelihood that he may be successfully sued in a distant forum are also correspondingly increased. See, e.g., Ziegler v. Houghton-Mifflin Co., 224 N.E. 2d. 12 (1967). It cannot be denied that here Spiegel initiated the contacts with the buyer through its mail-order catalog and advertisements and dictated the price and terms of the contract. Generally, the purchase is the only contact the buyer has had with Spiegel or Illinois.

The language of an Illinois court in Geneva Industries Inc. v. Copeland Construction Co., 312 F.Supp. at 188 (1970), is even more specific:

> The notion that any customer of an Illinois based mail-order house such as Sears Roebuck or Montgomery Ward [or Spiegel?] would be subject to the jurisdiction of Illinois is obviously violative of the most minimal standard of minimum contacts and the fundamental structure of the Federal system. (Emphasis added.)

The court noted differences in an earlier Illinois case, Gorden v. ITT, 273 F.Supp. 164 (1967), where the out-of-State defendant was subjected to the jurisdiction of the Illinois court because it "regularly sent its salesmen into Illinois to solicit orders * * *" and engaged in a heavy mail-order solicitation in Illinois. See also Koplin v. Thomas, Haab & Botts, 219 N.E. 2d. 646, 652 (1966), where the court upheld in personam jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant which "affirmatively and voluntarily sought the benefit of our [Illinois] laws by initiating and soliciting the sales here." (Emphasis added.)

In McQuay, Inc. v. Schlosberg, Inc., 321 F.Supp. 902 (1971), the court said:

> The general philosophy of long-arm statutes is to protect citizens of a state where a nonresident comes into the state directly or indirectly to sell something or solicit sales, or where, even though out-of-state, a nonresident sells a product which is brought into or comes to rest in the state. The nonresident thus receives the benefit and protection of the state laws and profits or hopes to from its adventure therein. The nonresident is the aggressor or initiator. It is appropriate that such a nonresident seller should respond to service of process in that state.

The court added that where a nonresident corporation enjoys no particular privilege or protection in purchasing products from the seller in the forum State, it would be wrong to subject the nonresident buyer to the jurisdiction of the forum State:

> The rationale behind this long time statutory precedent is that a defendant ought to be entitled to defend himself among people and in a community where he resides and is known, his witnesses generally will reside in or near the place of his residence, his counsel will be from his community, the goods he has purchased * * * likely will be situated in his home community. Such concepts have roots deep in common law traditions. It would seem that this is what the United States Supreme Court meant by "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice" in International Shoe, supra.

Courts have also distinguished between out-of-State buyers and out-of-State sellers noting that generally it would be more equitable to impose in personam jurisdiction over out-of-State sellers than out-of-State buyers. See, for example, Nordberg Div. of Rex Chainbelt Inc. v. Hudson Engineering Corp., 361 F.Supp. 903 (1973), where the court noted that "sellers in general have more resources to defend themselves in out-of-state litigation than do buyers." The same case also noted that individuals and small companies may be hard put to defend themselves in a foreign forum saying:

> A customer of a mail-order house, be it an individual or a small company engaged in a one-state operation, is also more likely to be unprepared to defend itself in a foreign forum than is a company * * * which transacts a substantial amount of interstate business. When almost all of its business is conducted in its home state, a customer of a mail-order house does not expect to be forced to travel to a distant forum. It thus lacks experience in out-of-state litigation. When its expectations are disappointed, it is caught unprepared pyschologically and, perhaps, financially. (Emphasis added.)

In Conn v. Whitmore, 342 P.2d 871 (1959), an Illinois horse fancier wrote to the defendant in Utah, offering to sell him several horses. The defendant had a friend inspect the horses in Illinois, accepted the offer by mail from Utah and sent a servant to Illinois to pick up his purchases. The Court refused to enforce an Illinois judgment against the buyer. "It was not the defendant Utah resident who took the initiative by going into Illinois to transact business, nor did he engage in any activity resulting in injury or damage there. Quite the contrary, it was the plaintiff resident of Illinois who proselyted for business in Utah." Much the same can be said of Spiegel's relationship with its out-of-State mail-order purchasers.

Thus, Spiegel's suits in Illinois courts against out-of-State retail mail-order purchasers would be deemed beyond the pale of the Illinois long-arm statute whether one considers the extent of such purchasers' activities within Illinois or whether one considers the extent of the interstate business of such purchasers or whether one considers the participation of such purchasers in the terms and conditions of the contract. In short, under the doctrine of International Shoe, supra, considering the inconveniences to each party and the quality and nature of the activity being conducted within the forum, the maintenance of a suit by Spiegel in Illinois against out-of-State retail mail-order purchasers could not but offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. See Currie, The Growth of the Long Arm, 1963 U. Ill. L.F. 533, 577. Such practice is oppressive since the distance, cost and inconvenience of defending such suits in Illinois effectively deprives out-of-State defendants of a reasonable opportunity to appear, answer and defend.

Nor can it be denied that the practice causes substantial injury to such defendants since a default judgment may be entered in Illinois without defendants effectively being able to contest it, ultimately operating to their substantial economic detriment in the impairment of their credit standing if nothing else. As the court noted in Barquis v. Merchants Collection Association of Oakland, Inc., 496 P.2nd 817 (1972):

> Knowingly filing actions in distant counties in order to gain an unconscionable advantage is not a unique or isolated practice, but instead has been continuously identified * * * as a widespread and common abuse in the debt collection field.

Respondent argues, nevertheless, that if, indeed, this practice of Spiegel is violative of due process, it cannot be acted upon without a second suit in the State of the defendant purchaser where the latter may raise the issue of due process and, if successful, prevent collection. It is unlikely, however, that such purchaser in the second suit would have an opportunity to raise any valid defenses on the merits or make counter-claims or correct the damage done to his credit rating. Moreover, such circuitous and last-ditch defense tarnishes the machinery of justice. Supreme Court Chief Justice Burger noted that there was a need to improve the machinery of justice so that the sense of confidence in the courts will not be destroyed by a belief among people "who have long been exploited" that "the courts cannot vindicate their legal rights from fraud and overreaching in the smaller daily transactions of life." 69 U.S. News & World Report 68 (No. 8, Aug. 13, 1970). It is even more incumbent upon the Federal Trade Commission which is specifically charged with protecting the public from unfair trade practices to act under these circumstances. See Barquis, supra, p. 828.

The injury to such mail-order purchasers subjected to suits in distant forums was pointed out not only by the courts but by others as well.

The National Commission on Consumer Finance, for example, stated in its report of December 1972:

> Many states permit a suit of money judgment to be brought in a county where either the plaintiff or defendant resides. This type of venue provision can easily be abused by plaintiffs in collection matters. For example, if the plaintiff-creditor has multiple locations or a central place of business fairly distant from the county or location where most of its customers reside, it can initiate suit in a venue (location) which, though "legally" proper, is extremely distant from or inconvenient to the debtor-defendant. The practice usually results in the entry of a default judgment and, in effect, deprives the debtor-defendant of a reasonable opportunity to defend against the underlying claim.

Similar observations are contained in the final draft of the Uniform Consumer Credit Code by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (1974) and in the first final draft of the National Consumer Act (National Consumer Law Center, Boston College Law School, Brighton, Mass. (1970).

> Even if the debtor's defense was totally lacking in merit, he should not have been denied his opportunity to assert it. Even the most deadbeat debtor can perceive the perversion of justice in a procedure that allows a default judgment to be entered against him in a court at the other end of Texas, (Sampson, Distant Forum Abuse in Consumer Transactions, 51 Tex. L.R. 269 (1973)).

The Commission's guidelines in ascertaining fairness or unfairness were noted by the Supreme Court in Sperry & Hutchinson v. Federal Trade Commission, 405 U.S. 233, 244-45 n. 5 (1972). Where, as here, the practice has been found to offend public policy as it has been established by statutes, common law or otherwise and where it is oppressive and causes substantial injury to consumers, such practice may be found unfair and prohibited. I have found that Spiegel's practices involved in this proceeding lack due process and do not conform to the objectives of long-arm statutes. But even if they had been valid under such statutes, it would not change the outcome of this proceeding. What may have been lawful heretofore may, nevertheless, be found to have become an unfair trade practice under current community standards of fair dealing. See, e.g. Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 86 F.2d 692, 696 (1936). I have found that Spiegel's use of the Illinois long-arm statute against out-of-State retail mail-order purchasers would not comport with fair play and would be deemed unfair. Under such circumstances, the Commission is authorized to act even in the absence of proof of actual injury to anyone. See Spiegel, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 494 F.2d 59, 62 (1974).

THE REMEDY

The Commission's authority and obligation to enter an order of sufficient breadth to ensure that a respondent will not engage in future violations of the law is well established; the Commission has widest discretion to fashion suitable order provisions, not limited to the exact nature of the specific violations, to protect the public interest. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 392, 394-5 (1965); Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, 428-30 (1957); Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co. 343 U.S. 470, 473 (1952); Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U.S. 608, 611-13 (1946). The only limitations set by the courts are that the order provisions must be reasonably related to the unlawful practices and must be sufficiently clear and precise in defining understandable parameters of compliance and enforcement. Colgate, 380 U.S. at 392, 394-95; National Lead, 352 U.S. at 428-30; Ruberoid, 343 U.S. at 473; Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 726 (1948).

Thus, Paragraph One of the order herein prohibits the institution of suits against a defendant other than where defendant resides or where the contract sued upon was signed. This will not preempt any rule of law which further limits choice of forum and is similar to the consent orders issued by the Commission in Montgomery Ward & Co., C-2602 (Nov. 1974) [84 F.T.C. 1337] and West Coast Credit Corp., C-2600 (Nov. 1974) [84 F.T.C. p. 1328].

Paragraph Two of the order herein is also akin to the consent orders in Montgomery Ward and West Coast Credit, supra. It requires Spiegel to terminate any suit instituted contrary to the provisions of Paragraph One above and vacate any default judgment entered thereunder, although a change of forum is permitted instead. Respondent opposes this paragraph as harsh and unfair. But this termination requirement is triggered only after Spiegel learns that such a suit had been instituted. Complaint counsel interprets this paragraph of the order to be prospective in effect and not disturbing existing judgments. Consequently, the burden on Spiegel should not be undue, and would insure that Spiegel did not retain the fruits of a suit and judgment improperly, but in good faith, obtained. Moreover, this paragraph permits Spiegel to seek a change of forum where permitted by State law. At the same time, defendants are to be given a reasonable opportunity to defend the new proceeding by Spiegel.

Paragraph Three of the order herein requires Spiegel to notify credit bureaus and consumer reporting agencies, as well as any others upon request of the defendant, of the termination of suits improperly filed and the vacation of default judgments obtained thereunder. This is necessary to overcome the harm done to the defendant's credit reputation by the filing of an improper suit even though the suit may have been terminated later.

Paragraph Four of the order herein concerns recordkeeping. It requires Spiegel to prepare and maintain a summary of consumer law suits filed for two years following the commencement of this order. This will enable the Commission to monitor compliance and should not constitute an undue burden to Spiegel which can comply with relatively slight clerical operations at the scene of such activity. It would be much more burdensome for the Commission to undertake such monitoring considering Spiegel's far-flung operations. This paragraph also requires Spiegel to prepare such a summary for the year preceding the issuance of the complaint herein, Aug. 7, 1974. This will enable the Commission to gauge the effectiveness of the order and is consistent with the Commission's powers. See, e.g., National Dynamics Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 492 F.2d 1333 (1974); Tashof v. Federal Trade Commission 437 F.2d 707, 715 (1970); Arthur Murray Studio of Washington, Inc., 78 F.T.C. 401, 436 (1971).

Paragraphs Five, Six and Seven of the order herein are standard provisions.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Spiegel, Inc., a corporation, and its successors, assigns, officers, agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, or other device, including any collection agency, in connection with the collection of retail credit accounts in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Instituting suits except in the county where defendant resides at the commencement of the action, or in the county where the defendant signed the contract sued upon. This provision shall not preempt any rule of law which further limits choice of forum or which requires, in actions involving real property or fixtures attached to real property, that suit be instituted in a particular county.

It is further ordered, That, where respondent learns subsequent to institution of a suit that the preceding paragraph has not been complied with, it shall forthwith terminate the suit and vacate any default judgment entered thereunder. In lieu of such termination, respondent may effect a change of forum to a county permitted by the preceding paragraph, provided that respondent gives defendant notice of such action and opportunity to defend equivalent to that which defendant would receive if a new suit were being instituted. In all cases respondent shall provide defendants with a clear explanation of the action taken and of defendants' rights to appear, answer and defend in the new forum.

It is further ordered, That where respondent terminates a suit or vacates a judgment pursuant to the preceding paragraph, it shall give notice of such termination or vacation to each "consumer reporting agency," as such term is defined in the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. §603), which it has been informed or has reason to know has recorded the suit or judgment in its files. Additionally, respondent shall furnish such notice to any other person or organization upon request of the defendant.

It is further ordered, That respondent prepare and maintain a summary of suits instituted, pending, terminated, or acted upon subsequent to judgment. This summary shall contain each defendant's name, address, and county of residence; county where the contract was signed by the defendant, if the suit was not instituted in the residence county; county where served; date served; date filed; docket number; name and location of court in which filed; name of plaintiff (if a collection agency suing in its own name); amount claimed; and disposition (including garnishment or execution, if any). Where a suit has been instituted in a county other than where defendant resides or signed the contract, the reason for this choice of forum shall be explained. This summary shall cover three years, including Aug. 1, 1973 to Aug. 1, 1974, and two years immediately following effective date of this order. A copy of this summary shall be submitted to the Federal Trade Commission on a quarterly basis except that the summary of activity for the first year shall be submitted within sixty days after the effective date of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall forthwith deliver a copy of this order to each of its subsidiaries and operating divisions, to each collection agency currently collecting any of respondent's retail credit accounts, and to any other collection agency prior to referral to it of any of respondent's retail credit accounts. Respondent shall obtain and preserve signed and dated statements from each collection agency, acknowledging receipt of the order and willingness to comply with it.

It is further ordered, That respondent notify the Commission at least thirty days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within sixty days and at the end of six months after the effective date of the order served upon them, file with the Commission a report, in writing, signed by respondent setting forth in detail the manner and form of its compliance with the order to cease and desist.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

BY DIXON, Commissioner:

Complaint in this matter was issued on Aug. 7, 1974, charging that respondent's use of an inconvenient forum in which to sue certain of its customers constituted an unfair act or practice, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. §45. Proceedings before the administrative law judge were brief. Respondent admitted all the factual allegations of the complaint but argued they did not warrant a finding of illegality, or, at least, the imposition of an order. The administrative law judge disagreed, sustained the complaint, and entered an order. Respondent has appealed.

The facts are readily summarized. Respondent is a catalog retailer, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of clothing, household goods, appliances, tools, tires and various other articles of merchandise (I.D. 2).[1] Respondent's principal place of business is in Chicago, Ill. (I.D. 1). In the course of its mail-order catalog business it receives orders in Illinois from purchasers domiciled throughout the country, and ships products to them in their home States (I.D. 3). Respondent regularly extends credit to consumers to facilitate their purchase of its products (I.D. 4), and in the course of collecting overdue accounts, it regularly sues purchasers who reside in States outside of Illinois (hereinafter "out-of-State" defendants) in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Ill. Almost all out-of-State defendants have received respondent's catalogs or other advertising material, and executed purchase orders or contracts in their home States. Almost all of these defendants have had no pertinent contact with the State of Illinois other than their dealings with respondent (I.D. 5). The distance, cost, and inconvenience of defending such suits in Illinois place a virtually insurmountable burden on out-of-State defendants who might wish to defend the charges against them (I.D. 6).

I.

It is perhaps to respondent's credit that on appeal it has made less effort to defend the justness of its own prior conduct than to challenge the propriety of Commission action to change it. We agree with the administrative law judge that respondent's activities do fall squarely within Section 5's proscription of unfair acts and practices, and that remedial action is warranted. The Commission has previously described factors it will consider in determining whether a practice is "unfair" within the statutory meaning:

> (1) Whether the practice, without necessarily having been previously considered unlawful, offends public policy as it has been established by statutes, the common law, or otherwise—whether, in other words, it is within at least the penumbra of some common law, statutory, or other established concept of unfairness;
> (2) whether it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous;
> (3) whether it causes substantial injury to consumers.[2]

In seeking the source of public policy with respect to questions of jurisdiction and the proper use of judicial fora for debt collection, we must begin with the guarantees of due process as they have been articulated by courts. We think there can be little question that Spiegel's use of an Illinois situs to sue its out-of-State debtors offends traditional notions of due process and denies consumers the meaningful opportunity to answer and defend charges against them which it is the purpose of the law to provide.

Spiegel contends that it has merely made proper use of the Illinois "Long Arm Statute,"[3] which confers jurisdiction over parties who are, inter alia, "doing business" in Illinois, to the extent a suit concerns such business. The statute has been construed to confer jurisdiction as broad as that permitted by the Constitution Nelson v. Miller, 11 Ill. 2d 378, 143 N.E. 2d 673, 679 (1957). Complaint counsel reply (and the administrative law judge so found) that suit against out-of-State debtors in the circumstances defined by the complaint denies due process, and, thus, could not come within the grant conferred by the Illinois statute (I.D. p. 8 [pp. 431, 432, herein]).[4]

The Supreme Court has set forth the general standard for permissible in personam jurisdiction:

> [D]ue process requires only that in order to subject a defendant to a judgment in personam, if he be not present within the territory of the forum, he have certain minimum contacts with it such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945).

Subsequent decisions have made clear that a defendant need not have entered a State or have had extensive contacts with it in order to satisfy the constitutional test Travelers Health Association v. Virginia, 339 U.S. 643 (1950); McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220 (1957).

[4] Respondent's argument that the Commission in this proceeding is challenging the validity of the Illinois statute itself is patently incorrect. To the extent the Illinois statute is relevant, the question is whether its narrow and particular use by Spiegel is consistent with federal law. Respondent has pointed out no opinion by an Illinois court or any other holding that Spiegel's particular use of the long arm statute is a proper one.

While extending the reach of in personam jurisdiction, courts have continued to recognize the impropriety and fundamental unfairness of assuming jurisdiction over defendants whose connection with the forum State is tenuous at best, who have made no attempt to avail themselves of the benefits and protections of the laws of the forum State (e.g., Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253 (1958)), and who have no means or expectation of defending suit in a distant locale. Compare McQuay, Inc. v. Samuel Schlosberg, Inc., 321 F. Supp. 902 (D. Minn. 1971) in which the court said:

> The general philosophy of long arm statutes is to protect citizens of a state where a nonresident comes into the State directly or indirectly to sell something or solicit sales, or where, even though out of state, a nonresident sells a product which is brought into or comes to rest in the State. The nonresident thus receives the benefit and protection of the state's laws and profits or hopes to from its adventure therein. The nonresident is the aggressor or initiator. It is appropriate that such a nonresident seller should respond to service of process in that state. (At 906.)

With Nordberg Div. of Rex Chainbelt Inc. v. Hudson Engineering Corp., 361 F. Supp. 903 (E.D. Wisc. 1973) in which the court reviewed underlying policy considerations militating against assertion of jurisdiction over a nonresident mail order purchaser:

> A customer of a mail-order house, be it an individual or a small company engaged in a one-state operation, is also more likely to be unprepared to defend itself in a foreign forum than is a company which transacts a substantial amount of interstate business. When almost all of its business is conducted in its home state, a customer of a mail order house does not expect to be forced to travel to a distant forum * * *. When its expectations are disappointed, it is caught unprepared psychologically and, perhaps, financially. (At 907.)

It is perhaps an oversimplification to say that the courts have drawn a firm jurisdictional line between buyers and sellers, but those categories are clearly of relevance to the extent they are used "as a short-hand means of expressing the differences between passive and active involvement in a transaction." In Flight Devices Corporation v. Van-Dusen Air, Inc., 466 F.2d 220, 233 (6th Cir. 1972). Jurisdiction over an out-of-State purchaser may be appropriate, but only where the buyer has taken an active role in negotiation or performance of the contract, or has had other significant contacts with the forum State. Thus, in finding that a large corporate purchaser could be sued in the vendor's home State, the First Circuit distinguished its role from that of the usual long distance customer:

> On this background the extent of United's participation in the economic life of Massachusetts seems clearly to rise above that of a purchaser who simply places an order and sits by until the goods are delivered * * *. Whittaker Corporation v. United Aircraft Corporation, 482 F.2d 1079, 1084 (1973).

It is clear, however, that Spiegel's retail credit customers are the quintessential passive buyers, who do sit by until the goods are delivered. They have purchased in response to respondent's advertising or mailing of its catalog. They have had no contact with the State of Illinois other than to mail in a standardized contract signed in their home State. They have not sought the benefit and protection of Illinois laws, and they most certainly have no expectation of being required to travel to Illinois to engage in litigation should a dispute develop concerning the merchandise. Nor, undoubtedly, do most have the means to launch a cross-country defense on procedural or substantive grounds.

While neither side has cited a holding precisely on point, there appear to be numerous instances in which courts, in the course of resolving related problems, have considered situations virtually the same as that involved here, and concluded that jurisdiction over an out-of-State mail order customer would contravene due process. Indeed, one reason that this narrow point has never been the subject of a litigated holding may be that sellers' counsel have considered it too obvious to withstand scrutiny and have backed off if faced with a contest.[5] As the Illinois District Court commented in Geneva Industries, Inc. v. Copeland Construction Co.:

> The notion that any customer of an Illinois based mail order house such as Sears Roebuck or Montgomery Ward would be subject to the jurisdiction of Illinois courts is obviously violative of the most minimal standard of minimum contacts and the fundamental structure of the federal system. 312 F. Supp. 186, 188 (1970).

In McQuay, Inc. v. Samuel Schlosberg, Inc., supra, a New York-based contractor was solicited by a Minnesota corporation's New York agent. It placed an order and failed to pay. In denying jurisdiction under Minnesota's long-arm statute, substantially identical to that of Illinois, the court reasoned that:

> If plaintiff's position is sound, then it or any other Minnesota manufacturer can sue all of its customers wherever they may be located in the United States who for good or bad reasons have failed to pay their bills or the purchase price of goods.* * * This concept almost completely obliterates state lines.* * * (At 906.)

In Conn v. Witmore, 9 Utah 2d 250, 342 P. 2d 871 (1959), the court denied enforcement of a default judgment rendered in Illinois against a Utah purchaser who had sent his servant to Illinois to inspect and pick up the merchandise, and remitted payment by mail to the Illinois vendor. The court reasoned that:

> Brief reflection will bring to mind difficulties to be encountered if the ordering of merchandise in a foreign state by mail and taking delivery through a designated carrier * * * is to be deemed "doing business" in a foreign state which will draw one into the orbit of the jurisdiction of its courts.* * * Mail order houses, for example, accept and fill orders from all over the country. If they could sue on their own accounts in their own state where it would be highly inconvenient for out-of-state customers to defend, n forward the judgments to the jurisdictions where the customers live, demanding full faith and credit for them, this would effectively prevent the customers from presenting a meritorious defense where one existed. The ultimate result would be to dissuade > customers from doing business across state lines by mail. Thus what may seem a temporary advantage to such businesses, in all likelihood would be detrimental to them and to business generally in the long run. (At 342 p. 2d 874-75.)

More recently, an Illinois District Court denied jurisdiction in a suit brought by an Illinois corporation against a Michigan corporation which had leased railroad cars from plaintiff, having been solicited by the vendor's agents in Michigan. The court concluded that:

> The interpretation by state and federal courts that the Illinois Long-Arm Statute does not extend Illinois jurisdiction to such cases as the instant action rests on logic and hard fact. To grant jurisdiction in such cases would have an adverse effect on commerce because such a decision would subject any customer of an Illinois business, manufacturer, or mail order house to Illinois jurisdiction in the event of suit arising solely out of the acceptance by mail of an Illinois resident's offer. The ultimate result would be to dissuade customers in foreign states from doing business by mail or even telephone with Illinois businessmen. United States Railway Equipment Co. v. Port Huron and Detroit Railroad Co., 58 FRD 588 (N.D. Ill. 1973).

To the same effect are numerous other reported cases, e.g., In-Flight Devices Corp. v. Van Dusen Air, Inc., 466 F.2d 220, 232-33 (6th Cir. 1972); Nordberg Div. of Rex Chainbelt Inc. v. Hudson Engineering Corp., 361 F. Supp. 903, 906-07 (E.D. Wisc. 1973); Fourth Northwestern Nat. Bank v. Hilson Industries, Inc., 264 Minn. 110, 117 N.W. 2d 732 (1962); "Automatic" Sprinkler Corp. v. Seneca Foods Corp., 280 N.E. 2d 423, 425 (Mass. 1972); Marshall Egg Transport Co. v. Bender-Goodman Co., Inc., 275 Minn. 534, 148 N.W. 2d 161 (1967); Tiffany Records Inc. v. M.B. Krupp Distributors, Inc., 81 Cal. Rptr. 320, 327, 276 Cal. App. 2d 610 (1969); Belmont Industries, Inc. v. Superior Ct. of Stanislaus County, 107 Cal. Rptr. 237, 31 Cal. App. 3d 281 (1973).[6]

From the foregoing we conclude that Spiegel's practice of suing its out-of-State mail order customers in Illinois courts is patently offensive to clearly articulated public policy, intended to guarantee all citizens a meaningful opportunity to defend themselves in court.

We also find that Spiegel's practices are oppressive, and injurious to consumers. The burdens imposed on a consumer-debtor by the creditor's use of an inconvenient forum have been highlighted in a Staff Report on Debt Collection Hearings compiled by the Commission's New York Regional Office, and cited by complaint counsel:

> The plaintiff, having selected a forum convenient to himself, may have at the same > time imposed a hardship upon the defendant as far as travel and expenses are concerned. The defendant may have to lose a day's salary which he can ill afford. In addition, the defendant who has retained a private attorney, may have to pay additional expenses to have the attorney travel to defend. Or, if the debtor desires to be represented by a legal services agency, he may find that the local legal services office may have to refer him to the legal services office in the county of suit because the local office is not physically equipped to handle the defense properly. This, in turn, imposes other hardships; it becomes more difficult and more expensive to prepare a defense.

[6] Respondent has made no effort to distinguish the extensive case law cited by complaint counsel in support of their position. We have carefully reviewed the decisions cited by respondent at pages 32-36 of its Appeal Brief, involving construction of the Illinois long-arm statute, e.g., Ziegler v. Houghton-Mifflin Co., 80 Ill. App. 210, 224 N.E. 2d 12 (App. Ct. 2d Dist. (1967); Koplin v. Thomas, Haab, and Botts, 73 Ill. App. 2d 242, 219 N.E. 2d 646 (App. Ct. 1st Dist. 1966); O'Hare International Bank v. Hampton, 437 F.2d 1173 (7th Cir. 1971). None of these matters involved, nor did the courts therein discuss, the type of situation at issue here, and of concern to courts in cases cited by complaint counsel, i.e., a passive consumer mail order buyer and a large vendor who initiates and sets the terms of the transaction. Respondent's reliance on McGee v. International Life Insurance, supra, is similarly misplaced, in light of the wide difference of involvement in the transaction between the defendant vendor in that case and the defendant consumers in this, and in view of the Court's heavy reliance in that case on the state's interest in providing its citizens with an effective means of suing insurers who refuse to pay their claims 355 U.S. 223-24.

> It may be possible for the defendant to make a motion for a change of venue * * *, but where the defendant is without counsel, he would probably be unaware of this and, in any event, technicalities of motions practice may make it too difficult for the consumer-debtor to accomplish on his own. Thus, while the plaintiff may bring the action in a forum inconvenient for the consumer with respect to venue, unless the defendant moves for a change of venue, the action may still proceed there (at pages 123-24; April 1973).[7]

It is not surprising that all of the cases cited by counsel in their briefs have involved well-heeled defendants and substantial sums of money, which made it economically worthwhile for the defendants to retain counsel to contest the issue of jurisdiction. If lawyers worked for free, and there were no limit to their numbers, Spiegel's practices would cause us less concern. In fact, however, it is probable that for many of Spiegel's defaulting customers, like most consumers who are sued for small debts, the only meaningful and economically viable opportunity they have to defend a suit against them is to appear in court pro se and argue their case. This opportunity is totally foreclosed by respondent's use of the Cook County forum, which forces the consumer who wishes to defend to appear in a courtroom hundreds or thousands of miles from home, at a cost in travel alone which may exceed the amount in controversy. The option of hiring a lawyer who would be able to file a motion contesting jurisdiction is likely to be equally unviable. Nor do we think it lessens the damage done to argue that judgments unfairly obtained by Spiegel would be rejected if it attempted to collect on them. Affirmative efforts to defend a collection suit can also impose costly and unaccustomed burdens on the consumer, and in any event there are many injurious uses which can be made of improper judgments short of execution, such as sullying credit records cf. Riverside & Dan River Mills v. Menefee, 237 U.S. 189, 195-97 (1915).

Spiegel has suggested that it confined its Illinois collection suits to those involving "undisputed balances" in which the debtor "could not be persuaded to pay."[8] It is clearly not for Spiegel, however, to decide which of its debtors have defenses so unmeritorious that they do not deserve a reasonable opportunity to defend themselves in judicial proceedings brought against them. In a society which prizes the right of everyone to a day in court, there can be little doubt that substantial injury is done whenever the meaningful opportunity to defend is foreclosed, no matter what the outcome would have been absent the foreclosure. As the Supreme Court noted more than a half century ago in Coe v. Armour Fertilizer Works:

[7] This passage discusses the effect of use of inconvenient venue within the debtor's home State. Spiegel's suits in an inconvenient venue outside the debtor's State can hardly be less oppressive. See also, Consumer Credit in the United States, Report of the National Commission on Consumer Finance, pages 41-42 (Dec. 1972).

> To one who protests against the taking of his property without due process of law, it is no answer to say that in his particular case due process of law would have led to the same result because he had no adequate defense on the merits. 237 U.S. 413, 424 (1915).

Because Spiegel's practice of suing its out-of-State mail order customers in Illinois is contrary to clearly established public policy favoring a meaningful opportunity for all citizens to defend suits brought against them, and because this conduct is oppressive and injurious to consumers in denying them valuable rights which our society holds dear, we conclude that Spiegel has engaged in an unfair practice within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

II

Counsel for respondent has raised a number of objections to the entry of an order, which we believe are without merit. Counsel suggests that the Commission should proceed by rulemaking rather than "singling it out" for imposition of sanctions. While rulemaking would not necessarily be inappropriate in this circumstance, it is well settled that the Commission may proceed by adjudication against an offender without simultaneously pursuing all others. Moog Industries, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 355 U.S. 411 (1958), cert. denied 356 U.S. 905 (1958); Ger-Ro-Mar, Inc., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 74-2343 (2d Cir., June 16, 1975). In addition, at the same time that suit was brought against Spiegel, three other firms, including Montgomery Ward, were cited for practices involving suit in inconvenient fora, and those three all consented to orders imposing the same limitations on choice of forum as are contained in the order of the administrative law judge.[9] In light of its holding in this matter the Commission will certainly view with care the allegedly identical practices of others which may come to its attention (though respondent has not suggested whom it has in mind), but we do not believe that imposition of an order on respondent amounts, by any standard, to an abuse of discretion Federal Trade Commission v. Universal-Rundle Corp., 387 U.S. 244 (1967).

A related contention on Spiegel's part is that the Commission should stay its hand because of the "novelty" of the legal position asserted in the complaint. Spiegel proposes that if the Commission will not proceed by rulemaking it should issue a declaratory judgment in this proceeding, stating that the practice is unlawful but omitting a binding order. We cannot agree with Spiegel's suggestion that somehow its practice has been lawful until now. We think it is more accurate to say that Spiegel has in the past gotten away with something that its counsel ought to have recognized, in light of the numerous decisions cited hereinbefore (some of which were a matter of public record before Spiegel contends it began its practice), was at best a highly dubious activity.[10] There may be instances in which it would be inequitable to impose a harsh order on a respondent based upon a novel interpretation of the law. This is nowhere near such a case. The order imposed is not harsh, and not particularly difficult of compliance. And the Commission's "novel interpretation" of law has been foreshadowed, indeed dictated, by substantial prior precedent. We do not believe that whenever the Commission resolves a point of law for the first time in an adjudication it must omit an order against the violator. Acceptance of Spiegel's argument would require no less.

Spiegel also contends that the Commission may not "pre-empt" the laws of Illinois by limiting the reach of the Illinois long-arm statute. Relatedly, Spiegel argues that a sufficient remedy is afforded injured debtors by the courts of Illinois, which can determine on a case-by-case basis whether or not jurisdiction lies therein.

With respect to the pre-emption argument, the Commission does not believe that its decision in this matter is in any way inconsistent with the law of Illinois, which has necessarily been construed by the courts of that State to afford all defendants due process Nelson v. Miller, supra. As noted earlier, Spiegel has cited no precedent from Illinois or elsewhere to suggest that an Illinois court could find its use of the long-arm statute to be proper. To the contrary, more than one Illinois federal district court judge, upon considering the precise issue before us, has expressed the view that Illinois law would not favor Spiegel's behavior, e.g., United States Railway Equipment Co. v. Port Huron and Detroit Railroad Co., supra; Geneva Industries v. Copeland Construction Co., supra.

It may be argued that the baseline courts in Cook County have tacitly sanctioned Spiegel's construction of the long-arm statute by entering default judgments in its favor. It is questionable, however, whether these courts have ever really had occasion to consider the legal issues involved here. While there is authority to suggest that a court should consider on its own initiative whether it has subject matter jurisdiction before entering a judgment, there is little authority to suggest that a court, when faced with valid proof of service of process, a petition by plaintiff, and no answer by defendant, is obliged before entering a default judgment to look behind the pleadings to determine sua sponte whether it possesses in personam jurisdiction.[11] Particularly since Spiegel, by its own admission, has withdrawn its suit in the rare case when a defendant had the legal resources or legal acumen to challenge jurisdiction, the failure of the Cook County Circuit Court to put a spontaneous stop to respondent's practice appears to us to be of slight precedential value as a guide to the proper construction of the Illinois long-arm statute.

[10] In this regard it may not be irrelevant to note that in Appendix A of respondent's "Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law" before the administrative law judge, respondent's vice-president/secretary states that Spiegel instituted its experimental program of suing out-of-State debtors in Cook County "to determine what the collection results would be without recourse to execution or garnishment on the judgments obtained against delinquent debtors." In the same affidavit it is stated that in those rare instances when a consumer objected to the Illinois venue, the suit was dropped. We wonder why, with an "undisputed balance" at stake, Spiegel should desist from proceeding in a forum it assertedly believed to be entirely proper.

Moreover, assuming arguendo, and contrary to what appears to be the fact, that Illinois law could somehow be read to condone Spiegel's conduct, such conduct must nevertheless fall in the final analysis before clear Federal policy which condemns it. Respondent does not challenge the proposition that where State and Federal laws conflict, Federal policy governs Free v. Bland, 369 U.S. 663 (1962). While courts will endeavor to avoid reading a pre-emptive intention into Federal law, they will not hesitate to find pre-emption where a clear conflict exists Florida Lime & Avocado Growers, Inc. v. Paul, 373 U.S. 132, 142-43 (1963). Moreover, any conflict which exists here is minimal. This is not a situation in which State and Federal law compel two different and inconsistent courses of conduct. Rather, at most, Spiegel can argue that State law permits that which Federal policy forbids. Under these circumstances there can be no reason why clear Federal standards should be bent or ignored.[12]

With respect to the alleged remedy already available to individuals sued in Cook County courts, we think it is evident that such a remedy has proven illusory in the majority of cases. We strongly suspect that the tribunals of Illinois would not have hesitated to throw Spiegel out of court were there ever a case in which a defendant chose to mount a defense on the jurisdictional question, while Spiegel stayed with its suit. In fact, however, few defendants are likely to know how to challenge Spiegel's abuse of the long-arm statute by themselves, and few are likely to pay for a lawyer to mount a cross-country contest when the cost of so doing may well exceed the amount at issue. Faced with the typical default situation, the courts of Illinois have not in the past provided an adequate remedy on a case-by-case basis, and that is precisely the reason that action by the Commission is needed to protect consumers, and is in the public interest cf. Barquis v. Merchants Collection Association of Oakland, Inc., 7 C. 3rd 94, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745, 496 P. 2d 817 (1972).

[11] Neglect of uncontroverted jurisdictional issues occurs in administrative proceedings as well. As complaint counsel have pointed out in their brief (CB 22-23), the administrative law judge did not enter a conclusion of law in his initial decision stating that the Commission has jurisdiction in this case. Spiegel has not challenged the Commission's jurisdiction, and we hereby do conclude that the Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction over the respondent and over the subject matter of this proceeding.

[12] We similarly do not believe that the Tenth Amendment forbids Commission action (RB 40-42). Even if the Commission's action is viewed as imposing a limitation on State authority to authorize suits, rather than as imposing a limitation on Spiegel's ability to abuse the judicial process, it is nonetheless well-established that the Tenth Amendment does not mean that State-authorized activity may stand in the face of duly authorized Federal requirements Maryland v. Wirtz, 392 U.S. 183 (1968); United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, 123-24 (1941).

In the concluding paragraph of its brief (RB 42) respondent suggests that it has abandoned the challenged practices, and for that reason an order is not required. It is well established, of course, that discontinuance of an offending practice, particularly after initiation of governmental investigation, and in circumstances where resumption is possible, does not obviate the need for, or propriety of, an order Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 352 F.2d 415 (6th Cir. 1965); Cotherman v. Federal Trade Commission, 417 F.2d 587 (5th Cir. 1969); Coro, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 338 F.2d 149 (1st Cir. 1964), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 954 (1965). Moreover, we have reviewed the "Assurance of Voluntary Compliance" appended by respondent to its proposed findings of fact before the administrative law judge, and we do not believe that the promises contained therein, if adhered to, would be sufficient to eliminate the offending conduct. For example, the assurance would not prevent Spiegel from assigning its cases to collection agencies who could sue on Spiegel's behalf in objectionable fora, and the assurance would not prevent Spiegel from suing a consumer in counties other than those of residence or signing of the contract, a remedial standard we think is necessary to eliminate the unfairness which has occurred here.

Respondent has objected to portions of the order proposed by the administrative law judge, which is essentially the same as the notice order. Respondent does not quarrel with the first substantive paragraph of the order[13] which establishes a "fair venue" standard for suits by respondent, requiring that it sue its consumer debtors in the county of their residence or the county in which they signed the contract sued upon.

The second substantive paragraph (III) requires that if respondent violates the preceding paragraph by suing in a distant locale, it must take steps to terminate the suit, vacate any default judgment entered as a result, or, in the alternative, transfer the proceeding to a suitable forum and provide the defendant with an opportunity to defend. The following paragraph (IV) requires that if respondent brings a suit in an unfair forum it must take steps to notify credit bureaus of the fact that the suit has been terminated or a default judgment vacated. We believe that these two paragraphs are necessary to satisfy the objective of this proceeding, which is to protect consumers from the unfair practice in which respondent has engaged. Even should Spiegel proceed, as we trust it will, with the greatest diligence and attention to the obligations imposed by Paragraph II, there is always the possibility that through an inadvertence of one sort or another the prohibited practice will be repeated. Paragraphs III and IV are intended to ensure that should such a situation occur, and the consumer be again sued in distant forum, an adequate mechanism exists to remedy the harm done thereby. If no violations of Paragraph II occur, Paragraphs III and IV will prove to be mere surplussage; if a violation of Paragraph II does occur, we are at a loss to see how respondent could quarrel with the objectives of Paragraphs III and IV.

[13] Paragraph II of the Commission's revised order. References hereinafter are to the revised order entered by the Commission, which generally tracks the notice order.

Respondent worries that the obligations imposed by Paragraphs II-IV are retroactive, and protests. There is no need for us to rule here with regard to the Commission's authority to require respondent to vacate existing judgments obtained prior to the order, in violation of Section 5. We think that Paragraphs II-IV on their face quite clearly apply only to suits brought after the effective date of the order, and respondent's concerns on that score are unwarranted.

Respondent takes most strenuous exception to those portions of the order which require recordkeeping. The order proposed by the administrative law judge would require that respondent provide the Commission with a summary of collection suits it has brought for a two-year period following the effective date of the order, and for a one-year period prior to the effective date of the order. The summary of suits shall contain each defendant's name, address, county of residence, county in which the defendant signed the contract (if the suit is not instituted in the residence county), county where service was made, date of service, date of filing, docket number of case, name and location of the court in which the action was filed, name of plaintiff (if a collection agency suing in its own name), amount sued for, and disposition of the case. Where a suit has been instituted in a county other than where defendant resides or has signed the contract, the reason for the choice of forum shall be explained.

Respondent objects that the reporting requirement is unduly "burdensome." With respect to the case summaries for the period following the effective date of the order, the information required is the minimum necessary to permit the Commission to monitor compliance and, therefore, the order is warranted, even though it may impose some burden National Dynamics Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 492 F.2d 1333 (2d Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 43 U.S.L.W. 3280 (Nov. 12, 1974); Tashof v. Federal Trade Commission, 437 F.2d 707, 715 (D.C. Cir. 1970). In addition, we do not believe the order imposes a significant burden, and beyond its barebones assertion respondent has given no indication of the extent of the burden or how the order could be modified (as opposed to omitted) to alleviate the alleged difficulties.

The necessity for the required information as a means of checking compliance during an initial post-order period is clear. Respondent suggests that the Commission can evaluate compliance any time it wishes simply by scanning the docket of the Cook County courts to determine whether Spiegel has sued any customers from out-of-State. Even assuming that it were feasible for Commission investigators to check each entry on the Cook County docket to make sure that it was not Spiegel suing in a prohibited forum, respondent ignores the fact that under this procedure it could sue anywhere else, regardless of the distance of such a forum from a consumer's residence or location of contract signing, without detection. Obviously the Commission cannot feasibly search every docket in the country to determine that respondent, or its collection agencies, is not suing in a locale prohibited by the order.[14] Only respondent itself can readily provide the information needed to determine whether or not it is in compliance. Moreover, the particular details required seem to us to be the fewest necessary to determine whether suit has been filed in a forum forbidden by the order.

With respect to the issue of burdensomeness, in the absence of any detailed substantiation by respondent we can only observe that it would astonish us to find that respondent does not have readily available all the information required to be reported by the order. The only possible "burden" of which we can conceive is that of transcribing or copying this information for submission in a compliance report. The fact that respondent has made no effort to estimate the cost of such transcription makes if difficult for us to take seriously its claim that it would prove costly.[15]

The Commission has determined that the requirement that respondent provide a litigation summary for cases brought during the year

[14] Indeed, a mere docket check in most counties would be insufficient to reveal instances in which a collection agency had sued on a Spiegel account in the agency's name.

[15] This is particularly so in view of the fact that three other respondents, sued at the same time as Spiegel, were willing to consent to reporting requirements identical to those involved here see n. 9, supra.

prior to the effective date of an order is unnecessary to determine compliance with the order subsequent to its effective date, and this provision will, therefore, be deleted. Respondent argues it is unnecessary, and complaint counsel have presented no convincing reason for its retention.

We have also modified the order slightly, to reflect the Commission's authority to enjoin practices "affecting" commerce, and to make clear (Par. I) what was implicit in the order proposed by the administrative law judge, that all provisions of the order apply to practices which Spiegel may undertake through the auspices of a collection agency or other third party.

An appropriate order is appended.

CONCURRING STATEMENT OF COMMISSIONER NYE

The Commission bases its determination that respondent has violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in part upon a conclusion that respondent has obtained judgments against out-of-State mail-order consumers under circumstances which fall short of the due process guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. I believe this conclusion is unnecessary and reliance upon it unwise.

It is an important principle of our jurisprudence that constitutional questions should be avoided in a case which can be resolved on statutory or common law grounds.[1] That principle should apply with special force to an administrative agency, which has no particular competence to address issues of constitutional dimension.

There appears to me no occasion to address constitutional issues in this case. While the Fourteenth Amendment imposes on the States certain minimal standards of justice and decency, Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act requires the Commission "to discover and make explicit those unexpressed standards of fair dealing which the conscience of the community may progressively develop"[2] and to enforce adherence to those standards in consumer transactions. The semantic kinship between the "fundamental fairness" standard adopted in the due process cases[3] and the "unfairness" yardstick mandated by Section 5 is not at all indicative of a legal equivalence. Although in particular cases the two standards may often coalesce, it would not be remarkable if a constitutional limitation on the activities of States were to diverge from a statutory limitation on the conduct of businessmen.

[3] See, e.g., International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945) ("traditional notions of fair play").

The Commission, quite appropriately, refers to a number of judicial decisions which express doubt about the constitutionality of a State's assertion of in personam jurisdiction over out-of-State mail order consumers.[4] These decisions, together with others which do not involve the due process clause,[5] sufficiently establish that public policy disfavors the institution of collection lawsuits against consumers in courts unreasonably remote from the consumers' place of residence. That established public policy judgment, coupled with the substantial consumer injury disclosed by the record in this case, is enough to persuade me that the litigation practices of Spiegel which were challenged in this case amount to an unfair practice within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

This reasoning also disposes of respondent's argument to the effect that the Commission cannot interfere with respondent's use of the Illinois long-arm statute unless the resulting judgments against out-of-State consumers were entered unconstitutionally. Again, while the Commission's opinion seems to answer this contention by concluding that the judgments were entered unconstitutionally, it is not necessary to decide that question. Leaving aside the fact that no Illinois court has ever held use of the long-arm statute in the manner adopted by respondent to be proper, I am perfectly content to assume arguendo that respondent's long-arm litigation does not involve the Cook County courts in a violation of due process, and that the judgments respondent obtains are entitled to full faith and credit in other States. The Federal Trade Commission Act, however, is not infrequently interpreted to prohibit unfair or deceptive acts or practices regardless of whether those acts or practices are authorized by the law of the State in which they are committed. See, e.g., FTC v. Sperry & Hutchinson Co., 405 U.S. 233, 239 n. 4 (1972); Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis v. FTC, 13 F.2d 673, 684 (8th Cir. 1926); Peerless Products, Inc. v. FTC, 384 F.2d 825, 827 (7th Cir. 1960), cert. denied 365 U.S. 844 (1961).

This case appears to illustrate the wisdom of the rule that constitutional issues should not be decided unless necessary to the result. When the Commission issued its proposed complaint in this matter on Mar. 4, 1974, it announced simultaneously its intention to institute three similar cases: Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., File No. 742 3102 [Dkt. C-2602, 84 F.T.C. 1337]; West Coast Credit Corp., File

[5] See, e.g., Barquis v. Merchants Collection Association of Oakland, Inc., 7 C.3d 94, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745, 496 P.2d 817 (1972); All-State Credit Corporation v. Defendants Listed in 669 Default Judgments, 61 Misc. 2d 677, 306 N.Y.S. 2d 596 (Sup. Ct. App. Term 1970).

No. 732 3110 [84 F.T.C. 1328] and Commercial Service Co., Inc., File No. 732 3404 [p. 467, herein].[6] In those three proposed complaints, the Commission stated it had reason to believe that the practice of suing a consumer in a remote location within the consumer's own State was unfair. At issue were alleged disregard of State venue provisions (Commercial Service), contractual waiver of State venue provisions (West Coast Credit), and, apparently, reliance on State venue provisions which the Commission had reason to believe did not in the particular circumstances come up to the standards of fairness embodied in Section 5 (Montgomery Ward). Of all the cases, only Spiegel raised putative constitutional issues. Taken together, the four cases signaled the Commission's intention to decide whether it is fair to force consumers to defend collection suits in distant courts, regardless of whether those courts are outside the State of the consumer's residence and, further, regardless of whether State venue rules are followed. Spiegel is the only one of these cases to be reviewed by the Commission after full administrative proceedings. The forum involved happens to be out-of-State, but that was certainly not deemed critical when the case was filed.[7] To the extent the Commission's opinion suggests otherwise, I believe it confuses the relevant assessment of public policy.

FINAL ORDER

This matter having been heard by the Commission upon the appeal of respondent from the initial decision, and upon briefs and oral argument in support thereof and opposition thereto, and the Commission for the reasons stated in the accompanying opinion, having denied the appeal in principal part:

It is ordered, That the initial decision of the administrative law judge be, and it hereby is, adopted as the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Commission, to the extent not inconsistent with the accompanying opinion.

Other findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Commission are contained in the accompanying opinion.

It is further ordered, That the following order to cease and desist be, and it hereby is, entered:

[7] Nor can it be critical to the relief ordered herein. Although the specific practice held unfair in this case was suing out-of-State mail-order consumers in Cook County, Ill., it is significant that the Commission's cease and desist order prohibits Spiegel from suing a consumer anywhere other than in his county of residence or the county where he signed the contract sued upon.

ORDER

I

For purposes of this order, the term "respondent" means "Spiegel, Inc., a corporation, and its successors, assigns, officers, agents, representatives and employees, acting directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, or other device, including any collection agency."

II

It is ordered, That respondent, in connection with the collection of retail credit accounts in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from instituting suits except in the county where the defendant resides at the commencement of the action, or in the county where the defendant signed the contract sued upon. This provision shall not preempt any rule of law which further limits choice of forum or which requires, in actions involving real property or fixtures attached to real property, that suit be instituted in a particular county.

III

It is further ordered, That, where respondent learns subsequent to institution of a suit that the preceding Paragraph (II) has not been complied with, it shall forthwith terminate the suit and vacate any default judgment entered thereunder. In lieu of such termination, respondent may effect a change of forum to a county permitted by the preceding paragraph, Provided; That respondent gives defendant notice of such action and opportunity to defend equivalent to that which defendant would receive if a new suit were being instituted. In all cases respondent shall provide defendants with a clear explanation of the action taken and of the defendants' right to appear, answer and defend in the new forum.

IV

It is further ordered, That where respondent terminates a suit or vacates a judgment pursuant to the preceding Paragraph (III) it shall give notice of such termination or vacation to each "consumer reporting agency," as such term is defined in the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. §603), which it has been informed or has reason to know has recorded the suit or judgment in its files. Additionally, respondent shall furnish such notice to any other person or organization upon request of the defendant.

V

It is further ordered, That respondent prepare and maintain a summary of suits instituted, pending, terminated, or acted upon subsequent to judgment, involving the collection of retail credit accounts by respondent. This summary shall contain each defendant's name, address, and county of residence; county where the contract was signed by the defendant, if the suit was not instituted in the residence county; county where served; date served; date filed; docket number; name and location of court in which filed; name of plaintiff (if a collection agency suing in its own name); amount claimed; and disposition (including garnishment or execution, if any). Where a suit has been instituted in a county other than where defendant resides or signed the contract sued upon, the reason for this choice of forum shall be explained. This summary shall cover the two years immediately following effective date of this order. A copy of this summary shall be submitted to the Federal Trade Commission on a quarterly basis.

It is further ordered, That Spiegel, Inc., shall forthwith deliver a copy of this order to each of its subsidiaries and operating divisions, to each collection agency currently collecting any of Spiegel's retail credit accounts, and to any other collection agency prior to referral to it of any of Spiegel's retail credit accounts. Spiegel, Inc., shall obtain and preserve signed and dated statements from each collection agency, acknowledging receipt of the order and willingness to comply with it.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall notify the Commission at least thirty days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within sixty days and at the end of six months after the effective date of the order served upon it, file with the Commission a report, in writing, signed by respondent, setting forth in detail the manner and form of its compliance with the order to cease and desist.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Borg-Warner Corporation, (hereinafter "B-W"), a corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, has acquired Unit Parts Company, (hereinafter "U-P"), a corporation,-in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18), and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §45), and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest hereby issues this complaint, pursuant to Section 11 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §21) and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45) stating its charges in that respect as follows:

I. Definitions

1. For the purpose of this complaint, the following definitions shall apply:

(a) "Automotive" refers to parts used on all self-propelled land vehicles, including automobiles, trucks, buses, tractors, self-propelled agricultural equipment and construction equipment, but excluding motorcycles.

(b) "Clutches" are clutch discs, clutch cover plates, and complete clutch assemblies.

(c) "Carburetor parts" are individual parts and kits containing such parts used to repair carburetors.

(d) "rebuilt parts" are automotive parts, exclusive of engines, crankshafts and automatic transmissions, remanufactured for resale on a production line basis.

(e) "Independent aftermarket" includes all sales by manufacturers or reboxers of automotive parts directly to wholesalers or retailers for replacement use. It excludes sales by vehicle manufacturers or engine manufacturers directly to vehicle dealers.

II. Borg-Warner Corporation

2. Respondent Borg-Warner Corporation is now, and was at all times relevant herein, a corporation, and its present principal office and place of business is located at 200 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

3. As a result of its acquisitions described below and its internal growth, B-W by 1971 had become the 110th largest industrial corporation in the nation. In 1971, B-W had sales of $1.148 billion and assets of $932 million. In that year, B-W had five sales divisions which accounted for the following percentages of its total sales:

(a) Air conditioning and building products (22 percent);
(b) Chemicals and plastics (14 percent);
(c) Industrial and steel products (30 percent); and
(d) Transportation equipment (34 percent).

4. B-W was formed in 1928 through the merger of four leading automotive parts producers. These companies were Borg and Beck Company, Marvel Carburetor Co., Warner Gear Co. and Mechanics Universal Joint Co. Borg and Beck Company was a leading manufacturer of clutches. Marvel Carburetor Co. manufactured carburetors and parts therefor. Warner Gear Co. was a leading producer of gears for automotive manual transmissions. Mechanics Universal Joint Co. manufactured automotive universal joints.

5. By adherence to a plan of continued acquisitions and resulting internal expansion, B-W has enlarged and has plans to continue to enlarge its position as a producer and/or supplier of various types of automotive parts.

6. B-W has made a succession of acquisitions and has plans to continue to acquire manufacturers and/or sellers of various types of automotive parts which it already sold prior to such acquisitions, including among others:

(a) Century Gas Equipment Company, a California corporation located in Paramount, California, acquired in 1957 and a leading producer of LPG carburetors and parts therefore;

(b) Shurhit Products, Inc., an Illinois corporation, located in Dixon, Ill. acquired in 1963, and a supplier of replacement ignition and carburetor parts;

(c) Precision Automotive Components Company, a Missouri corporation, located in Baldwin, Mo. acquired in 1965, and a large supplier of replacement carburetor parts;

(d) Tillotson Manufacturing Co., an Ohio corporation, located in Toledo, Ohio, acquired in 1969, and a manufacturer of small engine and industrial carburetors and parts therefor; and

(e) The Warneford group, a group of Australian limited liability proprietary businesses, acquired in 1974.

At all times relevant herein, each of the above-named United States corporations was engaged in commerce as commerce is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

7. Since its inception, B-W has significantly expanded its position in the clutch market, both by acquisition and internal development. In the year following its inception, B-W had clutch sales of $4.139 million from its Borg and Beck plant.

8. In 1929, B-W acquired Long Manufacturing Co., (hereinafter "Long"), a leading manufacturer of clutches. At the time of its acquisition, Long was a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal place of business located in Detroit, Mich.

9. In 1929, Long's sales of clutches were $3.098 million.

10. At all times relevant herein, Long sold and shipped its products in many States of the United States and was engaged in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

11. In 1929, B-W acquired Rockford Drilling Machine Co., (hereinafter "Rockford"), a significant manufacturer of clutches. At the time of its acquisition, Rockford was a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal place of business located in Rockford, Ill.

12. In 1928, Rockford's total sales were $1.071 million and consisted of clutch sales of about $752,400.

13. At all times relevant herein, Rockford sold and shipped its products in many States of the United States and was engaged in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

14. In 1970, B-W completed integration of all its clutch rebuilding operations into a plant located in Ottawa, Illinois. This plant took over the clutch rebuilding operations which B-W had conducted at its Borg & Beck, Rockford and Long plants.

15. In 1972, B-W acquired U-P, one of the nation's four largest full-line rebuilders. At the time of its acquisition, U-P was one of the four largest rebuilders of clutches and a significant supplier of replacement clutches.

16. In its 1972 fiscal year, U-P's sales of $26.704 million consisted of sales of $4.41 million of rebuilt clutches.

17. In 1971, B-W was a significant seller of original equipment clutches, automotive transmissions, torque convertors, drive line assemblies, spin resistant differentials, axles, brake controls, carburetors, radiators, seals and automotive replacement parts. B-W's total sales of transportation equipment in 1971 were $387.3 million of which $84.7 million were to the independent aftermarket.

18. In 1971, B-W had warehouses located throughout the United States. Through these warehouses and its sales force, B-W distributed its products directly to over 1705 wholesalers of which 1306 were warehouse distributors.

19. B-W has achieved a dominant position in the sale of clutches in the nation due in part to its numerous acquisitions. In 1971, B-W was the nation's leading seller of clutches for use in the assembly of new vehicles, and of clutches for replacement use, as well as the nation's largest clutch rebuilder.

20. In 1971, B-W's shipments of replacement clutches were $166 million. B-W accounted for 21 percent of the total shipments of clutches for replacement use in that year.

21. In 1967, B-W had shipments of about $2.943 million of rebuilt clutches. In 1967, B-W accounted for 10 percent of total rebuilt clutch shipments.

22. In 1971, B-W's rebuilt clutch shipments were $6.733 million, accounting for about 17 percent of such shipments.

23. In 1967 and 1971, B-W sold new water pumps to the independent aftermarket. In 1967, B-W sold $.846 million of water pumps to the independent aftermarket and accounted for 3 percent of the sales to that market.

24. B-W has a corporate policy to consolidate and enchance its market power in the sale of replacement automotive parts, through merger or acquisition, particularly of parts sold to the independent aftermarket of those product lines with which it competes or is one of the most likely entrants.

25. At all times relevant herein, B-W sold and shipped its products throughout the United States and was engaged in "commerce" as commerce is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, and in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

III. Unit Parts Company

26. On or about Sept. 29, 1972, B-W acquired U-P by merger of U-P into B-W through an exchange of 305,313 shares of B-W stock for the assets of U-P. At the time of the acquisition the B-W stock exchanged for U-P was valued at approximately $10 million.

27. Prior to its merger into B-W, U-P was an Oklahoma corporation with its principal office and place of business located at 4600 S.E. 59th St., Oklahoma City, Okla.

28. In 1971, U-P was engaged in the production and sale of a full line of rebuilt automotive parts including clutches, water pumps, ignition parts, brake shoes, disc brake pads, and fuel pumps. Since 1970, U-P had sold rebuilt automotive air conditioning compressors. Prior to its acquisition, all of U-P's sales were to the independent aftermarket.

29. In its fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, U-P had four lines of automotive parts which accounted for the following percentages of its total sales: (1) clutches (17.7 percent), (2) engine components and air conditioning parts (24.4 percent), (3) ignition parts (43.3 percent) and (4) brake system parts (14.6 percent).

30. In 1972, U-P was one of the two largest domestic rebuilders of automotive parts. In its fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, it had sales of $26.704 million and assets of $7.8 million.

31. Immediately prior to its acquisition, U-P was one of the largest domestic rebuilders of clutches. In its fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, U-P's sales of clutches were $4.41 million. U-P's sales of rebuilt clutches in that year represented approximately 10 percent of total domestic sales of rebuilt clutches in 1971.

32. U-P was a significant rebuilder of water pumps. In its fiscal year ending June 30, 1972, U-P's sales of rebuilt water pumps were $4.51 million. U-P's sales of rebuilt water pumps in that year represented approximately 13 percent of the total domestic sales of rebuilt water pumps in 1971.

33. At all times relevant herein, U-P sold and shipped its products throughout the United States and was engaged in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, and in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

IV. Trade and Commerce

34. The relevant geographic market is the United States as a whole. The relevant product markets are:

(a) Manufacture and sale of replacement clutches;

(b) Manufacture and sale of rebuilt clutches; and

(c) Manufacture and sale of water pumps to the independent aftermarket.

A. Replacement Clutches

35. Clutches represent a unique product which enables the engine and transmission of a vehicle to engage or disengage the drive-line of a vehicle at the command of the driver. Clutches are subject to wear and must be periodically replaced.

36. Generally, a supplier of replacement clutches must have a distribution system designed to reach the numerous outlets which replace worn or damaged clutches. An OEM-installation seller of clutches need only sell to one or a very few customers. A seller of replacement clutches must offer clutches having application on a range of models and fitting vehicles made in different years. In general, a replacement clutch supplier offers clutches having application on all vehicles which have more than minimal usage. In stark contrast, an OEM-installation clutch supplier need only supply clutches to vehicles in current production and often does not sell clutches for a wide range of model applications. Because of the need of replacement suppliers to cover more years and models of automotive vehicles as compared to OEM-installation suppliers, the production and sale of replacement clutches differs from OEM-installation clutch production. Replacement clutches generally are produced in far shorter production runs than are used to produce OEM-installation clutches.

37. Most clutch producers serve only the replacement clutch market.

38. Replacement clutches command a price considerably in excess of similiar units sold to the OEM-installation market.

39. The demand for replacement clutches is somewhat predictable as it is based primarily on the number and make of vehicles in use which have clutches and the usage or age of those vehicles. In contrast, the OEM-installation clutch demand fluctuates considerably from year to year and is dependent upon the level of vehicle sales.

40. Most replacement clutches are sold individually packaged whereas OEM-installation clutches are sold in bulk.

41. In 1971 the total shipments of replacement clutches were about $80.7 million. Such shipments have been increasing, in recent years, going from $53.8 million in 1967 to about $90 million in 1972.

42. Concentration is high in the replacement clutch market. In 1971, the four largest firms accounted for 43 percent of replacement clutch shipments and the eight largest 62 percent.

43. The barriers to entry into the replacement clutch market are high. Replacement clutches are precision machined metal and friction material products produced to close tolerances. Their production requires specialized machinery and testing equipment. A clutch plant is expensive to erect and equip.

44. The number of producers of replacement clutches has been declining. In part this decrease is due to acquisitions, including several acquisitions by the largest producers of other replacement clutch remanufacturers.

45. The production of replacement clutches is highly profitable, with a leading producer experiencing a before tax return on investment in excess of 35 percent.

46. In 1971, U-P had total sales of replacement clutches of $4.410 million, accounted for about 5 percent of sales in that market and ranked 5th among suppliers to that market. In that same year, B-W had total sales of replacement clutches of $16.632 million, accounted for 21 percent of sales in that market and was the largest supplier to that market. The combined sales of B-W and U-P in 1971 accounted for 26 percent of the sales of replacement clutches and the combination would have been by far the largest supplier of replacement clutches.

B. Rebuilt Clutches

47. Rebuilt clutches have different primary uses from new clutches. All rebuilt clutches are produced for replacement use, primarily on vehicles over two years of age. In contrast, most new clutches are produced for use in new vehicle assembly. New clutches produced for replacement use are generally installed on late model vehicles, generally vehicles two or less years old.

48. Rebuilt clutches are sold to different customers than are new clutches. Rebuilt clutches are generally sold direct to dealers or wholesalers. New clutches are sold or transferred to vehicle manufacturers for incorporation in new vehicles or for resale as replacement parts on late model vehicles.

49. The rebuilding of clutches requires several extra steps not performed in producing and distributing new clutches. The raw materials for producing a new clutch consist of new component parts. A new clutch manufacturer either purchases or produces new component parts, assembles these parts into a clutch unit and ships the completed clutch unit to his customer. In contrast, a clutch rebuilder relies on used clutches and their components as his primary raw material. The clutch rebuilder secures these used clutches from his customers or from a used parts supplier and disassembles the used units into their component parts. The clutch rebuilder then cleans the components, inspects the components to determine which are salvageable, sorts the salvageable components into lots to be used in reassembling the units, procures new component parts in those instances in which insufficient salvageable parts are available, and reassembles the units from a combination of new and used component parts. The clutch rebuilder ships finished units to his customers and receives in exchange from his customers worn out units replaced by the newly rebuilt units.

50. Different firms, in general, produce new clutches compared to rebuilt clutches. There were many firms in the United States in 1972 who produced only rebuilt clutches.

51. The price of rebuilt clutches is significally lower than the price of new clutches sold to the aftermarket. On the average, a rebuilt clutch for a given application sells for 25 to 50 percent less than a new replacement clutch fitting that same application.

52. Rebuilt parts in general and rebuilt clutches in particular are recognized as a separate market from new parts or clutches. There is an industry trade association, Automotive Parts Rebuilding Association (APRA), whose membership is limited to rebuilders and their suppliers. For many years, the Bureau of the Census has separately reported shipments of rebuilt parts. In the last two Census of Manufactures, the Bureau of the Census has separately reported shipments of rebuilt and new clutches.

53. In 1971, the total shipments of rebuilt clutches were about $41 million. Such shipments have been increasing in recent years, going from $29.4 million in 1967 to about $43.5 million in 1972.

54. Concentration is high in the rebuilding of clutches. In 1971, the four largest firms accounted for 50 percent and the eight largest firms accounted for 74 percent of total rebuilt clutch shipments.

55. It is difficult to enter into the rebuilding of clutches. One of the principal barriers to entry is the difficulty of securing customers. Most rebuilders sell to a number of customers and utilize an extensive sales organization to reach customers. Any new supplier must possess an extensive sales organization or incur the time and expense necessary to secure such an organization. The prime customers of clutch rebuilders are extremely reluctant to shift suppliers, expecially to take on a new supplier whose product quality and ability to provide the necessary sales support are unknown.

56. The number of producers of rebuilt clutches has been declining. This decrease is due to acquisitions, including several horizontal acquisitions by the largest rebuilt clutch producers of other clutch rebuilders.

57. The production of rebuilt clutches is highly profitable, with a leading producer earning a return on investment of 62 percent.

58. In 1971, U-P had total sales of rebuilt clutches of $4.410 million, accounted for 10 percent of sales in that market, and ranked 3rd among suppliers to that market. In that same year, B-W had total sales of rebuilt clutches of $6.733 million, accounted for 17 percent of sales in that market and was the largest supplier to that market. The combined sales of B-W and U-P in 1971 accounted for 27 percent of sales of clutches and would have accounted for by far the largest single supply of rebuilt clutches.

C. Water Pumps

59. Water pumps are an unique product which assures the circulation of coolant on water cooled vehicles. Water pumps are subject to wear and damage and must be periodically replaced.

60. A supplier of water pumps to the independent aftermarket must possess an extensive distribution network designed to reach numerous wholesalers or retailers. In contrast, a supplier of water pumps to the OEM-installation or OEM-service markets need only have a minimal distribution organization since the number of his customers is very small. Water pumps are sold individually boxed to the independent aftermarket. Water pumps can be, and generally are, sold in bulk to the OEM-installation and service markets. A supplier to the independent aftermarket must offer water pumps having application on most vehicles in use, whereas a supplier to the OEM-installation and service markets can offer a much more limited line of products. Brand identity is important in the sale of water pumps to the independent aftermarket. Brand identity is of limited importance in the sale of water pumps to the OEM-installation and OEM-service markets.

61. In 1967, the total shipments of water pumps to the independent aftermarket were $24.634 million.

62. Concentration is high in the sale of water pumps to the independent aftermarket. In 1967, the four largest firms accounted for about 52 percent of shipments to that market and the eight largest firms 78 percent.

63. Barriers to entry into the sale of water pumps to the independent aftermarket are high. An extensive distribution system is necessary to reach the customers in this market. A reputation for supplying defect-free products is important and becoming more important as water pump design has become more complex, the tolerances have been reduced and the stress to which the product is subjected has become more intense. Likewise, a supplier must be able to supply numerous different part numbers on demand, a problem that has been magnified greatly in recent years as more and more different part numbers have been introduced.

64. Despite a rapidly growing market, the number of sellers of water pumps to the independent aftermarket has fallen. A few firms have entered this market, but many have exited, some due to acquisitions by leading suppliers of other suppliers to the independent aftermarket.

65. In 1967, U-P had total sales of water pumps to the independent aftermarket of $1.681 million, accounted for 7 percent of sales in that market, and ranked about 5th among suppliers to that market. In that year, B-W had total sales of water pumps to the independent aftermarket of $.846 million, accounted for 3 percent of sales in that market and ranked 9th among suppliers to that market. The combined sales of B-W and U-P in 1967 accounted pro forma for 10 percent of sales of water pumps to the independent aftermarket and would have ranked 4th among suppliers to that market. In 1971, U-P had sales of $4.510 million of water pumps and accounted for 7 percent of the shipments of water pumps to the independent aftermarket.

V. Effects of the Acquisitions

66. The effects of the acquisition of U-P by B-W may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the sale of replacement clutches, rebuilt clutches, and water pumps throughout the United States in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, in the following ways, among others:

(a) Substantial actual competition between B-W, U-P and other firms in the sale of clutches to the replacement market has been eliminated.

(b) Substantial actual competition between B-W, U-P other firms in the sale of rebuilt clutches has been eliminated.

(c) Substantial actual competition between B-W, U-P and other firms in the sale of water pumps to the independent aftermarket has been eliminated.

VI. The Violations Charged

67. The acquisition of U-P by B-W constitutes a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18) and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §45).

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having therefore issued its complaint charging the proposed respondent named in the caption hereto with violation of

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, and the proposed respondent having being served with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The proposed respondent and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the proposed respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and did not constitute an admission by proposed respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other positions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered and accepted the agreement containing consent order and it having been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days now and further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

(1) B-W is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 200 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

(2) The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of B-W, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

I

It is ordered, That Borg-Warner Corporation, (hereinafter "B-W") within a period not exceeding eighteen (18) months from the effective date of this order, shall divest, by sale, or by public offering or spinoff of the stock of a new corporation formed for such purpose, subject to prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission, all assets, properties, rights and privileges, tangible and intangible, including, but not limited to, all plants, equipment, machinery, inventory, customer lists, trade names, trademarks and good will, acquired by B-W as a result of its acquisition of Unit Parts Company (hereinafter "U-P") together with all additions and improvements to such assets and properties.

In the event that a new corporation is established as provided herein, B-W shall make available to such new corporation adequate administrative, sales and service personnel to carry on the business to be transferred to the new corporation.

II

It is further ordered, That none of the assets, properties, rights or privileges to be divested, as described in Part I of this order, shall be sold or transferred, directly or indirectly, to any person who is at the time of the divestiture an officer, director, employee, or agent of, or under the control or direction of, B-W or any of B-W's subsidiary or affiliate corporations, or anyone who owns or controls, directly or indirectly, more than 1 percent of the outstanding shares of common stock of B-W, or to anyone who is not approved in advance by the Federal Trade Commission.

III

It is further ordered, That if B-W divests the assets, properties, rights and privileges, described in Part I of this order, to a new corporation or corporations, the stock of each of which is wholly owned by B-W, and if B-W then distributes all the stock, in said corporation or corporations to the stockholders of B-W, in proportion to their holdings of B-W stock, Part II of this order shall be inapplicable, and the following Parts IV and V shall take force and effect in its stead.

IV

It is further ordered, That no person who is an officer, director, or executive employee of B-W, or who owns or controls, directly or indirectly, more than 1 percent of the stock of B-W, shall contemporaneously therewith be an officer, director, or executive employee of any new corporation or corporations described in Part III, or shall contemporaneously therewith own or control, directly or indirectly, more than 1 percent of the stock of any new corporation or corporations described in Part III.

V

It is further ordered, That any person who must sell or dispose of a stock interest in B-W or the new corporation or corporations, described in Part III, in order to comply with Part IV of this order may do so within six (6) months after the date on which distribution of the stock of the said corporation or corporations is made to stockholders of B-W.

VI

It is further ordered, That, pending divestiture, B-W shall not make or permit any deterioration in any of the plants, machinery, buildings, equipment or other property or assets of the company to be divested which may impair its present capacity or market value.

VII

It is further ordered, That, pending divestiture, and for ten (10) years from the date this order becomes final as provided in Part I of this order, B-W shall not acquire, directly or indirectly, without the prior approval of the Commission, the share capital or assets (other than products acquired for use or resale in the ordinary course of B-W's business, or other than the acquisition by B-W of the share capital or assets of any corporation not organized in the United States of which B-W owns more than 50 percent of the issued and outstanding share capital as of the effective date of this order) of any rebuilder of automotive parts having direct sales of rebuilt parts in the United States.

Direct sales shall include all sales to purchasers for those purchasers' subsequent use in the United States or those purchasers' subsequent resale in the United States.

No acquisition made by B-W shall be deemed immune or exempt from the antitrust laws by reason of anything contained in this order.

VIII

It is further ordered, That, pending divestiture, and for ten (10) years from the date this order becomes final as provided in Part I of this order, B-W shall notify the Commission at least sixty (60) days in advance of any acquisition, directly or indirectly of the share capital or assets (other than products acquired for use or resale in the ordinary course of B-W's business, or other than the acquisition by B-W of the share capital or assets of any corporation not organized in the United States of which B-W owns more than 50 percent of the issued and outstanding share capital as of the effective date of this order) of any manufacturer of automotive parts having direct sales of such automotive parts in the United States for which prior Commission approval is not required.

Direct sales shall include all sales to purchasers for those purchasers' subsequent use in the United States or those purchasers' subsequent resale in the United States.

IX

It is further ordered, That B-W shall, within six (6) months after the effective date of this order, and every six (6) months thereafter, until B-W has fully complied with Part I of this order, submit to the Federal Trade Commission a detailed written report of its actions, plans and progess in complying with the provisions of Part I of the order.

With respect to Parts VII and VIII of this order, B-W shall, on the first anniversary date of the divestiture provided for in Part I of this order and on each anniversary date thereafter, to and including the tenth anniversary date, submit a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which B-W intends to comply, is complying and has complied with Parts VII and VIII of this order.

X

It is further ordered, That B-W notify the Federal Trade Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in B-W which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation or the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries.

IN THE MATTER OF COMMERCIAL SERVICE COMPANY, INC., ET AL.

Docket C-2717. Complaint, Aug. 20, 1975-Decision, Aug. 20, 1975

Consent order requiring a Seattle, Wash., debt collection agency and an affiliated firm, among other things to cease filing suits in courts located in counties other than those in which defendants reside or signed the contract sued upon; failing to disclose clear explanations of what their summones mean and how a defendant should respond to avoid a default judgment; and misrepresenting that letters and forms come from an attorney when such is not the case.

For the Commission: Randall H. Brooks.

For the respondents: Warren A. Doolittle, Schwepp, Doolittle, Krug, Tausend, Beezer & Beierle, Seattle, Wash.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Commercial Service Company, Inc., a corporation, and Commercial Collectors, a partnership, and Glen B. Faulk and Richard R. Swaffield, individually, as copartners doing business as Commercial Collectors, and as officers of said corporation, and Vincent A. Retacco, an individual, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, issues this complaint:

PARAGRAPH 1. Commercial Service Company, Inc., (CSC) is a Washington corporation with its office and principal place of business located at 811 First Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Commercial Collectors (CC) is a Washington partnership with its office and principal place of business located at 811 First Ave., Seattle, Wash. Its activities are closely interrelated with, or indistinguishable from, those of CSC.

Glen B. Faulk and Richard R. Swaffield are co-partners in CC and officers of CSC. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporation and partnership, including those hereinafter set forth. Their addresses are the same as that of CSC.

Vincent A. Retacco is an attorney admitted to practice in the State of Washington. He formulates, directs and controls, in cooperation with the other individual respondents, policies, acts and practices of CSC and CC related to legal actions, real or threatened, including the acts and practices set forth below. His principal office and place of business is located at 30640 Pacific Hwy. S., Federal Way, Wash.

PAR. 2. Respondents are engaged in the business of pursuing collection activities against individuals for various retail installment and other creditors, acting as agents or assignees of such creditors. Allegations below of respondents' present acts or practices include past acts or practices.

PAR. 3. In the course of their business, respondents solicit and accept accounts from creditors located in various States. Respondents act as agents or assignees of various out-of-Washington creditors. Respondents' collection accounts include debts incurred outside of Washington and involve debtors resident outside of Washington. Thus respondents maintain a course of business in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. Respondents regularly resort to use of judicial process in cases not resolved by private settlement. The defendant debtors in such cases are predominantly low-income or middle-income persons not represented by counsel. Respondents usually obtain default judgments. CSC sues in its own name as assignee of various creditors.

PAR. 5. Excepting most cases against defendants resident in Seattle, respondents commence almost all their collection lawsuits in the Superior Court of King County, Wash. In many such suits defendants reside, and have incurred the underlying obligations, outside of King County, in places up to 300 or more miles from the court. Courts located in the county where defendants reside or where they incurred the underlying obligations could be used for these suits. Through the use of distant or inconvenient forum, respondents effectively deprive defendants of a reasonable opportunity to appear, answer and defend the lawsuits. Therefore, such use of distant or inconvenient forum is unfair.

PAR. 6. For their superior court lawsuits, respondents use confusingly worded summonses which give defendants inadequate or misleading directions as to the proper procedure for responding. These summonses have the tendency to mislead defendants into defaulting. Thus, respondents effectively deprive defendants of a reasonable opportunity to appear, answer and defend the lawsuits. Therefore, such use of confusingly worded summons is unfair and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course of their business, respondents cause to be sent from their place of business, letters or forms to alleged debtors representing that their account has been referred to an attorney to institute suit or take other action. Many of these letters and forms have been previously signed in blank by Mr. Retacco, and then placed in the control and custody of employees of CSC. Typical, but not all inclusive, of such letters or forms is CSC's so-called "Attorney Assign" form letter which contains the following statements:

> Dear (Alleged Debtor):
> The above account has been handed to me * * * with instructions to institute immediate suit and attachment against you * * * *
> I have delayed doing this with the hope * * * Also, it is my policy to withhold suit * * * *
> I am returning my file on this matter * * * and am requesting on your behalf, an extension . . . .
> If you should fail to [pay], I will of course be compelled to follow the instructions of my client and begin suit against you. Hoping this will not be necessary, I remain
> Sincerely,
> (Attorney's signature)

Through the use of the foregoing statements or representations, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that the account has been referred to an attorney, that the letter or form was sent by an attorney, that files have been transmitted to an attorney, or that an attorney is actively involved in collecting or reviewing that account in preparation for institution of suit.

In truth and in fact no referral has been made, no letter has been sent by an attorney, no files have been transmitted, and no attorney is actively involved, at this stage of collection activity. Therefore, the statements, representations and practices described in this Paragraph were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. The use of the false, misleading and deceptive statements and representations described in Paragraph Seven has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive alleged debtors and to coerce and intimidate such debtors into paying claimed amounts under the erroneous and mistaken belief that the statements and representations are true.

PAR. 9. The acts and practices alleged above are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Commercial Service Company, Inc. (CSC) is a Washington corporation with its office and principal place of business located at 811 First Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Respondent Commercial Collectors (CC) is a Washington partnership with its office and principal place of business located at 811 First Ave., Seattle, Wash. Its activities are closely interrelated with, or indistinguishable from, those of CSC.

Respondents Glen B. Faulk and Richard R. Swaffield are co-partners in CC and officers of CSC. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporation and partnership. Their addresses are the same as that of CSC.

Respondent Vincent A. Retacco is an attorney admitted to practice in the State of Washington. He formulates, directs and controls, in cooperation with the other individual respondents, policies, acts and practices of CSC and CC related to legal actions, real or threatened. His principal office and place of business is located at 30640 Pacific Hwy. S., Federal Way, Wash.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Commercial Service Company, Inc. (CSC), a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Commercial Collectors, a partnership, and Glen B. Faulk and Richard R. Swaffield, individually, as co-partners doing business as Commercial Collectors, or under any name(s), and their successors and assigns, and as officers of CSC, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, hereinafter collectively "respondents," directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the collection of credit obligations of individuals, excluding individual obligations for corporate debts, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Instituting suits except in the county where defendant resides at the commencement of the action, or in the county where the defendant signed the contract sued upon. This provision shall not preempt any rule of law which further limits choice of forum or which requires, in actions involving real property or fixtures attached to real property, that suit be instituted in a particular county.

It is further ordered, That where respondents learn subsequent to institution of suit that the preceding paragraph has not been complied with, they shall forthwith terminate the suit and vacate any default judgment entered thereunder. In lieu of such termination, respondents may effect a change of forum to a county permitted by the preceding paragraph, provided that respondents give defendants notice of such action and opportunity to defend equivalent to that which defendants would receive if a new suit were being instituted. In all cases respondents shall provide defendants with a clear explanation of the action taken and of defendants' rights to appear, answer and defend in the new forum.

It is further ordered, That, where respondents terminate a suit or vacate a judgment pursuant to the preceding paragraph, they shall give notice of such termination or vacation to each "consumer reporting agency," as such term is defined in the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. §603), which respondents have been informed or have reason to know has recorded the suit or judgment in its files. Additionally, respondents shall furnish such notice to any other such person or organization upon request of the defendant.

It is further ordered, That when respondents institute suit in any superior court in Washington State, they shall attach, to any summons served upon defendants, a notice which gives defendants adequate directions as to the proper procedure for responding to the suit and avoiding default. The notice shall use clear and unconfusing language, and appear clearly, conspicuously, and in type at least as large as typewriter pica type. Should superior court rules or procedures change respondents shall forthwith modify the notice accordingly. The initial form and adequacy of the notice has been approved, and any modifications thereof shall be subject to approval, by authorized representatives of the Federal Trade Commission.

It is further ordered, That respondents prepare and maintain a summary of superior court suits instituted, pending or terminated, in which CSC is a plaintiff. This summary shall contain each defendant's name, address and county of residence; county where the contract sued upon was signed by the defendant, if the suit was not instituted in the residence county; county where served; date served; date filed; docket number; name and location of court in which filed; name of original creditor; amount claimed; and whether or not a default judgment has been entered. Where a suit has been instituted in a county other than where defendant resides or signed the contract, the reason for this choice of forum shall be explained. This summary shall cover a continuous two-year period commencing with service upon respondents of this order. A copy of this summary shall be submitted to the Federal Trade Commission on a quarterly basis.

In subsequent paragraphs "respondents" shall include the above-named respondents and Vincent A. Retacco, an individual, and his agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device.

It is further ordered, that respondents do forthwith cease and desist from representing in writing, orally, visually or in any other manner, directly or by implication, that:

1. An account has been referred to an attorney until and unless such representation is true.

2. Communications to an alleged debtor are from an attorney when such is in fact not true.

3. That any files have been removed, transferred, or reviewed, or directions issued, or other action requested, authorized or directed, to or by an attorney, when such is in fact not true.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall forthwith deliver a copy of this order to each of their subsidiaries, operating divisions and employees.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondents named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of their present business or employment and of their affiliation with a new business or employment, in the event of such discontinuance or affiliation. COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Truth in Lending Act, and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Melmar Industries, Inc., a New Jersey corporation, Melmar Industries, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation, Prestige Industries Incorporated, a corporation, Gold Bond Industries, Inc., a corporation, and Marc Wolf, individually and as an officer of said corporations, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts and implementing regulation, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Melmar Industries, Inc., a New Jersey corporation, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business located at 1 Martin Ave., Cherry Hill, N.J.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now and have been, for some time last past, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents negotiate to third parties conditional sales contracts, promissory notes or other instruments of indebtedness executed in connection with credit purchase agreements.

COUNT I

Alleging violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two above are incorporated by reference in Count I as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents cause advertisements designed to secure leads to potential purchasers of swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products to be placed in various newspapers and other publications. The respondents are responsible for the content of said advertisements.

PAR. 4. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents sell and distribute the aforementioned swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products by causing said swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products to be shipped from the places of business of their various suppliers in the United States to purchasers at retail in States other than the States from which such shipments originate.

There is now, and has been, at all times mentioned herein, a substantial and continuous course of trade in said swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 5. PAR. 6. By and through the use of the aforesaid statements and representations and others of similar import and meaning, but not specifically set out herein, separately and in connection with oral statements and representations of their salesmen or representatives, respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

1. The offers set out in their advertisements are bona fide offers to sell swimming pools of the kind therein described and on the terms and conditions stated.

2. A prospective customer is able to obtain a "free" portable television set, or a "free" set of summer furniture with the purchase of an advertised pool.

3. The prices shown in advertisements are "Introductory" or "Pre-Season" prices and that said prices are offered only on an introductory or pre-season basis or are effective during a limited period of time and said reduced prices will be returned to respondents' pre-sale bona fide offering price or to some other substantially higher amount immediately after the sale has terminated.

4. The advertised pools are unconditionally "Guaranteed."

5. The advertised pool will be delivered within 72 hours of receipt of the customer's order.

6. Pools are sold with "No Money Down."

7. After the installation of respondents' swimming pools is completed, the purchasers' pools will be used for demonstration and advertising purposes by respondents, and, as a result of allowing or agreeing to allow their pools to be used as models, purchasers will be granted reduced prices or will receive allowances, discounts, commissions or referral fees.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact:

1. The offers set out in respondents' advertisements are not bona fide offers to sell swimming pools of the kind therein described at the prices or on the terms and conditions stated but are made for the purpose of obtaining leads to persons interested in the purchase thereof. After obtaining such leads, the individually named respondent or respondents' salesmen or representatives call upon such persons but make no effort to sell the advertised products at the advertised prices but instead disparage the advertised products in such a manner as to discourage their purchase and attempt to sell and frequently do sell different and more expensive swimming pool products.

2. A prospective purchaser is unable, in a substantial number of instances, to obtain a "free" portable television set, a "free" cabana deck, or a "free" set of summer furniture since the receipt of the aforesaid "free" item is conditioned on the purchase of an advertised pool which the prospective purchaser is generally unable to purchase for the aforesaid reasons. Additionally, where the advertisement offers a "free" item conditioned on the purchase of any pool without further specification, said "free" item is not, in a substantial number of instances, provided to said purchaser.

3. Respondents' advertised offers of swimming pools at the prices stated are not made only for a limited period of time. Said products are advertised regularly at the represented price and on the terms and conditions therein stated. Also, the swimming pools advertised and sold are not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices, and savings are not thereby afforded to their purchasers because of reductions from respondents' regular selling prices. In fact, respondents do not have regular selling prices, but the prices at which respondents' products are sold vary from purchaser to purchaser depending upon the resistance of the particular purchaser.

4. Respondents' swimming pools are not warranted in every respect without conditions or limitations for a period of ten years or any other period of time. Such warranty or guarantee as may be provided by respondents is subject to numerous terms, conditions and limitations with respect to the duration of the warranty or guarantee and fails to set forth the nature and extent of the warranty or guarantee, the identity of the warrantor or guarantor and the manner in which the warrantor or guarantor will perform thereunder.

5. In a substantial number of instances, the advertised pools are not delivered to the customer within 72 hours of receipt of the customer's order.

6. In a substantial number of instances, the advertised pools are not sold on a "No Money Down" basis.

7. After the installation of respondents' swimming pools are completed, the pools of respondents' purchasers will not, in a substantial number of instances, be used for demonstration or advertising purposes by respondents and as a result of allowing, or agreeing to allow their pools to be used as models, purchasers are not granted reduced prices, nor do they receive allowances, discounts, commission or referral fees.

Therefore, the statements and representations, as set forth in Paragraphs Five and Six hereof, were, and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of their business, and in furtherance of a sales program to induce the purchase of their swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products, respondents and their salesmen or representatives have engaged in the following additional unfair, false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices:

In a substantial number of instances, through the use of the false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices set forth in Paragraphs Five through Seven, above, respondents or their representatives have been able to induce customers into signing a contract upon initial contact without giving the customer sufficient time to carefully consider the purchase and consequences thereof.

PAR. 9. In many instances, in the usual course of their business, respondents sell and transfer said customers' contracts, procured by the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive means, to various third parties including banks. In any subsequent action to collect monies from said customers pursuant to said contracts, certain valid legal defenses and claims which said customers may have against respondents upon said contracts are unavailable as against said third parties.

PAR. 10. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products of the same general kind and nature as sold by respondents.

PAR. 11. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents were and are to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violations of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 13. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid respondents have caused, and are now causing, advertisements, as "advertisement" is defined in Section 226.2(b) of Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, to be placed in various media for the purposes of aiding, promoting or assisting, directly or indirectly, in the credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Section 226.2(n) of Regulation Z, of respondents' swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products. Said advertisements make use of terms such as "No Money Down, Low, Low Terms" without stating all of the following items, prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, in the manner and form required by Section 226.10(d)(2) thereof:

1. The cash price or the amount of the loan, as applicable;
2. The amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;
3. The number, amount and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended;
4. The amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate; and
5. The deferred payment price.

PAR. 14. In the further course of their business as aforesaid and in order to facilitate the sale of their swimming pools and other merchandise and home improvement products, respondents, or any of them, regularly extend, and for some time last past have regularly extended consumer credit as "consumer credit" is defined in Section 226.2(k) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 15. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, in the ordinary course of their business as aforesaid, and in connection with their credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Section 226.2(n) of Regulation Z, respondents have caused and are causing their customers to enter into retail installment contracts, hereinafter referred to as the contract. On the contract respondents provide certain consumer credit cost information. Respondents do not provide any other consumer credit information.

PAR. 16. By and through the use of the contract referred to in Paragraph Fifteen, respondents:

1. In some instances fail to employ the term "annual percentage rate" as required by Section 226.8(b)(2) of Regulation Z.
2. Fail to disclose the terms "annual percentage rate" and "finance charge" more conspicuously than other required terminology, as required by Section 226.6(a) of Regulation Z.
3. Include the amount of the finance charge in the computation of the amount financed contrary to the requirements of Section 226.8(c)(7) of Regulation Z.

4. In making the charge for credit life insurance optional to the customer, fail to include such charge in the amount financed, as required by Sections 226.4(a)(5) and 226.8(c)(4) of Regulation Z.

5. Fail to disclose the annual percentage rate with an accuracy to the nearest quarter of one percent, as required by Section 226.5(b)(1) of Regulation Z.

6. Fail to use the term "cash down payment" when the down payment is in money, as required by Section 226.8(c)(2) of Regulation Z.

7. Fail to use the term "unpaid balance of cash price" to describe the difference between the cash price and the cash down payment, as required by Section 226.8(c)(3) of Regulation Z.

8. Fail to identify the property in which a security interest is obtained and held, as required by Section 226.8(b)(5) of Regulation Z.

9. Fail to notify the buyer of said buyer's right to rescind the contract, as provided for by Section 226.9(a) of Regulation Z.

10. Fail to provide each buyer who has the right to rescind with two copies of the notice prescribed by Section 226.9(b) of Regulation Z, as required by that Section.

PAR. 17. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failure to comply with the provisions of Regulation Z constitutes a violation of that Act, and, pursuant to Section 108 thereof, respondents have thereby violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Melmar Industries, Inc., a New Jersey corporation, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business located at 1 Martin Ave., Cherry Hill, N.J.

Respondent Melmar Industries, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania with its office and principal place of business located at 2555 Welsh Rd., Philadelphia, Pa.

Respondent Prestige Industries Incorporated is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania with an office at 396 Rodi Rd., Pittsburgh, Pa. and its general office at 1 Martin Ave., Cherry Hill, N.J.

Respondent Gold Bond Industries, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania with an office at 1 Uam Square, Springdale, Pa. and its main office and principal place of business located at 1 Martin Ave., Cherry Hill, N.J.

Respondent Marc Wolf, 1216 Cardinal Lake Dr., Cherry Hill, N.J., is an individual and is the president of Melmar Industries, Inc., a New Jersey corporation; is the secretary-treasurer of Melmar Industries, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation; is the president of Prestige Industries Incorporated, a corporation; and is vice president of Gold Bond Industries, Inc., a corporation. Respondent Marc Wolf is responsible for formulating, controlling and directing the policies, acts and practices of the corporate respondents.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Melmar Industries, Inc., a New Jersey corporation, Melmar Industries, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation, Prestige Industries Incorporated, a corporation, Gold Bond Industries, Inc., a corporation, their successors and assigns, and their officers, and Marc Wolf, individually and as an officer of the aforesaid corporations, and any subsidiary or affiliated company, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or any other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or any other home improvement products, at retail, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using any advertising, sales plan, scheme or device wherein false, misleading or deceptive statements or representations are made in order to obtain leads or prospects for the purchase of swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or any other home improvement products at retail from respondents or any of them.

2. Making representations purporting to offer swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or any other home improvement products for sale at retail when the purpose of the representation is not to sell the advertised products but to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of other such products at higher prices.

3. Disparaging in any manner, or refusing to sell any swimming pool, swimming pool accessory or any other home improvement product which is offered for sale at retail.

4. Representing, directly or by implication, that any swimming pool, swimming pool accessory or any other home improvement product is offered for sale when such offer is not a bona fide offer to sell such product at retail.

5. Representing, directly or by implication, that the price for any swimming pool, swimming pool accessory or any other home improvement product sold by respondents at retail is a special or sale price, when such price does not constitute a significant reduction from an established selling price at which such product has been sold in substantial quantities by respondents in the recent, regular course of their retail business.

6(a) Representing that by purchasing any of said swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or other home improvement products, customers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and respondents' former price unless such swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or other home improvement products have been sold or offered for sale at retail in good faith at the former price by respondents for a reasonably substantial period of time in the recent, regular course of business.

(b) Representing that by purchasing any of said swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or other home improvement products, customers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and a compared price for said swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or other home improvement products at retail in respondents' trade area unless a substantial number of the principal retail outlets in the trade area regularly sell said swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or other home improvement products at the compared price or some higher price.

(c) Representing that by purchasing any of said swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or other home improvement products, at retail, customers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and a compared value price for comparable products unless substantial sales of such products of like grade and quality are being made at retail in the trade area at the compared price or a higher price and unless respondents have in good faith conducted a market survey or obtained representative samples of prices in their trade area which establishes the validity of said compared price and it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed that the comparison is with swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or other home improvement products of like grade and quality.

7. Misrepresenting, in any manner, the amount of savings available to purchasers or prospective purchasers of swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or any other home improvement products sold at retail by respondents.

8. Failing to maintain adequate records (a) which disclose the facts upon which any savings claim, including former pricing claims and comparative value claims and similar representations of the type described in Paragraphs 5, 6(a)-(c) and 7 of this order are based, and (b) from which the validity of any savings claim, including former pricing claims and comparative value claims and similar representations of the type described in paragraphs 5, 6(a)-(c) and 7 of this order may be determined.

9. Representing, directly or by implication, that a purchaser of products sold by respondents at retail will receive a "free" television set, pool furniture or any other prize or award unless all conditions, obligations or other prerequisites to the receipt of such television set, pool furniture or other prize or award are clearly and conspicuously disclosed.

10. Representing, directly or by implication, that any swimming pool, swimming pool accessory or any other home improvement product is guaranteed, unless the nature and extent of the guarantee, the identity of the guarantor, and the manner in which the guarantor will perform thereunder are clearly and conspicuously disclosed.

11. Failing to incorporate the following statement on the face of all sales contracts, all notes or other instruments of indebtedness executed by or on behalf of respondents' customers with such conspicuousness and clarity as is likely to be read and understood by the purchaser:

NOTICE

If you are obtaining credit in connection with this purchase, you will be required to sign a promissory note, a sales contract or other instrument of indebtedness which may be purchased from the seller by a bank, finance company or any other third party. If such is the case, you will be required to make your payments to someone other than the seller. You should be aware that if this happens you may have to pay the note, contract or other instrument of indebtedness in full to its new owner even if your purchase contract is not fulfilled.

12. Misrepresenting, directly or indirectly, that the swimming pools of any of respondents' purchasers or prospective purchasers will be used for any type of advertising or demonstration purpose or as a model pool or that as a result of such use, respondents' purchasers will be granted reduced prices or will receive discounts, referral fees or allowances of any type.

13. Contracting for any retail sale whether in the form of trade acceptance, conditional sales contract, promissory note, or otherwise, which shall become binding on the buyer prior to midnight of the third day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the date of execution.

14. Failing to furnish the buyer with a fully completed receipt or copy of any contract pertaining to such sale at the time of its execution, which is in the same language, e.g., Spanish, as that principally used in the oral sales presentation and which shows the date of the transaction and contains the name and address of the seller, and in immediate proximity to the space reserved in the contract for the signature of the buyer or on the front page of the receipt if a contract is not used and in bold face type of a minimum size of 10 points, a statement in substantially the following form:

YOU, THE BUYER, MAY CANCEL THIS TRANSACTION AT ANY TIME PRIOR TO MIDNIGHT OF THE THIRD BUSINESS DAY AFTER THE DATE OF THIS TRANSACTION. SEE THE ATTACHED NOTICE OF CANCELLATION form for an explanation of this right.

15. Failing to furnish each buyer, at the time he signs the sales contract or otherwise agrees to buy consumer goods or services from the seller, a completed form in duplicate, captioned "Notice of Cancellation," which shall be attached to the contract or receipt and easily detachable, and which shall contain in ten point bold face type the following information and statements in the same language, e.g., Spanish, as that used in the contract:

NOTICE OF CANCELLATION

(enter date of transaction)

YOU MAY CANCEL THIS TRANSACTION, WITHOUT ANY PENALTY OR OBLIGATION, WITHIN THREE BUSINESS DAYS FROM THE ABOVE DATE.

IF YOU CANCEL, ANY PROPERTY TRADED IN, ANY PAYMENTS MADE BY

YOU UNDER THE CONTRACT OR SALE, AND ANY NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT EXECUTED BY YOU WILL BE RETURNED WITHIN 10 BUSINESS DAYS FOLLOWING RECEIPT BY THE SELLER OF YOUR CANCELLATION NOTICE, AND ANY SECURITY INTEREST ARISING OUT OF THE TRANSACTION WILL BE CANCELLED.

IF YOU CANCEL, YOU MUST MAKE AVAILABLE TO THE SELLER AT YOUR RESIDENCE, IN SUBSTANTIALLY AS GOOD CONDITION AS WHEN RECEIVED, ANY GOODS DELIVERED TO YOU UNDER THIS CONTRACT OR SALE; OR YOU MAY IF YOU WISH, COMPLY WITH THE INSTRUCTIONS OF THE SELLER REGARDING THE RETURN SHIPMENT OF THE GOODS AT THE SELLER'S EXPENSE AND RISK.

IF YOU DO MAKE THE GOODS AVAILABLE TO THE SELLER AND THE SELLER DOES NOT PICK THEM UP WITHIN 20 DAYS OF THE DATE OF YOUR NOTICE OF CANCELLATION, YOU MAY RETAIN OR DISPOSE OF THE GOODS WITHOUT ANY FURTHER OBLIGATION.

IF YOU FAIL TO MAKE THE GOODS AVAILABLE TO THE SELLER, OR IF YOU AGREE TO RETURN THE GOODS TO THE SELLER AND FAIL TO DO SO, THEN YOU REMAIN LIABLE FOR PERFORMANCE OF ALL OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE CONTRACT.

TO CANCEL THIS TRANSACTION, MAIL OR DELIVER A SIGNED AND DATED COPY OF THIS CANCELLATION NOTICE OR ANY OTHER WRITTEN NOTICE OR SEND A TELEGRAM, TO (Name of seller), AT (address of seller's place of business), NOT LATER THAN MIDNIGHT OF (Date).

I HEREBY CANCEL THIS TRANSACTION.

(Date)

Provided, however, That the "Notice of Cancellation" required by this paragraph need not be furnished in those transactions in which respondents have timely furnished the buyer with the notice of the right of rescission required by Paragraph 11 of Part II of this order.

16. Failing, before furnishing copies of the "Notice of Cancellation" to the buyer, to complete both copies by entering the name of the seller, the address of the seller's place of business, the date of the transaction, and the date, not earlier than the third business day following the date of the transaction, by which the buyer may give notice of cancellation.

17. Including in any sales contract or receipt any confession of judgment or any waiver of any of the rights to which the buyer is entitled under this order including specifically his right to cancel the sale in accordance with the provisions of this order.

18. Failing to inform each buyer orally, at the time he signs the contract or purchases the goods or services, of his right to cancel.

19. Misrepresenting in any manner the buyer's right to cancel.

20. Failing or refusing to honor any valid notice of cancellation by a buyer and within 10 business days after receipt of such notice, to (i) refund all payments made under the contract or sale; (ii) return any goods or property traded in, in substantially as good condition as when received by the seller; (iii) cancel and return any negotiable instrument executed by the buyer in connection with the contract or sale and take any action necessary or appropriate to terminate promptly any security interest created in the transaction.

21. Negotiating, transferring, selling or assigning any note or other evidence of indebtedness to a finance company or other third party prior to midnight of the fifth business day following the day the contract was signed or the goods or services were purchased.

22. Failing, within 10 business days of receipt of the buyer's notice of cancellation, to notify him whether the seller intends to repossess or abandon any shipped or delivered goods.

Provided, however, That nothing contained in this order shall relieve respondents of any additional obligations respecting contracts required by federal law or the law of the State in which the contract is made. When such obligations are inconsistent, respondents can apply to the Commission for relief from this provision with respect to contracts executed in the State in which such different obligations are required. The Commission, upon showing, shall make such modifications as may be warranted in the premises.

PART II

It is further ordered, That respondents Melmar Industries, Inc., a New Jersey corporation, Melmar Industries, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation, Prestige Industries Incorporated, a corporation, Gold Bond Industries, Inc., a corporation, their successors and assigns, and their officers, and Marc Wolf, individually and as an officer of the aforesaid corporations, and any subsidiary or affiliated company, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or any other device, in connection with the arrangement, extension or advertisement of consumer credit in connection with the retail sale of swimming pools, swimming pool accessories or any other home improvement products, as "advertisement" and "consumer credit" are defined in Section 226.2(b) and Section 226.2(k), respectively, of Regulation Z (12 CFR §226) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. §1601, et seq.), do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Causing to be disseminated to the public in any manner whatsoever, any advertisement, for the purposes of aiding, promoting or assisting, directly or indirectly, any extension of consumer credit unless such advertisement states all of the following items prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, in the manner and form required by Section 226.10(d)(2) of Regulation Z:

(a) The cash price or the amount of the loan, as applicable;

(b) The amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;

(c) The number, amount, and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended;

(d) The amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate; and

2. Failing to employ the term "annual percentage rate" as required by Section 226.8(b)(2) of Regulation Z.

3. Failing to disclose the terms "annual percentage rate" and "finance charge" more conspicuously than other required terminology, as required by Section 226.6(a) of Regulation Z.

4. Including the amount of the finance charge in the computation of the amount financed, contrary to the requirements of Section 226.8(c)(7) of Regulation Z.

5. Failing to include the charge for credit life insurance, when not required to be placed within the finance charge, within the amount financed, as required by Sections 226.4(a)(5) and 226.8(c)(4) of Regulation Z.

6. Failing to disclose the annual percentage rate with an accuracy to the nearest quarter of one percent, as required by Section 226.5(b)(1) of Regulation Z.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Fur Products Labeling Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Epshtein Trading Corporation, a corporation, and Jacob L. Epshtein, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts and the rules and regulations promulgated under the Fur Products Labeling Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Epshtein Trading Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 224 W. 29th St., New York, N.Y.

Individual respondent Jacob L. Epshtein is an officer of Epshtein Trading Corporation. He formulates, directs, and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

Respondents are engaged in the importation and sale of furs.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now and for some time last past have been engaged in the sale and offering for sale in commerce, and in the importation into the United States, and in the transportation and distribution in commerce, of furs; and have imported for sale, sold, offered for sale, transported and distributed furs which have been shipped and received in commerce, as the terms "commerce" and "fur" are defined in the Fur Products Labeling Act.

PAR. 3. Certain of said furs were falsely and deceptively invoiced with respect to the names or designations of the animals that produced the said furs in violation of Section 5(b)(1) of the Fur Products Labeling Act.

Among such falsely and deceptively invoiced furs, but not limited thereto, were furs which were invoiced as "mink" or "South Korean mink" when in truth and in fact said furs were not produced by the designated animals. In accordance with Section 7 of the Fur Products Labeling Act and pursuant to the designations established thereunder by the Fur Products Name Guide, said furs were, in fact, produced by animals named in said guide, as "Kolinskys" or "Chinese Weasels", and were required to be designated "Kolinsky" or "Chinese Weasel."

PAR. 4. Certain of said furs were falsely and deceptively invoiced in that respondents set forth on invoices pertaining to said furs the names of animals other than the name or names of the animals that produced the said furs in violation of Section 5(b)(2) of the Fur Products Labeling Act.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, are in violation of the Fur Products Labeling Act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereto with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

Epshtein, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division, or any other device, in connection with the introduction, or importing for introduction, into commerce, or the offering for sale, sale, transportation, distribution, delivery for shipment or shipment, in commerce, of furs or fur products, as "commerce," "fur" and "fur product" are defined in the Fur Products Labeling Act, do forthwith cease and desist from falsely or deceptively invoicing any fur or fur product by:

1. Failing to furnish an invoice, as the term "invoice" is defined in the Fur Products Labeling Act, showing in words and figures plainly legible all the information required to be disclosed by each of the subsections of Section 5(b)(1) of the Fur Products Labeling Act.

3. Setting forth on an invoice pertaining to such fur or fur product the name or names of any animal or animals other than the name of the animal producing the fur as specified in the Fur Products Name Guide.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged, as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment, or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

IN THE MATTER OF

KAISER STEEL CORPORATION

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 7 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Docket No. 8878. Complaint, Mar. 3, 1972–Decision, Aug. 27, 1975

Consent order requiring an Oakland, Calif., steel company, among other things to transfer the business of MSL Tube, acquired from MSL Industries, Inc., to a wholly-owned subsidiary, Kaiser Steel Tubing, Inc., whose records must be audited annually by an independent public accountant.

Appearances

For the Commission: Stephen Miller, Harold J. Lamboley, D. Kenneth Kaplan and Perry W. Winston.

For the respondents: Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering, Wash., D.C. and Raymond Haile, Oakland, Calif.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that respondent Kaiser Steel Corporation, a corporation, has violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act as amended, (15 U.S.C. §18) and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, issues its complaint pursuant to Section 11 of the Clayton Act, (15 U.S.C. §22) stating its charges as follows:

I. Definitions

1. For the purpose of this complaint, the following definitions shall apply:

(a). Electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing denotes tubing formed from flat-rolled steel into solid-wall tubing in an electric resistance welded tube mill. It can be made from hot-rolled, cold-rolled or galvanized steel and may be in a round, square, rectangular or a special shape form. It includes structural tubing used in highway and building construction and, in smaller sizes for such applications as the manufacture of furniture, bicycles and lawn mowers. Electric resistance welded steel tubing is used for a wide variety of mechanical and structural purposes as opposed to pressure tubing which is used for the conduction of fluids and/or gases under pressure.

(b). Eleven Western States include the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico, Idaho, Utah, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and Texas.

II. Respondent Kaiser Steel Corporation

2. Kaiser Steel Corporation (hereafter "Kaiser") is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, with its principal office and place of business at 300 Lakeside Dr., Oakland, Calif.

3. Kaiser's business is conducted through three divisions: Resources, Steel and Metal Products. In addition to being the nation's tenth largest steel producer, it is the biggest steel producer in the West. In recent years, Kaiser has become a major world-wide developer of basic resources, principally iron ore, iron ore pellets and high-quality coking coal. Its primary marketing area is the seven western states.

4. For its fiscal year ending Dec. 31, 1969, Kaiser had net sales of $420.8 million, net earnings of $25.7 million, and total assets of $643.5 million.

5. At all times relevant herein, Kaiser sold and shipped, and is now selling and shipping products in interstate commerce throughout the United States; hence, Kaiser was, at the time of the acquisition challenged herein, and is now, engaged in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act.

III. Acquired Assets

6. MSL Industries, Inc. (hereafter "MSL") is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota with its principal office and place of business in Chicago, Ill. Prior to Mar. 31, 1970, MSL Tubing and Steel Co., (hereafter "MSL Tube") was an operating division of MSL, consisting of land, buildings and equipment located in Vernon, Calif. Prior to Mar. 31, 1970, MSL Realty, a Delaware corporation, organized to do business in California, was a wholly-owned subsidiary of MSL.

7. At the time of its acquisition, MSL Tube was the West Coast's largest manufacturer of electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing. In addition, MSL Tube processed and distributed secondary sheet steel and slit coil products. The geographic sales area of MSL Tube's products included primarily the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico, Idaho, Utah, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and Texas. MSL Realty's assets included land leased to MSL Tube.

8. For its fiscal year ending Dec. 31, 1969, MSL had net sales of $131.4 million, net earnings of $304,000, and total assets of $110.8 million. In 1969, MSL Tube had net sales of $12.8 million, net earnings of $1.4 million and total assets of $8.2 million.

9. At all times relevant herein, MSL Tube sold and shipped products in interstate commerce and was engaged in "commerce" within the meaning of the Clayton Act.

IV. Acquisition

10. On Mar. 31, 1970, Kaiser acquired the properties, assets and facilities comprising MSL's west coast tube manufacturing business located in Vernon, Calif., and all of the outstanding common stock of MSL Realty for $10.4 million.

V. Trade and Commerce

11. The manufacture of electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing entails feeding a width of strip steel into a welding mill where a series of special rolls form the flat steel into a tubular shape. The butted edges are then electrically welded under heat and pressure. Steel, the primary ingredient in the manufacture of electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing, represents between 65 percent and 90 percent of the total cost of manufacturing the product.

12. Due principally to freight costs, the manufacture and sale of electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing has tended to be a regional industry. In 1969, the six west coast companies engaged in the manufacture of such products, all of which were based in California, had $22.1 million sales representing over 68 percent of the market for electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing in the eleven Western States market; MSL Tube, the largest manufacturer, accounted for approximately 27 percent of total sales. In 1969, the six companies had $18.1 million sales representing over 72 percent of the sales of electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing in the State of California; MSL Tube, the largest manufacturer, accounted for approximately 30 percent of California sales.

13. In 1969, the six companies producing electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing in the California market had not been integrated or affiliated with steel manufacturers.

VI. The Effects of the Acquisition

14. The effect of the acquisition of MSL Tube and MSL Realty may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing in the State of California and in the eleven Western States in the following ways, among others:

(a). The ability of MSL Tube's nonintegrated competitors effectively to compete in the manufacture and sale of electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing has been and/or may be substantially impaired.

(b). The entry of new electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing competitors may have been and/or may be inhibited or prevented.

(c). The dominant position of MSL Tube in the electric resistance welded mechanical steel tubing industry has been, or may be, further strengthened and entrenched vis-a-vis its competitors with the result that the likelihood of any reduction in such dominant position is remote.

VII. Violation Charged

15. The acquisition of MSL Tube and MSL Realty by Kaiser on Mar. 31, 1970, constitutes a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18).

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated a complaint charging that the respondent named in the caption hereof has violated the provisions of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. §18; and

Respondent and complaint counsel, by joint motion dated Sept. 10, 1974 having moved to have the matter removed from adjudication for the purpose of submitting an executed consent agreement; and

The Commission, by order issued Sept. 24, 1974, having withdrawn this matter from adjudication pursuant to Section 3.25(c) of its rules; and

The executed agreement contains a consent order, an admission by respondent of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint which the Commission issued, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondent that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, and having duly considered the comments filed thereafter pursuant to Section 3.25(d) of its rules, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 3.25(d) of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Kaiser Steel Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Nevada, with its principal place of business located at 300 Lakeside Dr., in the City of Oakland, State of California.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of this proceeding and of the respondent and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

For purposes of this order, the following definitions shall apply:

"ERWMSST," or Electric Resistance Welded Mechanical and Structural Steel Tubing, means tubing formed from flat-rolled steel into solid-wall tubing in an electric resistance welded tube mill and used for mechanical or structural applications. It can be made from hot-rolled, cold-rolled or galvanized sheet steel and may be in a round, square, rectangular or a special shape form. ERWMSST does not include pipe or tubing which is used for the conduction of fluids and/or gases ("pipe" or "pressure tubing").

"Respondent" means Kaiser Steel Corporation and any of its domestic subsidiaries and their respective successors and assigns.

"The Business of MSL Tube" means the tubing business acquired by respondent from MSL Industries, Inc. and all additions subsequently made thereto, including the physical plant located in Vernon, Calif. and presently owned by respondent and operated by the Kaiser Steel Tubing Division of respondent; the nine tube mills presently at such physical plant; and all related inventories, accounts receivable and current liabilities of the Kaiser Steel Tubing Division.

"California ERWMSST Producer(s)" means (1) the manufacturers of ERWMSST listed in Appendix A and (2) any other individual or corporation not affiliated with any of the manufacturers listed in Appendix A which, subsequent to the date of this order, commences to manufacture and sell ERWMSST within the State of California.

"Secondary Sheet Steel" means sheet steel which does not meet the producer's quality standards for prime sheet steel and which is for this reason sold at prices lower than the producer's prices for prime sheet steel.

"Affiliated Person" means a person who is at the time of any action taken pursuant to Paragraph III of this order an officer, director, employee or agent of respondent or who owns or controls, directly or indirectly, more than one percent of the outstanding shares of the capital stock of respondent.

I

It is ordered, That:

A. Respondent shall, within six months after the date this Order becomes final, transfer, assign and convey The Business of MSL Tube to a wholly-owned subsidiary, hereinafter called Kaiser Steel Tubing, Inc. ("KST"). KST shall maintain, in accordance with good accounting practice, separate and complete corporate records and accounts, which shall be audited annually by an independent public accountant. KST shall preserve such records for a period of at least five years.

B. Respondent shall not sell any type of sheet steel, including Secondary Sheet Steel, to KST at a price (including extra charges and discounts) lower than respondent's then current list price unless, to respondent's reasonable belief, other California ERWMSST producers can substantially satisfy their requirements for such type of sheet steel by purchases at such lower price.

C. With regard to all other commercial transactions between respondent and KST, Respondent shall establish procedures to insure that such transactions are no more favorable to KST than would be the case if they were entered into between respondent and independent parties on reasonable commercial terms. Respondent shall not enter into any such commercial transaction with KST except on terms which accord with these procedures. Respondent shall report annually to the Commission all such commercial transactions with KST in the preceding year involving more than $25,000. In addition, such transactions shall be reviewed by the independent accountants described in Paragraph I(A) above, and respondent shall submit to the Commission the reports containing the opinion of said accountants as to whether such transactions complied with the procedures established pursuant to this paragraph.

It is further ordered, That

A. Respondent shall in each calendar year make available for sale to each California ERWMSST producer, at a price not exceeding respondent's then current published list price (including applicable extra charges and discounts), subject to credit terms appropriate under the circumstances, and on conditions of sale not less favorable than those offered to KST, a quantity of sheet steel for use in the manufacture of ERWMSST equal to the average of such producer's annual purchases of sheet steel from respondent for use in the manufacture of ERWMSST for the three years during the period 1969 through 1973, inclusive, in which such company purchased the greatest quantities of sheet steel from respondent (its "base years"). In making such allocations, respondent shall use its best efforts to make available to each such ERWMSST producer, hot-rolled, cold-rolled and galvanized sheet steel in the same ratio as those types of steel were purchased by such producer from respondent during its base years. Respondent shall make available for sale to any California ERWMSST producer (1) whose average annual purchases of sheet steel from respondent for use in the manufacture of ERWMSST during its "base years" were less than 1,000 tons, or (2) who commenced the manufacture and sale of ERWMSST in the State of California subsequent to the date of this order, a minimum annual allocation of 1,000 tons of hot-rolled sheet steel for use in the manufacture of ERWMSST.

B. In any calendar year respondent shall increase the quantities of sheet steel made available to California ERWMSST producers pursuant to Paragraph II(A) by the same percentage by which its sales of sheet steel to KST for use in the manufacture of ERWMSST in the most recent calendar year exceeded its 1974 sales of sheet steel to KST for that purpose.

C. Respondent shall in each year, to the extent Secondary Sheet Steel is available, include in the quantity of sheet steel made available for sale to each California ERWMSST producer pursuant to this paragraph, at such producer's option, secondary sheet steel for use in the manufacture of ERWMSST in the same proportion that respondent's sales of secondary sheet steel to KST for use in the manufacture of ERWMSST in the then current calendar year bear to its total sales of sheet steel to KST for that purpose during such calendar year.

D. Respondent shall not be obligated to deliver sheet steel offered for sale to California ERWMSST producers pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph during any period when its ability to produce or deliver sheet steel is substantially impaired by reason of labor difficulties, war, civil commotion, act of God, governmental action, failure of equipment, sources of supply or transportation, or other occurrence beyond respondent's control; and the quantity of sheet steel which respondent shall be obligated to make available for sale to California ERWMSST producers in any year in which such an occurrence takes place shall be reduced in proportion to the total reduction in respondent's production of sheet steel, caused by such occurrence, below its projected production for that year.

III

It is further ordered, That within one year from the date this order becomes final, respondent shall, or shall cause KST to, with respect to each of three tube mills and associated equipment (including jib crane; pay-off reel; coil end joining table; looping system; forming mill; welder; tube cooling section; sizing mill; cut-off device; drive system and console table) suitable for the manufacture of ERWMSST in commonly used sizes from approximately 1/2 inch to approximately 1 1/2 inch diameter, presently included among the business of MSL Tube, either (1) sell such mill or mills and associated equipment to persons who are not affiliated persons; or (2) impound such mill or mills and associated equipment, provided that any mill or mills and associated equipment so impounded shall not again be used by respondent or KST for the production of ERWMSST within the State of California without prior consent of the Commission.

IV

It is further ordered, That if respondent or KST elects to sell any tube mill pursuant to alternative one of Paragraph III of this order, nothing in this order shall be deemed to prohibit respondent from retaining, accepting, and enforcing in good faith any security interest therein, not to exceed five years in duration, for the sole purpose of securing to respondent or KST full payment of the price, with interest, at which such tube mill is sold; Provided, however, That should respondent or KST, by exercise of such security interest regain direct or indirect control of any such tube mill, it shall be redivested or impounded in accordance with Paragraph III of this order, within one year from the date of reacquisition.

V

It is further ordered, That KST shall not sell or offer to sell ERWMSST and steel mill products together at a single price. Nothing in this paragraph shall prevent KST from offering carload or truckload discounts which are computed on the sale of quantities of both tubing and such other products, based on cost savings attributable to the sale of those products together.

VI

It is further ordered That respondent shall, within 60 days from the date this order becomes final, submit to the Commission a detailed written report of its actions, plans, and progress in complying with the provisions of this order and in fulfilling its objectives. Every 60 days thereafter, until respondent has taken one of the alternative actions required by Paragraph III of this order, respondent shall submit a subsequent report on its progress in complying with Paragraph III. Respondent shall submit annually, within 90 days after the end of its fiscal year, a detailed written report of its actions in complying with the remaining provisions of this order.

VII

It is further ordered, That, pending sale or impoundment of the tube mills which are the subject of Paragraph III of this order, respondent shall not make any changes in, other than in the ordinary course of business, or permit any deterioration of, any of such tube mills which may impair such mill's capacity for the manufacture of ERWMSST.

VIII

It is further ordered, That, for a period of ten years from the date this order becomes final, respondent shall not, without the prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission, acquire, or acquire and hold, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the assets, stock, share capital, or other actual or potential equity interest or right of participation in the earnings of any domestic concern, corporate or noncorporate, engaged in the manufacture of ERWMSST in the States of Arizona, California, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Utah and Washington.

IX

It is further ordered, That respondent notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, or any other proposed change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

X

It is further ordered, That the provisions of this order shall remain in effect for a period of ten years from the date this order becomes final.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that State Credit Association, Inc., a corporation, and D. Keith Lasswell, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues this complaint stating its charges as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent State Credit Association, Inc. (hereinafter SCA) is a Washington corporation with its office and principal place of business located at 1314 Howell St., Seattle, Wash.

Respondent D. Keith Lasswell is an officer of SCA. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, including those hereinafter set forth, and his business address is the same as that of SCA.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now and have been engaged in the business of collecting or attempting to collect alleged money obligations as agents or assignees of various creditors. Allegations stated below in the present tense include the past tense.

PAR. 3. In the course of its business, SCA engages in substantial interstate commercial intercourse, including transmittal of letters, checks and documents through the United States mails among the various States of the United States. In the course of its business, SCA solicits and receives accounts and other kinds of money obligations for collection from persons and firms, including interstate corporations, located outside the State of Washington. SCA, in such instances, acts as agent or assignee of said creditors. Some of SCA's collection activities involve money obligations incurred outside of the State of Washington and allegedly owed by persons or firms resident inside the State of Washington. Some of SCA's collection activities involve money obligations incurred inside the State of Washington and allegedly owed by persons or firms resident outside the State of Washington. Further, SCA frequently refers money obligations for collection to persons and firms located outside the State of Washington, and, according to its own letterhead, maintains agents throughout the United States and the World. Thus, respondents are engaged in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Deceptive Forms

PAR. 4. In the course of its business, SCA causes to be transmitted, to those whom it pursues for collection of alleged money obligations, printed forms, copies of which are set forth below:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
File No. 732-3077 COMMISSION INVESTIGATIONAL Exhibit No. 9
In the Matter of: State Credit Asso.
Date 11-6-73 Witness Kaswell Reporter JM

This is in no way a Legal Form or a Simulated Legal Form. It is advisable to Pay the amount called for Immediat since Legal Forms served by the Sheriff require payment of Court Costs and Service Fees in addition.

PAR. 5. Through the use of statements and representations in said forms, SCA has misrepresented, directly or by implication, that:

A. Form 1

1. SCA will attach, garnish, foreclose, or otherwise take possession of some part of the assets, wages, or other property of the person against whom collection activities are being pursued, without allowing or being required to allow such person any defense or recourse except payment of the demanded amount of money.

2. Legal action on the allegedly unpaid obligation is about to be initiated.

3. If SCA does not receive full payment of the allegedly unpaid obligation within the specified time period, SCA will commence suit.

B. Form 2

1. The allegedly unpaid obligation has been referred to an attorney.

2. An attorney is actively involved in pursuing or reviewing a collection matter in preparation for initiation of legal action.

3. Legal action on the allegedly unpaid obligation has been or is about to be initiated.

4. If SCA does not receive full payment of the allegedly unpaid obligation within the specified time period, SCA will commence suit.

C. Form 3

1. SCA engages in credit reporting activities or engages in providing information to credit reporting agencies.

2. The existence of the allegedly unpaid obligation has impaired such person's credit standing already and can only be corrected by full payment to SCA.

3. Failure to make full payment to SCA of the alleged obligation within the specified time period will result in impairment of the credit standing or credit privileges of the person against whom collection activities are being pursued.

These threats have the capacity and tendency to mislead those who allegedly owe such money obligations as to their legal rights and as to the status of the collection activities being conducted against them, and thus tend to induce payment by such persons.

Therefore, the statements and representations referred to in Paragraphs Four and Five are deceptive and unfair.

Gag Calling

PAR. 6. In the course of its business, SCA collects or attempts to collect information by telephone using an assumed identity, or disguising the purpose for which information is desired. Such a practice is commonly known as "gag calling" in collection terminology.

Since recipients of such calls may be misled as to the true identity or purpose of the callers, they may be induced to provide information which is not in their interest to supply and which they normally would not voluntarily furnish. Therefore, this practice is deceptive and unfair.

Questioning of Others in the Debtor's Home

PAR. 7. In the course of its business, SCA telephones private residences and if the alleged debtor is not home, SCA proceeds to question other persons in the home, including minor children, about telephone numbers, places of employment or other information to facilitate collection.

Many persons in such a situation, especially minor children, cannot understand the nature or importance of information requested and are not in a position to determine whether or how they should respond to such questions. Thus, SCA may obtain private information from the child or other person which is not in the alleged debtor's interest to supply and which such debtor normally would not voluntarily furnish. Therefore, this practice is unfair.

Use of Judicial Process

PAR. 8. SCA regularly resorts to use of judicial process in collection matters not resolved by private settlement. The defendants in such cases are predominately low-income or middle-income persons not represented by counsel. SCA sues in its own name as assignee of the alleged money obligations and usually obtains default judgments against such defendants.

PAR. 9. SCA commences almost all its collection lawsuits in the district and superior courts of King County, Wash. In many of the superior court suits defendants reside, or incurred the underlying obligations, outside of King County, in places up to 200 or more miles from the court. Courts located in the county where defendants reside or where they incurred the underlying obligations could be used for these suits. Through such use of distant and inconvenient forum, SCA effectively deprives defendants of a reasonable opportunity to appear, answer and defend the lawsuits. Therefore, this practice is unfair.

PAR. 10. For its superior court lawsuits, SCA uses confusingly worded summonses which give defendants inadequate or misleading directions as to the proper procedure for responding. These summonses have the tendency to mislead defendants into defaulting. Thus, SCA effectively deprives defendants of a reasonable opportunity to appear, answer and defend the lawsuits. Therefore, this practice is unfair and deceptive.

PAR. 11. The use of the deceptive statements and representations described above has the tendency and capacity to lead alleged debtors into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the statements and representations are true. As a result of this belief, and as a result of these and other unfair practices described above, such alleged debtors are coerced and intimidated into paying the amounts claimed against them.

PAR. 12. The acts and practices alleged above are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Seattle Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

A. Respondent State Credit Association, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, with its office and principal place of business located at 1314 Howell St., Seattle, Wash.

Respondent D. Keith Lasswell is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation and his address is the same as that of said corporation.

B. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

I

It is ordered, That respondents State Credit Association, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and D. Keith Lasswell, individually and as an officer of SCA, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, hereinafter collectively "respondents," directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the collection of money obligations or any other form of obligation or claim in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, do forthwith cease and desist from representing in writing, orally, visually, or in any other manner, directly or by implication, that:

A. Respondents can or will attach, garnish, foreclose, or in any manner take possession of any part of the assets, wages or other property of anyone, or initiate any legal action unless (a) at the time of such representation, respondents have a present legal right to take such action, (b) respondents specify truthfully, in immediate conjunction with such representation, how soon such action will be taken if payment of the obligation is not made, and (c) respondents regularly take such action within the specified time period when no payment is made.

B. Any allegedly unpaid obligation has been referred to an attorney unless such is the fact.

C. An attorney is actively involved in pursuing or reviewing a collection matter in preparation for initiation of legal action unless such is the fact.

D. Legal action on an allegedly unpaid obligation has been or is being initiated unless such is the fact.

E. Respondents engage in credit reporting activities of any kind or engage in providing information to credit-reporting agencies.

F. The existence of an allegedly unpaid obligation has impaired or will impair any person's credit standing or credit privileges or that only payment to respondents can correct or avoid any credit impairment.

II

It is further ordered, That respondents, in any communication with any person or firm during any part of collection activities, refrain from engaging in any representations which disguise, obscure, or detract from respondents' true identity or the true purpose of the communication.

III

It is further ordered, That respondents, when speaking to persons present in the alleged debtor's home other than the debtor himself or herself, do forthwith cease and desist from attempting to obtain any information other than (1) whether the caller may speak to the debtor and, if the debtor is not present, (2) when the debtor is expected to be home, and (3) whether there is a telephone number where the debtor can be reached. When speaking to persons under the age of twelve (which respondents may verify by direct question if necessary), respondents cannot attempt to obtain any information other than whether the caller may speak to an adult.

IV

It is further ordered, That respondents comply with all provisions of the Federal Trade Commission's "Guides Against Debt Collection Deception" existing at the time this Order is finally accepted.

V

It is further ordered, That respondents do forthwith cease and desist from instituting suits except in the county where the defendant resides at the commencement of the action, or in the county where the defendant signed the contract sued upon, or, if there was no written contract, where the obligation was incurred. This provision shall not preempt any rule of law which further limits choice of forum or which requires, in actions involving real property or fixtures attached to real property, that suit be instituted in a particular county.

VI

It is further ordered, That when respondents institute suit in any superior court in Washington State, they shall attach, to any summons served upon defendants, a notice which gives defendants adequate directions as to the proper procedure for responding to the suit and avoiding default. The notice shall use clear and unconfusing language, and shall appear clearly, conspicuously, and in type at least as large as typewriter pica type. Should superior court rules or procedures change respondents shall forthwith modify the notice accordingly. The initial form of the notice, and any modifications thereof, shall be subject to approval by authorized representatives of the Federal Trade Commission. Respondents shall not make any representation in writing, orally, visually or in any other manner, directly or by implication, which disguises, obscures, or detracts from the proper procedure for responding to the suit or for avoiding default.

VII

It is further ordered, That respondents shall forthwith deliver a copy of this order to each of their subsidiaries, operating divisions and employees engaged in collection activities.

VIII

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

IX

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment or of his affiliation with a new business or employment in the debt collection industry, in the event of such discontinuance or affiliation. Such notice shall include the respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

X

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The House of Schiller, Inc., a corporation, and Lawrence Kane and Donald Sherman, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent The House of Schiller, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located at 41-40 27th St., Long Island City, N.Y.

Respondents Lawrence Kane and Donald Sherman are individuals and are officers of the corporate respondent. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of plastic slipcovers to members of the purchasing public at retail.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, their said merchandise, when sold, to be shipped from their place of business located in the State of New York, to purchasers thereof located in various other States, and maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said merchandise in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their merchandise, respondents have made, and are now making, numerous statements and representations in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation and by oral statements and representations of their sales representatives and agents to prospective purchasers with respect to said merchandise and services.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, is the following:

Sofa $14.95 Chair $8.50 3 piece sectional $29.95

PAR. 5. By and through the use of said above quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, separately and in connection with the oral statements and representations of respondents' salesmen to customers and prospective customers, respondents have represented and are now representing directly or by implication that:

1. Respondents are making a bona fide offer to sell the advertised merchandise at the price and on the terms and conditions stated in the advertisements.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents' offers are not bona fide offers to sell said merchandise at the price and on the terms and conditions stated in the advertisements. To the contrary, said offers are made for the purpose of obtaining leads to persons interested in the purchase of plastic slipcovers. Members of the purchasing public who respond to said advertisements are called upon in their homes by respondents or their salesmen who make little or no effort to sell to the prospective customer the advertised merchandise. Instead, they exhibit what they represent to be the advertised merchandise which, because of its poor appearance and condition, is frequently rejected on sight by the prospective customer. Higher priced merchandise of superior quality is thereupon exhibited, which by comparison disparages and demeans the merchandise. By these and other tactics, purchase of the advertised merchandise is discouraged, and respondents, through their salesmen, attempt to sell and frequently do sell the higher priced merchandise.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five, hereof, were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of merchandise of the same general kind and nature as the aforesaid merchandise sold by respondents.

PAR. 8. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such advertisements and representations were and are true, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' said merchandise by reason of said erroneous and mistaken beliefs.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents as herein alleged were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent The House of Schiller, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its offices and principal place of business located at 41-40 27 St., Long Island City, N.Y.

Respondents Lawrence Kane and Donald Sherman are officers of said corporation. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents The House of Schiller, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Lawrence Kane and Donald Sherman, individually and as officers of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of plastic slipcovers or other merchandise to the public at retail, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using, in any manner, a sales plan, scheme, or device wherein false, misleading, or deceptive statements or representations are made in order to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of plastic slipcovers or other merchandise or services.

2. Making representations, directly or indirectly, orally, or in writing, purporting to offer merchandise or services for sale when the purpose of the representation is not to sell the offered merchandise or services but to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of other merchandise or services at a higher price.

3. Disparaging in any manner, or discouraging the purchase of any merchandise or services which are advertised or offered for sale.

4. Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that any merchandise or services are offered for sale when such offer is not a bona fide offer to sell such merchandise or services.

5. Failing to maintain and produce for inspection and copying for a period of three years adequate records to document for the entire period during which each advertisement was run and for a period of six weeks after the termination of its publication in press or broadcast media:

a. the cost of publishing each advertisement including the preparation and dissemination thereof;

b. the volume of sales made of the advertised product or service at the advertised price; and

c. a computation of the net profit from the sales of each advertised product or service at the advertised price.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall maintain for at least a one (1) year period, following the effective date of this order, copies of all advertisements, including newspaper, radio and television advertisements, direct mail and in-store solicitation literature, and any other such promotional material utilized for the purpose of obtaining leads for the sale of plastic slipcovers and other merchandise, or utilized in the advertising, promotion or sale of plastic slipcovers and other merchandise.

It is further ordered, That respondents, for a period of one (1) year from the effective date of this order, shall provide each advertising agency utilized by respondents and each newspaper publishing company, television or radio station or other advertising media which is utilized by the respondents to obtain leads for the sale of plastic slipcovers and other merchandise, with a copy of the Commission's news release setting forth the terms of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondents deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future personnel of respondents who are engaged in the offering for sale and sale of respondents' products, or in any aspect of preparation, creation, or placing of advertising and that respondents secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person and that respondents distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondents maintain full and complete records of all complaints and correspondence received from customers, or any memoranda in connection therewith, for a period of two years after receipt.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment, or sale, resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondents named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of their present business or employment and of their affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondents' current business addresses and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which they are engaged as well as a description of their duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That no provision of this order shall be construed in any way to annul, invalidate, repeal, terminate, modify or exempt respondents from complying with agreements, orders or directives of any kind obtained by any other agency or act as a defense to actions instituted by municipal or State regulatory agencies. No provision of this order shall be construed to imply that any past or future conduct of respondents complies with the rules and regulations of, or the statutes administered by, the Federal Trade Commission.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

THE BUDD COMPANY

DISMISSAL ORDER, OPINIONS, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 7 OF THE CLAYTON ACT

Docket 8848. Complaint, June 18, 1971-Decision, Aug. 29, 1975

Order dismissing complaint issued against a Philadelphia, Pa., automotive parts supplier for alleged violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The Commission vacated the initial decision of the administrative law judge, finding respondent's acquisition of Gindy Manufacturing Corporation to be procompetitive rather than anticompetitive as alleged in the complaint.

Appearances

For the Commission: K. Keith Thurman, Ronald J. Dolan and James C. Egan, Jr.

For the respondent: Ralph W. Brenner, Edward R. Sandell and T. Michael Mather, Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads, Philadelphia, Pa.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that The Budd Company, a corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, has acquired the stock of Gindy Manufacturing Corporation, a corporation, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §18), hereby issues this complaint, pursuant to Section 11 of that Act (15 U.S.C. §21), stating its charges in that respect as follows:

I. Definition

1. For the purposes of this complaint, the following definitions shall apply:

(a) "Containers and chassis," as used here, refer to large, closed box-type structures which can be used for the intermodal transportation of goods, by rail, ship or motor carrier and chassis used to transport containers. The container is detachable from the chassis of a trailer or semi-trailer when so used. Sizes are now generally standardized to 8 feet wide, 8 feet high and either 20 feet or 40 feet long, although a few odd sizes are also made.

(b) "Van trailer," as used here, refers to a large box-type structure attached permanently to a chassis for use as a truck trailer or semi-trailer. Among the principal types are:

(1) Closed-top dry freight

II. The Budd Company

2. Respondent, The Budd Company (hereafter "Budd") is now, and was at the time of the acquisition, a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal office, and place of business located at 2450 Hunting Park Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

3. In 1967, Budd had sales of $330.9 million, and assets of $264.5 million. In that year it was the 250th largest industrial corporation in the Nation in total sales. In 1968, its sales increased to $469.5 million and assets increased to $346.7 million making it the nation's 209th largest industrial corporation in total sales. By 1969, Budd had annual sales of $561.7 million and assets of $402 million and in terms of sales had progressed to rank 191st among the nation's largest industrial corporations.

4. Budd is one of the largest independent automotive suppliers in the nation and the largest independent supplier of body components to the automotive industry. Budd manufactures automotive bodies, wheels, rims, hubs, drums, brakes and other automotive products. It also produces jigs, dies and fixtures used in the manufacture of automotive bodies and components, railroad cars, metal stampings and industrial plastic products. Approximately 85 percent of its sales are in the automotive field.

5. Prior to its acquisition of Gindy Manufacturing Corporation, Budd surveyed the transportation equipment field, including manufacturers of van trailers and containers and chassis, with a view to acquisition of such companies. As a major manufacturer of metal stampings and parts such as wheels, rims, hubs, and drums, Budd made many of the parts used in the manufacture of van trailers and container chassis. Furthermore, Budd has designed and produced components used in the manufacture of stainless steel dry freight van trailers and aluminum containers.

6. By virtue of its position as a substantial manufacturer and supplier of transportation equipment and component parts, its financial resources, its marketing knowledge and its demonstrated interest in entering the van trailer and container and chassis industry, Budd was, prior to Oct. 22, 1968, one of the most likely potential entrants into the manufacture and sale of van trailers and containers and chassis.

7. At all times relevant herein, Budd sold and shipped its products throughout the United States and was and is now engaged in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act.

III. Gindy Manufacturing Corporation

8. Prior to its acquisition by Budd on Oct. 22, 1968, Gindy Manufacturing Corporation (hereafter "Gindy") was a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal office and place of business located in Downingtown, Pa.

9. Gindy was engaged principally in the manufacture, sale and distribution of van trailers and containers and chassis. Its manufacturing and assembly facilities were located in Eagle, Lebanon and Honey Brook, Pa.; Pennsauken, N.J.; Collinsville, Va.; and St. Louis, Mo.

10. For the fiscal year ending May 31, 1968, Gindy's sales were approximately $32.2 million, and its assets amounted to approximately $44 million.

11. In calendar year 1968, Gindy was a substantial manufacturer and seller of van trailers and containers and chassis. With sales of $32.2 million, it ranked fourth in the country in the sale of van trailers; with sales of $26.7 million, it ranked fourth in the country in the sale of closed-top dry freight van trailers; with sales of $3.1 million, second in the sale of open-top van trailers; and, with sales of $3.1 million, sixth in the sale of containers and chassis. In that year, Gindy accounted for 8.4 percent of van trailer shipments, 10.8 percent of closed-top dry freight van trailer shipments, 15.9 percent of open-top van trailer shipments and 3.8 percent of container and chassis shipments. In calendar year 1969 Gindy's shipments of van trailers increased to $42.6 million, and its market share increased to 8.8 percent. In that same year its shipments of closed-top dry freight van trailers increased to $40.3 million, making Gindy the 3rd largest supplier with 12.9 percent of shipments. A significant increase in Gindy's position in the shipment of containers and chassis also occurred in 1969; its value of shipments increased to

12. At all times relevant herein Gindy sold and shipped its products throughout the United States and engaged in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act.

IV. The Acquisition

13. On or about Oct. 22, 1968, Budd acquired all of the then issued and outstanding capital stock of Gindy, aggregating 62,730 shares, for approximately 900,000 shares of Budd common stock. At the time of the acquisition the Budd stock exchanged for Gindy was valued at approximately $24 million. Gindy has been operated as a Budd subsidiary since the acquisition.

V. Trade and Commerce

14. The relevant geographic market involved in this complaint is the United States as a whole. The relevant product markets are:

(a) Van trailers
(b) Containers and chassis.

The relevant product sub-markets are:

(a) Closed-top dry freight van trailers

15. The manufacture of van trailers and containers and chassis is a significant industry in the United States. During 1968, the approximate total value of shipments in the relevant markets and submarkets by domestic producers was as follows:

(a) Van trailers, $381.7 million;
(b) Closed-top dry freight van trailers, $246.1 million;
(c) Open-top van trailers, $19.8 million; and
(d) Containers and chassis, $81.6 million.

During 1969, the approximate total value of shipments in the relevant markets and submarkets by domestic producers was as follows:

(a) Van trailers, $486.4 million;
(b) Closed-top dry freight van trailers, $312.3 million;
(c) Open-top van trailers, $16.3 million; and
(d) Containers and chassis, $91.6 million.

16. The van trailer manufacturing industry is marked by a high degree of concentration. In 1968, the four largest companies accounted for approximately 58.9 percent and the eight largest companies for approximately 81.1 percent of total industry sales. The closed-top dry freight van trailer market is even more highly concentrated with the top four firms accounting for 65.9 percent of 1968 shipments and the top eight firms accounting for 84.8 percent. Concentration in the open-top van trailer market is also high, with the top four firms accounting for 56.9 percent of 1968 shipments and the top eight firms accounting for 72.1 percent. Concentration in the sale of containers and chassis is extremely high; in 1968 four firms accounted for 90.4 percent of shipments and the top eight for virtually all of the shipments in this market.

17. By 1969 concentration in the shipment of van trailers and closed-top dry freight van trailers had increased. In that year the top four firms accounted for 61.5 percent of van trailer shipments and the top eight firms for 81.7 percent. In 1969 the top four firms accounted for 72.0 percent of closed-top dry freight van trailer shipments and the top eight firms for 88.7 percent.

18. Of major importance to most purchasers of van trailers and containers and chassis, in many instances governing the purchaser's choice of supplier, are the terms relative to extent, duration, and rate of financing for proposed sales transactions. Access to significant financial resources which will permit a manufacturer to extend generous credit on easy repayment terms constitutes a decisive competitive advantage in the sale of van trailers and containers and chassis.

19. Entry into the manufacture and sale of van trailers and containers and chassis is difficult. A successful manufacturer and supplier of van trailers and containers and chassis must possess manufacturing and marketing knowledge of transportation equipment, must have ample financial resources, and must possess the ability to accept, service and dispose of substantial numbers of used trade-in van trailers.

VI. Effect of the Acquisition

20. The effects of the acquisition of Gindy by Budd may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of: (1) van trailers, (2) closed-top dry freight van trailers, (3) open-top van trailers, and (4) containers and chassis throughout the United States in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, in the following ways among others:

(a) Substantial potential competition between Budd and Gindy in each such line of commerce has been eliminated.

(b) Potential competition in each such line of commerce has been substantially lessened.

(c) Other manufacturers in each such line of commerce may be led to agree to acquisition by financially strong companies for defensive or retaliatory reasons.

(d) Barriers to entry of new manufacturers into each such line of commerce have been raised significantly.

VII. The Violation Charged

21. The acquisition of Gindy by Budd constitutes a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18).

INITIAL DECISION BY RAYMOND J. LYNCH, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

MARCH 8, 1974

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Federal Trade Commission, on June 18, 1971, issued its complaint in this proceeding alleging that The Budd Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as Budd, by its acquisition of the stock of the Gindy Manufacturing Corporation, hereinafter referred to as Gindy, violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §18).

For the purposes of the complaint, the Commission has chosen the following definitions:

(a) "Containers and chassis," as used here, refer to large, closed box-type structures which can be used for the intermodal transportation of goods, by rail, ship or motor carrier and chassis used to transport containers. The container is detachable from the chassis of a trailer or semi-trailer when so used. Sizes are now generally standardized to 8 feet wide, 8 feet high and either 20 feet or 40 feet long, although a few odd sizes are also made.

(b) "Van trailer," as used here, refers to a large box-type structure attached permanently to a chassis for use as a truck trailer or semi-trailer. Among the principal types are:

(1) Closed-top dry freight
(2) Open-top

In addition, the relevant product markets are:

(a) Van trailers
(b) Containers and chassis

The relevant product submarkets are:

(a) Closed-top dry freight van trailers
(b) Open-top van trailers

and the relevant geographic market involved in the complaint is the United States as a whole.

Further, Budd's acquisition of Gindy violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

Summary of Proceedings

On Oct. 22, 1968, Budd acquired all the then outstanding capital stock of Gindy Manufacturing Corporation, a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal office and place of business located in Downingtown, Pa.

Although an initial investigation was conducted by the Federal Trade Commission at the time of the acquisition, no action was taken at that time. Several years later, on June 18, 1971, the Federal Trade Commission issued a complaint charging that Budd's aforesaid acquisition of Gindy violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act. An answer and an amended answer were duly filed by the respondent, admitting in part and denying in part the various allegations of the complaint.

Prehearing conferences were held on several occasions between Dec. 15, 1971 and May 15, 1973. In addition, depositions of three foreign nationals were taken in England, France and Belgium during the month of April 1973. The course and conduct of the prehearing procedures were regulated by the administrative law judge through the issuance of a series of prehearing orders.

Presentation of the case-in-chief began in Wash., D.C., on July 30, 1973, hearings being held continuously through Aug. 16, 1973, on which date they were adjourned until Sept. 17, 1973, on which latter date, in that city, complaint counsel rested their case.

Respondent filed a motion to dismiss with a supporting memorandum of law. Complaint counsel filed a memorandum of law in opposition. The administrative law judge denied the motion on Sept. 17, 1973, to hear respondent's defense.

Respondent's defense was presented at hearings held in Washington, D.C., during the periods Sept. 17 through Oct. 3, 1973, Oct. 29, 1973 through Oct. 31, 1973, and on Nov. 15, 1973, on which latter date respondent rested its defense and complaint counsel presented rebuttal.

The record, which included a transcript of testimony of 2,273 pages, was closed on Nov. 26, 1973. Upon order of the administrative law judge, both counsel for the respondent and complaint counsel filed proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law on Dec. 26, 1973, and filed reply briefs on Jan. 11, 1974.

Any motions not heretofore or herein specifically ruled upon, either directly or by the necessary effect of the conclusions in this initial decision, are hereby denied.

This proceeding is before the administrative law judge upon the complaint, answer and amended answer, testimony and other evidence, proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law filed by counsel supporting the complaint and by counsel for respondent. The proposed findings of fact, conclusions and arguments of the parties have been carefully considered, and those findings not adopted either in the form proposed or in substance are rejected as not supported by the evidence or as involving immaterial issues not necessary for this decision.

References to the record are made in parentheses, and certain abbreviations, as hereinafter set forth, are used:

CX - Commission's Exhibits.
RX - Respondent's Exhibits.

The transcript of the testimony is referred to with either the last name of the witness and the page number or numbers upon which the testimony appears or with the abbreviation Tr. and the page.

Having heard and observed the witnesses and after having carefully reviewed the entire record in this proceeding, together with the proposed findings and conclusions submitted by the parties, the administrative law judge makes the following findings:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. Identity and Business of Respondent and Acquired Company

A. The Budd Company

1. Respondent Budd is now, and was at the time of the acquisition, a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal office and place of business located at 2450 Hunting Park Ave., Philadelphia, Pa. (complaint and answer, par. 2).

2. Since the acquisition, the executive offices of Budd have been removed from the aforesaid principal office in Pennsylvania to 2155 W. Big Beaver Road, Troy, Mich. (admitted by respondent).

3. In 1967, Budd had sales of $330.9 million, and assets of $264.5 million. In that year, it was the 250th largest industrial corporation in the nation in total sales. In 1968, its sales increased to $469.5 million and assets increased to $346.7 million making it the nation's 209th largest industrial corporation in total sales. By 1969, Budd had annual sales of $561.7 million and assets of $402 million, and in terms of sales had progressed to rank 191st among the nation's largest industrial corporations (complaint and answer, par. 3).

4. Budd is one of the largest independent automotive suppliers in the nation and the largest independent supplier of body components to the automotive industry. Budd manufactures automotive bodies, wheels, rims, hubs, drums, brakes and other automotive products. It also produces jigs, dies and fixtures used in the manufacture of automotive bodies and components, railroad cars, metal stampings and industrial plastic products. Approximately 85 percent of its sales are in the automotive field (complaint and answer, par. 4).

5. Prior to its acquisition of Gindy Manufacturing Corporation, Budd surveyed the transportation equipment field, including manufacturers of van trailers and containers and chassis, with a view to acquisition of such companies. As a major manufacturer of metal stampings and parts such as wheels, rims, hubs, and drums, Budd made many of the parts used in the manufacture of van trailers and container chassis. Furthermore, Budd has designed and produced components used in the manufacture of stainless steel dry freight van trailers and aluminum containers (complaint and answer, par. 5).

6. At all times relevant herein, Budd sold and shipped its products throughout the United States and was, and is now, engaged in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act (complaint and answer, par. 7).

B. Gindy Manufacturing Corporation

7. Prior to its acquisition by Budd on Oct. 22, 1968, Gindy was a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal office and place of business located in Downingtown, Pa. (complaint and answer, par. 8).

8. Gindy was engaged principally in the manufacture, sale and distribution of van trailers and containers and chassis. Its manufacturing and assembly facilities were located in Eagle, Lebanon and Honey Brook, Pa.; Pennsauken, N.J.; Collinsville, Va.; and St. Louis, Mo. (complaint and answer, par. 9).

9. For the fiscal year ending May 31, 1968, Gindy's sales were approximately $32.2 million, and its assets amounted to approximately $44 million (complaint and answer, par. 10).

10. In calendar year 1968, Gindy was a substantial manufacturer and seller of van trailers and containers and chassis. With sales of $32.2 million, it ranked fourth in the country in the sale of van trailers; with sales of $26.7 million, it ranked fourth in the country in the sale of closed-top dry freight van trailers; with sales of $3.1 million, second in the sale of open-top van trailers; and, with sales of $3.1 million, sixth in the sale of containers and chassis. In that year, Gindy accounted for 8.4 percent of van trailer shipments, 10.8 percent of closed-top dry freight van trailer shipments, 15.9 percent of open-top van trailer shipments, and 3.8 percent of container and chassis shipments. In calendar year 1969, Gindy's shipments of van trailers increased to $42.6 million, and its market share increased to 8.8 percent. In that same year, its shipments of closed-top dry freight van trailers increased to $40.3 million, making Gindy the third largest supplier with 12.9 percent of shipments. A significant increase in Gindy's position in the shipment of containers and chassis also occurred in 1969; its value of shipments increased to $9.0 million, making it the third largest supplier with 9.9 percent of that market (complaint and answer, par. 11).

11. At all times relevant herein, Gindy sold and shipped its products throughout the United States and engaged in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act (complaint and answer, par. 12).

II. The Acquisition

12. On or about Oct. 22, 1968, Budd acquired all of the then issued and outstanding capital stock of Gindy, aggregating 62,730 shares, for approximately 900,000 shares of Budd common stock. At the time of the acquisition, the Budd stock exchanged for Gindy was valued at approximately $29.7 million. Gindy has been operated as a Budd subsidiary since the acquisition (complaint and answer, par. 13; admission 19, 1/15/73).

III. Trade and Commerce

13. The relevant geographic market involved in this complaint is the United States as a whole. The relevant product markets are:

(a) Van trailers;
(b) containers and chassis.

The relevant product submarkets are:

(a) Closed-top dry freight van trailers;
(b) open-top van trailers (complaint and answer, par. 14).

14. The manufacture of van trailers and containers and chassis is a significant industry in the United States. During 1968, the approximate total value of shipments in the relevant markets and submarkets by domestic producers was as follows:

(a) Van trailers, $381.7 million;
(b) closed-top dry freight van trailers, $246.1 million;
(c) open-top van trailers, $19.8 million; and
(d) containers and chassis, $81.6 million (counsel supporting the complaint's confidential proposed finding 57).

During 1969, the approximate total value of shipments in the relevant markets and submarkets by domestic producers was as follows:

(a) Van trailers, $486.3 million;
(b) closed-top dry freight van trailers, $312.3 million;
(c) open-top van trailers, $16.3 million; and
(d) containers and chassis, $91.6 million (counsel supporting the complaint's confidential proposed finding 59).

15. The van trailer manufacturing industry is marked by a high degree of concentration. In 1968, the four largest companies accounted for approximately 59.0 percent and the eight largest companies for approximately 80.7 percent of total industry sales. The closed-top dry freight van trailer market is even more highly concentrated, with the top four firms accounting for 65.9 percent of 1968 shipments and the top eight firms accounting for 84.9 percent. Concentration in the open-top van trailer market is also high, with the top four firms accounting for 57.2 percent of 1968 shipments and the top eight firms accounting for 72.1 percent. Concentration in the sale of containers and chassis is extremely high; in 1968, four firms accounted for 89.9 percent of shipments and the top eight for virtually all of the shipments in this market (counsel supporting the complaint's confidential proposed finding 57).

16. By 1969, concentration in the shipment of van trailers and closed-top dry freight van trailers had increased. In that year, the top four firms accounted for 61.6 percent of van trailer shipments and the top eight firms for 80.8 percent. In 1969, the top four firms accounted for 72.2 percent of closed-top dry freight van trailer shipments and the top eight firms for 87.9 percent (counsel supporting the complaint's confidential proposed finding 59).

17. Of major importance to most purchasers of van trailers and containers and chassis, in many instances governing the purchaser's choice of supplier, are the terms relative to extent, duration, and rate of financing for proposed sales transactions. Access to significant financial resources which will permit a manufacturer to extend generous credit on easy repayment terms constitutes a decisive competitive advantage in the sale of van trailers and containers and chassis (complaint and answer, par. 18).

18. Entry into the manufacture and sale of van trailers and containers and chassis on a large scale is difficult. A successful manufacturer and supplier of van trailers and containers and chassis must possess manufacturing and marketing knowledge of transportation equipment, must have ample financial resources, and must possess the ability to accept, service and dispose of substantial numbers of used trade-in van trailers (complaint and answer, par. 19).

19. By 1972, Gindy's total sales of van trailers, containers and chassis had increased to $62 million (Hindin 1314).

20. Gindy enjoyed a good reputation, both among its competitors and its customers (CX 10; CX 11B, D; CX 63; CX 68B; CX 73A; CX 82; Ginsberg 260; Miller 376-77; Hammond 666).

21. Prior to its acquisition, Gindy was a very profitable company and never lost money in any single year (CX 42; CX 45; Ginsberg 274; Scott 1035, 1048-49, 1106). Indeed, Budd was interested in acquiring Gindy because of the latter's profitability (Scott 1035, 1048-49, 1059). Gindy's average rate of return on sales before taxes in the five years preceding its acquisition was over 10 percent (CX 45F; Scott 1106). In the year preceding its acquisition, Gindy's average rate of return on stockholders' equity, before taxes, was 27.1 percent (RX 395, in camera).

22. Prior to Oct. 22, 1968, Gindy had credit arrangements with several banks and an insurance company (Ginsberg 275; Morris 1227; Todd 1540-41). In 1968, these creditors indicated that Gindy's borrowing power would be continued at a level which would have enabled Gindy to maintain its then present market share in its various product markets (Todd 1547). However, because of the tight money situation then extent for all van trailer manufacturers, Gindy could not secure the financing to expand its position in its various markets as rapidly as it had been expanding (Ginsberg 274-76; Morris 1228-29, 1239-40; Todd 1543, 1547). At the time of the acquisition, Gindy had a four- to five-month backlog of orders (CX 46).

23. At all times relevant herein, Gindy sold and shipped some of its products throughout the United States and engaged in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act (complaint and answer, par. 12; Ginsberg 317, 346; Heinmiller 691).

IV. The Transaction

24. On Oct. 22, 1968, Budd acquired all of the then issued and outstanding capital stock of Gindy, aggregating 62,730 shares, in exchange for approximately 900,000 shares of Budd common stock and a contingent right to about 300,000 additional shares of common stock two years after said date (complaint and answer, par. 13). The Budd stock exchanged for the capital stock of Gindy on that date had a value of approximately $29.7 million (admission 19, 1/15/73). Gindy has been operated as a Budd subsidiary since the acquisition (complaint and answer, par. 13).

V. The Geographic Market

25. The relevant geographic market is the United States as a whole for van trailers, closed-top dry freight van trailers and open-top van trailers (complaint and answer, par. 14).

26. The leading van trailer manufacturers sold throughout the United States (CX 68C; Bernstein 1426-27; Crumrine 1725; Linnen 1767; Bachman 1912).

27. The relevant geographic market is the United States as a whole for containers and chassis (findings 28-32).

28. Current federal regulations prohibit subsidized American shipping line operators from purchasing cargo containers of foreign manufacture with capital reserve funds or with general funds if reimbursement to the general fund for such purposes will be sought from the capital reserve fund.[1]

29. The governments of Western Europe prohibit the use of American manufactured containers in point-to-point commerce within each country unless a duty has been paid (CX 149Z-41; CX 150Z-41). In fact, American manufactured containers do not meet the standards required by France (CX 149Z-12). The use within the United States of foreign built containers for which no duty has been paid is also severely restricted.[2]

30. When containers were first introduced, the United States was about the only place where they were available (Hindin 1336). Later, the foreign steamship lines bought them from manufacturers in their own countries (Hindin 1335-36).

31. Containers produced in the United States are delivered domestically, whereas containers produced outside the United States are delivered abroad (Heinmiller 720). American container producers manufacture and sell aluminum containers primarily (CX 150Z-14). European manufacturers of containers produce and sell steel containers primarily (Hindin 1335). This reflects the fact that shipping lines in the United States prefer and buy aluminum containers, while European shipping lines prefer and buy steel containers (CX 150Z-13; Hindin 1335).

32. Since the devaluation of the United States dollar, foreign container manufacturers have found it difficult to sell containers to domestic companies (Ginsberg 313).

VI. Lines of Commerce

A. Van Trailers

33. Van trailers are recognized as constituting a separate product market. The Bureau of the Census reports van trailer shipments separately (CX 39; CX 40; RX 48-50). The Truck Trailer Manufacturers Association (hereinafter "TTMA") assisted in establishing the classifications reported on by the Bureau of the Census (Calvin 914; Berard 1461, 1477). TTMA, manufacturers of trailers and the Bureau of the Census accept these categories, including van trailers, as appropriate categories (Calvin 915-16; Berard 1463).

34. There is a special section of TTMA to which manufacturers of van trailers belong and a different section to which manufacturers of tank trailers belong (Calvin 914-15).

35. Van trailers have distinct physical characteristics which determine their end use. A van trailer is enclosed on at least five sides and is permanently attached to wheel assemblies. As a result of its construction, a van trailer is utilized in hauling a wide variety of commodities over the road (finding 36).

36. Van trailers have uses distinct from other types of trailers (Bernstein 1453). Van trailers are utilized to carry a wide variety of cargo, whereas other types of trailers are utilized to carry specific types of cargo (Ginsberg 235-37). Platform trailers are used to transport certain types of commodities, including steel girders and heavy equipment, which are bulky and not affected by weather conditions (Ginsberg 239; Miller 359; Walters 483; Weaver 904; Persinger 938). Low bed heavy haulers are used to haul anything extremely heavy, primarily construction equipment (Ginsberg 239-40; Walters 484-85; Heinmiller 690; Bernstein 1454). Pole and logging trailers are used to carry logs, poles, and long steel bars (Ginsberg 239; Walters 484; Bernstein 1454-55). Tank and bulk commodity trailers are used to transport liquids, chemicals or gaseous commodities (CX 143; CX 144; Ginsberg 238; Walters 483; Hammond 658). Dump trailers are used to transport bulk items such as dirt or coal (Ginsberg 240; Walters 485).

37. Van trailers are produced on unique production lines which cannot be economically utilized to produce other types of trailers (Miller 367-68, 386-87; Bachman 572; Bertsch 640; Hammond 661; Heinmiller 696-97; Brown 885; Persinger 940-41; Crumrine 1719-21, 1723; Linnen 1791). All types of van trailers can be produced on the same assembly line (Miller 386-87; Hegner 468; Bertsch 640; Heinmiller 703; Tway 877; Hindin 1341-43; Linnen 1791; Bertolini 1833-34). Tank trailers or bulk commodity trailers cannot be built on the same assembly lines used to produce van trailers (Ginsberg 249-51; Miller 367, 388; Bertsch 643-45; Hammond 659, 661, 679; Bernstein 1447-50; Crumrine 1719-21, 1723). A major revamping of Gindy's plants would have been necessary before it could have produced tank trailers (Ginsberg 252; Walters 495). It is not practical or economical to manufacture flat beds, low beds or dump trailers on the same assembly lines used to produce van trailers (Ginsberg 252; Miller 367-68; Walters 496; Bertsch 643-45; Hammond 679; Heinmiller 697; Brown 885; Hindin 1341-43; Crumrine 1750-51).

38. Van trailers, in general, are sold to different customers than those who purchase other types of truck trailers (Hammond 658; Weaver 904; Paterson 1631). Common carriers are generally restricted by their Interstate Commerce Commission license to hauling general commodities; therefore, such carriers do not have specialized truck trailers such as tank trailers and low bed heavy haulers (Gross 1570; Burten 1577). Fruehauf's van trailer customers generally do not purchase tank trailers (Weaver 904). Strick's customers use only van trailers (Bachman 458-49, 574).

39. Some leasing companies purchase only van trailers while others purchase different types of truck trailers (Hindin 1381-82; Bernstein 1450-51; Paterson 1631). Such purchases are made after they have business from a customer (Weaver 904; Hindin 1382; Paterson 1631). Rental companies do not stock tank trailers (Weaver 909).

40. There are unique producers of van trailers (Ginsberg 231; Miller 356; Bachman 546). Few van trailer producers make tank trailers or low bed heavy haulers (Miller 356; Bachman 546; Hindin 1311-12, 1318). Conversely, Butler and Heil, leading producers of tank trailers, do not make van trailers (Paterson 1631-32).

41. Because of the uses for which they are intended, there is no substitution of van trailers for other types of trailers or containers, or vice versa, due to price changes of either (findings 36, 42; Bernstein 1453). Van trailers do not compete with tank trailers, dump trailers or platform trailers (Hammond 672; Hindin 1312; Bernstein 1453).

42. Van trailers are priced without regard for the pricing of other types of truck trailers (Bachman 552; Hammond 659; Brown 885; Bernstein 1455-56).

43. The van trailer market consists of several distinct submarkets, including closed-top dry freight van trailers and open-top van trailers (findings 44-52).

44. Each of these submarkets is recognized as being a distinct market by the industry. The industry trade association, TTMA, in cooperation with the Department of Commerce, established separate census reporting categories for closed-top dry freight van trailers and open-top van trailers (CX 39; CX 40; RX 48-51; Calvin 914; Berard 1461, 1477).

45. Each type of van trailer is designed to haul a specific type of cargo. Closed-top dry freight van trailers are designed to haul general, nonbulk commodities that do not require refrigeration or special loading (Ginsberg 232; Miller 358; Walters 481; Bachman 547; Hammond 658; Heinmiller 690; Burten 1595). Refrigerated or insulated van trailers are designed to haul commodities requiring constant or cool temperatures, although they may occasionally be used to haul general dry freight commodities on a backhaul basis when no freight requiring refrigeration or constant temperature is available (Ginsberg 233; Miller 358-59; Bachman 547; Hammond 658; Bernstein 1455; Gross 1566, 1568, 1573; Burten 1595). Drop frame van trailers are designed to haul furniture or high bulk, lightweight cargo (Ginsberg 236; Miller 359; Walters 482; Hammond 658; Heinmiller 690). Livestock van trailers are designed and used to haul livestock (Walters 483; Persinger 938). Open-top van trailers are designed to haul cargo that must be top loaded (Walters 481-82; Bachman 548; Hammond 658; Weaver 903; Gross 1567; Burten 1595). Open-top van trailers occasionally may be used on a backhaul basis to haul general freight if a canvas top is added; such use occurs when no top loaded freight is available (Weaver 903; Gross 1566-67). Open-top van trailers used with a canvas top experience some leakage problems that makes them inferior to a regular closed-top dry freight van trailer (Walters 481-82).

46. Only closed-top dry freight van trailers and refrigerated or insulated van trailers are designed for dock level loading by means of fork lift trucks (Miller 358-59; Hammond 665). Open-top van trailers generally are top loaded while drop frame van trailers are difficult to load from most docks and can, at most, be only partially loaded by means of a fork lift truck (Ginsberg 236-37; Miller 358-60; Hammond 665-66).

47. There are specialized customers for certain types of van trailers. Drop frame van trailers are commonly sold to different customers than those who purchase closed-top dry freight van trailers (Walters 380-81; Hammond 657; Weaver 902-03). Refrigerated van trailers are generally sold to different customers than those who purchase closed-top dry freight van trailers (Walters 534; Weaver 903). Livestock and grain trailers are sold to individuals, whereas other van trailers are sold to common carriers (Ginsberg 231-33; Persinger 938).

48. There are differences in the construction between closed-top dry freight van trailers and open-top van trailers (Brown 887). The top rail on the latter is much heavier than on the former (Hammond 665; Brown 895). Likewise, there are differences in the construction between closed-top dry freight van trailers and refrigerated van trailers. The body on the latter is sealed tighter than on the former and the latter has ventilators and insulation, whereas the former does not (Hammond 665).

49. Each type of van trailer is priced individually without regard to the prices for other types of van trailers (Ginsberg 244-46; Miller 361-62; Walters 487-88; Bachman 551-52; Brown 885; Bernstein 1455). Prices for other types of van trailers sold by competitors are not considered in submitting bids for closed-top dry freight van trailers (Walters 489; Hammond 659; Brown 885; Bernstein 1456).

50. Each type of van trailer has a distinct price (Ginsberg 240-42; Bachman 551; Hammond 659-60; Persinger 939; Gross 1569).

51. There are many producers of van trailers who specialize in a particular type of van trailer (Bachman 571; Persinger 937; Hindin 1318).

52. Budd recognized that closed-top dry freight van trailers constitute a separate product market, characterizing them as a "product line" in reports to its shareholders and listing their sales separately (CX 94K).

B. Containers and Chassis

53. Containers and chassis are reported to the Bureau of the Census under SIC 37150 53 "Detachable Trailer Bodies, Sold Separately" and SIC 37150 54 "Detachable Trailer Chassis, Sold Separately" (CX 39; CX 40; Berard 1461; Collier 1641, 1658). TTMA assisted in establishing these Census categories (Calvin 916-17; Berard 1461, 1477).

54. Containers have a use distinct from closed-top dry freight van trailers. As a result of their detachable characteristics, containers are most frequently used to transport commodities to and from seaports and over bodies of water (Ginsberg 234, 238; Brown 886) in contrast to closed-top dry freight van trailers, which are utilized almost exclusively for overland transportation (Brown 886).

55. Containers are constructed in a manner different from that utilized in van trailer production. Because containers are stacked on shipboard, the compressive loads required in the construction of shipping containers are completely different from those required in a van trailer (Brown 886-87; Bertolini 1832-33).

56. In contrast to van trailers, containers have to be tested with regard to their ability to sustain loads (Bertolini 1833). Such tests are performed by lifting the container from the four corners (Bertolini 1833). These tests must be certified by an independent agency whom the customer specifies (Bertolini 1833).

57. Containers are often constructed on different assembly lines than those used to build van trailers (Hindin 1318; Crumrine 1750-51; Bertolini 1833-34). It is difficult to construct a container on a van trailer assembly line, as additional fixtures are required (Hindin 1343-44).

58. Most containers and chassis are sold to different customers than purchase van trailers. The vast majority of containers and chassis are sold to ship lines (Ginsberg 234; Miller 357-58; Walters 481; Bachman 546-47; Brown 886). Van trailers generally are sold to common carriers or private truckers (Ginsberg 231-34; Miller 357; Walters 479-81; Bachman 546).

59. Containers are priced without regard to the price of van trailers (Walters 488; Bachman 550).

60. The average price of a container or a chassis is far lower than the average price of a van trailer. In 1968, the average price of a container was $2,500 and a chassis was about $2,200 (CX 39A-H; Ginsberg 242, container $2,500 to $2,800, chassis $2,500; Miller 360, container $2,850, chassis $2,700 to $2,800; Walters 487, container $3,200 to $3,400, chassis $1,400; Bachman 551, container $2,750, chassis $2,400 to $2,600).

VII. The Market

61. In 1968, there were 100 van trailer manufacturers, of whom 35-40 produced closed-top dry freight van trailers (Linnen 1799).

62. In 1968, the year of Gindy's acquisition by Budd, concentration in the relevant markets was high (see counsel supporting the complaint's confidential proposed finding 57).

63. Budd recognized that concentration was high, stating to its shareholders that 10 firms producing Gindy's type of products accounted for 90 percent of the sales of these products (CX 69E; CX 94M).

64. Concentration in these markets increased from 1968 to 1969 and then remained relatively constant through 1972 (see counsel supporting the complaint's confidential proposed finding 59).

65. Prices of van trailers fell from 1966 to 1968 and have generally increased since 1969 (Crumrine 1737). Prices of closed-top dry freight van trailers fell from 1966 to 1968, remained steady for one year and then steadily rose through 1972. The price trends of van trailers and closed-top dry freight van trailers are shown in the following charts:

66. The manufacture of van trailers, containers and chassis is very profitable. In the period 1962-1967, both Fruehauf Corporation and Gindy experienced an average rate of return on sales, before taxes, of approximately 10 percent (finding 21; CX 118E; CX 119E; CX 120E; CX 121E; CX 122E; CX 123E; Silverstein 1886-88). Profitability of van trailer, container and chassis manufacture, expressed as a rate of return on stockholders' equity, also is very high. In the year of acquisition, Gindy's rate of return on stockholders' equity, before taxes, of 27 percent was one of the highest in the industry (finding 21; RX 38F, Y, in camera; see also counsel supporting the complaint's confidential proposed findings 57, 59, 61).

VIII. Barriers to Entry

67. Entry into the manufacture and sale of van trailers and containers and chassis on a level such as that evidenced in this proceeding is difficult. One of the principal barriers to entry into the manufacture and sale of van trailers and containers and chassis is the need to finance sales (CX 10F; CX 46; CX 73B; CX 150Z-19; Ginsberg 257; Miller 371-73; Walters 502; Bachman 555, 558; Hammond 674; Blatt 757; RX 429J, T, Z-4, in camera). Financing may be more important than manufacturing (Feinberg 829). Smaller manufacturers of van trailers lose business because they do not have the ability to extend financing (Miller 372-73; Walters 502; Blatt 757; Feinberg 840; Tway 873-74).

68. The leading van trailer manufacturers in 1968 financed in excess of 40 percent of their total sales and extended 6-8 year terms with no down payment (Walters 502; Bachman 558). Small manufacturers generally did not have the ability to extend credit at all, or did so indirectly through banks (Miller 371; Hammond 662; Brown 886; Tway 873). In 1969, Theurer, Inc. was sold, among other reasons, in order to obtain a source of financing (Blatt 757). In 1968, those smaller van trailer manufacturers who could finance internally or through banks did not and could not offer credit terms as advantageous as those offered by the dominant firms (Ginsberg 257-58; Miller 371-73; Brown 886). Such smaller van trailer manufacturers lost business in 1968 due to their lack of ability to extend financing (finding 67).

69. Financing has played an increasingly important role in Gindy's sale of van trailers (Morris 1227). From 1965 through 1969, the number of van trailers Gindy sold with virtually no downpayment increased steadily from 46 percent to 64 percent, a fact which is dramatically reflected in the following table (CX 48B; CX 53B; Ward 1149):

GINDY MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Percentage of trailers sold with less than 10 percent down

1965	45.7%
1966	56.9%
1967	60.3%
1968	61.6%
1969	64.1%

Gindy also has extended its terms so that the percentage of trailers financed over 60 months has increased from 9 percent in 1965 to almost 44 percent in 1969 (CX 48B; CX 49B; CX 50B; CX 51B; CX 52B; CX 53B; Ward 1149).

70. The trend toward extended payment terms existed throughout the van trailer manufacturing industry during the period from 1965 to 1969 (Walters 501; Hammond 663; Todd 1543, 1548).

71. The substantial facilities and financial resources required to accept trade-ins and dispose of them is another principal barrier to entry into the manufacture and sale of van trailers (CX 11C). A small van trailer manufacturer does not have the funds or the outlets to accept used trailers (Tway 873). Unless the van trailer purchaser can turn in his used trailer, he does not purchase the new van trailer (Heinmiller 699-700).

72. It is difficult to enter into the sale of van trailers to large customers (answer, Par. 19). Since 1967, the size of customers buying van trailers has increased (Crumrine 1733, 1735; Linnen 1782). This increase in the size of customers for van trailers has increased the difficulty of entry into the manufacture and sale of van trailers.

73. There have been no entrants of any significance into the manufacture and sale of van trailers, containers and chassis for many years (Ginsberg 261, 334; Miller 377-78, 400; Bachman 563; Hammond 666-67; Heinmiller 700, 711-12). To the contrary, several manufacturers have left these markets (admission 24, 1/15/73; Miller 370, 378; Hegner 464; Walters 505; Bachman 563; Heinmiller 700-01; Paterson 1632; Linnen 1797; Bertolini 1828-29, 1855-56). Several manufacturers entered into the manufacture of containers or chassis in recent years and then have left within a short period of time. Several such new entrants went broke (Bertolini 1849-50, 1858-59). Grumman Aircraft entered into the manufacture of specialized van trailers, made no more than 200 and quit (CX 186; CX 187A-C; Ginsberg 323-24; Bertolini 1828-29, 1855-56).

IX. Budd Was The Most Likely Entrant

A. Budd's Desire to Enter

74. From 1934 to 1968, Budd was at the edge of the van trailer, container and chassis market (CX 73A). During the period 1934 to 1956, Budd manufactured the primary portion of a van trailer, stainless steel shells (Bachman 552; Brown 887-88; Necker 1415; Bernstein 1435). These shells were sold to Fruehauf who incorporated them in complete van trailers (Bachman 552; Brown 888; Scott 1028; Bernstein 1438). Budd's role as a supplier of this component was widely known among van trailer manufacturers (Ginsberg 271; Miller 382; Walters 505-06; Bachman 552-53; Hammond 662-63; Heinmiller 699; Brown 888; Hammond 1306; Bernstein 1438).

75. As early as 1956 or 1957, Budd desired to enter the van trailer market. When Budd's relationship with Fruehauf concerning the stainless steel trailer shells was about to be terminated, Budd approached Brown Trailer Company, a manufacturer of van trailers, with a view to acquiring it or selling stainless steel trailers to or through Brown Trailer Company (Brown 887-88, 1532-36).

76. Between September 1960 and September 1961, Budd built aluminum containers for sale to Union Carbide at its Red Lion plant (complaint and answer, par. 5; Scott 1083).

77. In the early 1960's, Budd built a prototype sky-lounge, made primarily of aluminum, at its Red Lion plant (CX 19; CX 20).

78. In late 1961, Mr. Scott, then executive vice president of Budd, presented a white paper to Budd's top management (Scott 1017). This paper recommended closing down Budd's Railway Division as it was a losing operation and broadening the base of the company to make it less vulnerable to the whims of Budd's principal customers, the Big Three auto makers, and especially Ford (CX 69B; Scott 1017-18). For example, in 1966, 70 percent of Budd's sales were to the four domestic automobile manufacturers, including 35 percent of sales to Ford Motor Company (CX 94J). Budd felt that it had become "semicaptive" to the Big Three auto makers and desired to extricate itself from this "very dangerous situation" (CX 69B; CX 94J; Scott 1018-19; Ward 1116-17).

79. At that time, Budd decided to broaden its base by going into a proprietary, industrial type product which it would manufacture (Scott 1019). Budd considered van trailers to be a proprietary product (Scott 1093).

80. By 1965, Budd had decided to continue in the railway car business despite the fact that its "passenger rail business was getting into some difficulty" (CX 94H-J; Scott 1021-22). Therefore, it decided to attempt to add some products that had some relationship to this business (CX 2B; Scott 1021-22).

81. During the period from 1963 to 1968, Budd contacted Utility Trailer Manufacturing Company (hereinafter "Utility") at least twice concerning the possibility of acquiring Utility (Heinmiller 694-95; Ward 1133). During this period of time, Utility was a small manufacturer of van trailers, containers and chassis (RX 412A-B, in camera; finding 62; Scott 1090).

82. In the spring of 1967, Mr. Dudley Ward, a vice president of Budd and its chief financial officer, demonstrated Budd's intent to enter the van trailer market by interviewing an owner of a trucking company (the primary customers of van trailer manufacturers) (CX 73A-B; Ward 1135). This owner was told of Budd's prior involvement in highway trailers and its interest in getting into van trailer manufacturing (Ward 1136-37). Mr. Ward then asked for "an appraisal of the manufacturers of trailers, their products and how they compare—from the point of view of the trucker * * *." (CX 73A-B; Ward 1136). The memorandum of this interview was given to Mr. Scott, then president of Budd (Ward 1135).

83. On May 6, 1967, a Budd official submitted to Budd's management a report on the competitive conditions and future growth prospects in truck trailer sales (CX 24).

84. On Aug. 9, 1967, the president of Budd, Mr. Scott, wrote his recommendations concerning the future expansion plans of Budd (CX 14; Scott 1037, 1043). The ideas contained in this memo reflected a plan that "had been evolving and had been the subject of discussion by Mr. Scott and myself [Ward] almost from the day I joined the Budd Company in 1964." (CX 69B; Ward 1160). These views were communicated both to the Budd management and to its board of directors (Scott 1037, 1043; Ward 1161-62). The purpose of these recommendations was to focus the attention of Budd's staff on plans to enter areas which were related to Budd's current activities and which Budd could understand and have the ability to manage (CX 2B; Scott 1038). The list was titled "The Transportation Equipment Concept" and referred solely to various items used to transport goods or people (CX 9B; CX 14A-B; CX 67; CX 69B; Scott 1043, 1074-75). "In the list I [Scott] listed highway trailers as one possibility." (CX 14A-B; Scott 1038, 1042-43; Cf. Ward 1160-61). Another item included on the list was containers (CX 14A-B; Scott 1044-45; Ward 1160-61).

85. In 1967, Budd believed it possessed a managerial staff attuned to manufacture trailers:

> JUDGE LYNCH: Was it your view that The Budd Company's managerial staff was attuned to manufacture trailers?
> THE WITNESS: I think in terms of being able to learn and understand the trailer business, yes. This is something they could have some understanding about. That does not mean you can go out and run a plant immediately and make trailers as such. But if it involved the formation and welding of metal, this is something that Budd Company management and talents knew something about and could learn more about if they had to. (Scott 1039).

86. Budd had no interest in entering any area outside of hard goods manufacturing because it didn't believe its management understood these other areas (Scott 1038-39). It believed that van trailers had "a definite and planned 'fit' into the Budd picture." (CX 99C; CX 101C). Indeed, Budd's interests with regard to possible areas of expansion lay entirely within transportation equipment, exclusive of power equipment (locomotives or trucks), ships, aircraft and aircraft parts (CX 9B; CX 12, CX 13A; CX 14A-B; CX 67; CX 99A-B; CX 100B; CX 101B-D; Scott 1074-80).

87. Budd's interest in acquiring firms in the transportation equipment field and specifically van trailer manufacturers, was conveyed to several merger brokers utilized by Budd and to Budd's investment bankers (Blatt 749; Scott 1089; Ward 1162-63; Githens 1243, 1246, 1255).

88. The intentions of Mr. Scott regarding Budd's expansion plans as expressed in CX 14 became public knowledge as they were featured in an article appearing in the New York Times and in a President's Report to Shareholders sent to Budd's stockholders (CX 9B; CX 22).

89. Budd's intent to enter the van trailer business was clear in 1967-1968. Budd's president indicated, during Budd's acquisition negotiations with Gindy, that Budd would enter the van trailer manufacturing business whether Budd acquired Gindy or not (Ginsberg 267, 272-73; Scott 1057-58). "He [Scott] said he was going to go into the business regardless of whether I sold to him or not." (Ginsberg 267).

90. The acquisition of a trailer manufacturer made an "extremely attractive fit" for Budd (CX 99C; CX 101C; Ward 1121). Budd's chief financial officer described the nature of this fit as follows:

> * * * One of the things that was different about Gindy, which appealed to me, was the fact it was not subject to the same automotive styling cycle that we had been confronted with before and yet the business of manufacturing and marketing of trailers did not seem to me to be so vastly different from the business that we were currently engaged in as to present a serious management problem. (Ward 1121.)

91. Budd considered a profit rate of the level experienced by Gindy to be "interesting" (Scott 1035). Gindy's profit level, expressed as a return on the sales dollar, was "a great deal better than Budd's was." (CX 45F; Scott 1082.)

92. Budd's intention of entering the van trailer market even without the acquisition of Gindy is made clear by its actions in early 1968, during a recess in the Gindy acquisition negotiations. At that time, Budd contacted several smaller van trailer manufacturers regarding their possible acquisition by Budd (CX 23; Ginsberg 272; Miller 379; Scott 1052; Ward 1128, 1130). In April 1968, Budd contacted The Dorsey Corporation concerning the possibility of acquiring one of its divisions, Dorsey Trailers, a manufacturer of van trailers (CX 147A-

B; Scott 1052-53, 1090-91; Ward 1133; Collier 1662). Late in 1967 or early in 1968, a third-party consultant, acting on behalf of Budd, contacted Theurer, Incorporated (hereinafter "Theurer"), a small manufacturer of van trailers, containers and chassis, concerning the possibility of Budd's acquiring Theurer (admission 15, 1/15/73; Blatt 748-49; Scott 1087). The president of Budd and its chief financial officer discussed the possibility of acquiring Miller Trailers, Inc. (hereinafter "Miller"), a manufacturer of van trailers, with the president of Miller in the spring of 1968 (Miller 379-80; Scott 1052; Ward 1130). A consultant working for Budd, discussed acquiring Great Dane Trailers, Inc. (hereinafter "Great Dane"), a manufacturer of van trailers (Scott 1087, 1091). During 1968 or 1969, Budd again contacted Utility regarding the possible acquisition of that company (Heinmiller 696).

93. In 1967-1968, Budd not only considered toehold acquisitions of van trailer manufacturers prior to acquiring Gindy, but also considered de novo entry into van trailer manufacturing. Budd recognized it could go into van trailer manufacture, but decided not to go into it because:

> One is you had the problem of cash * * *. And the second problem is that timewise, to try and do that and have an influence on the company, you are looking at seven, eight years down the road, that sort of thing, and we wanted something that was much more imminent than that. (Scott 1060.)

In explaining to its shareholders what it received by acquiring Gindy, Budd related that it acquired "a leading manufacturer of truck trailers and cargo containers. We wanted to expand into this field, but the cost to build that kind of business from scratch would have been excessive." (CX 100C.)

94. In 1968, prior and subsequent to the acquisition of Gindy, Budd demonstrated its continued interest in the van trailer manufacturing industry by working with a major trucking firm to develop a double-deck system for closed-top dry freight vans and subsequently obtaining a license for the purpose of manufacturing and selling this system to van trailer manufacturers (CX 21A-B; Bruce 612-13, 616, 630).

95. Budd possessed an interest in significantly expanding its position in the van trailer market subsequent to any acquisition (Scott 1050, 1059; Ward 1130-31; Hindin 1313-14). This interest was shown not only by testimony of several top Budd officers, but also Budd's continued attempts to purchase van trailer manufacturers other than Gindy and its plan to expand the plants of Gindy (findings 96-99). In describing Budd's plans for Gindy, Mr. Scott stated:

> * * * that this might well form the nucleus for the development of a major part of the industry. * * * We thought this would be the possibility of using them as the base for developing a truly nationwide competitor to the giants, Fruehauf and Trailmobile. * * * we could take that and build that into a national company of some substance. (Scott 1050)

96. Also, subsequent to the acquisition of Gindy, Mr. Cerra was sent by Budd to examine the facilities of Highway Industries, Inc. (hereinafter "Highway"), a van trailer and container manufacturer, with a view to the possible acquisition of these facilities (Ginsberg 273; Cerra 422, 451; Scott 1056-57; Bertolini 1829).

97. In 1969, the president of Budd asked the general manager of the Automotive Division to contact Utility with regard to the possible acquisition of this van trailer manufacturer (finding 81; Heinmiller 696; Scott 1056, 1090).

98. Subsequent to the acquisition of Gindy, Mr. Scott made at least two trips to Timpte, Inc., a small producer of van trailers (Ginsberg 273-74; Scott 1055-56, 1091). On these occasions, he viewed Timpte, Inc.'s facilities and discussed the possible acquisition of Timpte, Inc. with Mr. Robert Ruland, the chief executive officer of Timpte, Inc. (Ginsberg 273).

99. Since its acquisition, Budd has undertaken many steps to increase Gindy's production and sales, including the rebuilding of one plant and the proposed building of another plant to make van trailers (findings 155-177).

100. Budd has been at the market's edge since 1957, ready and able to enter, until it finally entered through its 1968 acquisition of one of the leaders, Gindy (findings 74-94).

B. Availability of a Toehold Firm

101. On or about the time Budd acquired Gindy, there were a number of smaller manufacturers of van trailers, containers and chassis who were available for acquisition by Budd (findings 102-107).

102. Miller, a small manufacturer of van trailers, considered an offer from Budd immediately prior to the Gindy acquisition (Miller 379-80; Scott 1052). In November 1968, Miller agreed to merge with GAC Corporation. This agreement became final in February 1969 (Miller 370). The principal owners of Miller decided to sell the company in 1968 to solve their estate problems (Miller 393).

103. Great Dane, a small manufacturer of van trailers, was acquired by United States Freight Company in 1967 (Hammond 662; Scott 1087). A third party acting on behalf of Budd approached Great Dane regarding its possible acquisition (finding 92).

104. The president of Kentucky Manufacturing, Inc., a small producer of van trailers, testified that he would have considered a cash offer for his business (Tway 879-80).

105. Highway, a producer of van trailers, containers and chassis, in 1968 was owned by GAC which was willing to sell it or its assets (Scott 1091). In 1968, Budd knew that Highway was "getting into trouble" (Scott 1091). By July 1970, Highway was being prepared for liquidation, which occurred in 1971 (Hegner 463-64).

106. Trailco, a small van trailer manufacturer, was offered for sale to Budd by a broker (Scott 1087; Burten 1597). Subsequently, in 1971 Dorsey acquired Trailco (Collier 1656).

107. In 1969, V&W Trailer Co. (hereinafter "V&W") contacted Budd with regard to its possible acquisition by Budd (Scott 1090). Subsequently, V&W ceased van trailer manufacture and became a Gindy distributor (CX 58; CX 145; Miller 379; Hammond 667).

C. On Objective Criteria, Budd Was One of the Few Most Likely Entrants

108. Budd had an engineering and railroad car manufacturing business, which would have provided a solid basis from which Budd could have developed its own van trailer, container and chassis products (CX 37B; Ginsberg 322-23; Cerra 416-17).

109. The producers of railroad cars are among the most likely entrants into the manufacture of van trailers, containers and chassis. Several foreign producers of railroad cars have entered into the manufacture of van trailers or containers and chassis, including Cravens Homalloy (Sheffield) Limited (hereinafter "Cravens"),[3] a corporation located in the United Kingdom; Societe Nouvelle Des Ateliers De Venissieux (hereinafter "SNAV"),[4] a French corporation located in Venissieux, France; and LaBrugeoise et Nivelles (hereinafter "B/N"), a Belgium railroad car manufacturer with its headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, and a former Budd licensee for railroad cars (CX 149B; CX 150B-C, Z-43; CX 151B). Pullman considered using its railroad car facilities to build van trailers, but, after a cost study, decided not to do so at that time (Crumrine 1745-46).

110. Prior to producing van trailers or containers and chassis, Cravens was primarily a manufacturer of railroad passenger cars; it also produced multiple diesel carriages, electric carriages, freight wagons, small railroad freight containers and pressed steel bodies to be mounted on a 2-ton chassis (CX 151D-E). SNAV manufactured railroad freight cars, steam shovels, small mining cars, and as a sideline, was a welding subcontractor for other manufacturers (CX 149D). B/N was a manufacturer of railroad rolling stock, including railroad passenger cars (CX 150E, L).

111. Cravens and SNAV, prior to starting to produce van trailers or chassis, entered into the manufacture of containers (CX 149J; CX 151F). Within two years of its entry into container manufacture, Cravens began the manufacture of van trailers (CX 151C, D, G). SNAV

[3] "Cravens" refers to Cravens Homalloy (Sheffield) Limited, incorporated in 1967, and its predecessor, Cravens, Limited (CX 151D).

[4] Although SNAV did not make railroad passenger cars as Budd does, the manufacture of both involves similar techniques, the only differences being the design of the railroad passenger car which must have toilets, electrical and lighting fittings, air conditioning, heating devices and the like (CX 149Z-28).

began the manufacture of container chassis one year after it began the manufacture of containers (CX 149H-K). B/N first began the manufacture of van trailers in 1963-64, then added containers in 1966 and container chassis in 1967 (CX 150H-J).

112. There are similarities in the manufacture of railway cars and van trailers, containers and chassis which make railroad car manufacturers likely entrants into the production of containers, chassis and van trailers. The development of container manufacturing at SNAV:

> * * * is the result of an internal expansion of activity previously existing in our Company.
> In fact, our Firm has been manufacturing railway wagons since its origin. It is because of a similar technology together with the ability to mass produce metal products that we were directed to containers and later on, in 1968, to chassis for the transport of containers.
> Knowledge and technical experience we gained in mass-producing wagons, have been very useful for us, especially for working out our container and chassis manufacture; mainly with regard to steel containers, which are now forming the whole of our production, the experience of techniques and processes for assembling, welding and handling, which we obtained through wagons has been determinative in the choice of launching container and chassis manufacture. (CX 149Z-44.)

113. Although their former products were composed primarily of steel and wood, the containers initially built by Cravens, SNAV, and B/N and all of their van trailers were of aluminum construction (CX 149G, M; CX 150H-J, L-M; CX 151E). The chassis produced by SNAV and B/N were of steel construction (CX 149M; CX 150M).

114. Budd possessed the ability to fabricate aluminum, the principal material used in van trailer production (CX 16; CX 19; CX 20).

115. A plant used to produce railroad cars can be used to make van trailers, containers and chassis (findings 116-117). Budd knew this because of its experience with its manufacturing arrangements with Fruehauf.

116. Cravens, SNAV and B/N each initially used the same factory which formerly produced railroad cars to make van trailers or containers and chassis (CX 149P; CX 150G, O-Q, Z-1; CX 151V).

117. Budd's Red Lion plant, at which it produced railroad cars in 1968, could have been used to produce van trailers, containers and chassis (Ginsberg 255-56, 323; Cerra 417, 458-59). Budd recognized this possibility when it stated in its first supplement to statement of respondent's position:

> In 1968 respondent's rail car production facilities (the only ones which might be considered siutable [sic] for trailer, container or chassis production) were fully-utilized * * *. (p. 7)[5]

This plant was used to build aluminum containers in 1961 (Walters 506; Scott 1083).

[5] It should be noted here that Budd did not have to acquire Gindy.

118. A corporation that makes railroad cars has the machinery to go into the manufacture of van trailers (Ginsberg 253, 255). The manufacturing operations—assembling, metal forming, welding, riveting, piercing—are basically similar (Cerra 413; Brown 895).

119. The capital equipment needed to produce railroad cars, automotive components, van trailers, containers and chassis—presses, cutting machines, shears, oxygen torches, welding equipment—are basically similar (CX 149V; Ginsberg 253-55; Cerra 413-14).

120. In 1968, the equipment in Budd's Gary plant could be used to manufacture van trailers, containers and chassis (Cerra 417, 446-47). At that time, the Gary plant produced automobile deck lids, deck assemblies, door assemblies, fender assemblies and similar products (Cerra 445). Budd's Red Lion plant also had equipment which could have been used, with rearrangement, to produce van trailers (Ginsberg 255-56; Cerra 417, 458-59). The Red Lion plant manufactured railroad cars and automotive frames in 1968 (Cerra 418).

121. Budd officials indicated, during the merger negotiations with Gindy that Budd was well qualified to make cross members or side rails (Walters 507; Scott 1062). Since the merger, Budd Gindy has been making parts which formerly Gindy had purchased (CX 146L). Among these parts are fifth wheels, landing gear parts and castings (Ginsberg 280-81; Hindin 1389).

122. Budd is a supplier of components such as wheels, hubs and drums used in the manufacture of trailers and chassis (admissions 10, 12 and 13, 1/15/73). It is one of the few suppliers of wheels and is the largest supplier of disc-type wheels, which are used almost exclusively west of the Mississippi River and are being used increasingly east of the Mississippi River (Ginsberg 248, 317, 321; Walters 489; Bachman 560-61; Hammond 682; Heinmiller 692, 706; Scott 1063-64; Paterson 1634; Collier 1659-60; Linnen 1776). As a manufacturer of these components, Budd has been and is a member of TTMA (RX 383; Ginsberg 262, 336; Miller 381-82; Calvin 913-14).

123. Budd contemplated, in a premerger analysis, that it "could capture some wheel sales that we do not have at the present time," by virtue of entering into the manufacture of van trailers and chassis (CX 10C-D).

124. The production of van trailers, containers and chassis requires knowledge and application of assembly line and mass production techniques (Cerra 414-15; Bertsch 641-42; Crumrine 1740-41). Budd was knowledgeable in the application of assembly line and mass production techniques because of its experience in the production of automotive stampings, railway passenger cars, disc brakes and disc wheels (CX 4B; CX 5B-G; CX 28; Cerra 416-18).

125. When Budd's corporate manager of facilities became a vice president of Gindy, he applied mass production techniques to Gindy and succeeded in improving the productive capability of Gindy's plants (CX 99B; finding 164; Cerra 419-20).

126. For many years prior to the acquisition of Gindy, Budd possessed technical and supervisory personnel familiar with the design and production of van trailers, containers and chassis (findings 126-128).

127. Between 1934 and 1958, Budd designed and produced stainless steel shells for closed-top dry freight van trailers (Necker 1415). Between September 1960 and September 1961, Budd personnel designed and manufactured aluminum box-type containers (complaint and answer, par. 5). During the Gindy acquisition negotiations, Budd mentioned its familiarity with containers, due to this previous experience in their production (Walters 506).

128. In 1968, Budd possessed the engineering personnel necessary to produce van trailers, containers and chassis (CX 37B; Cerra 415, 424). In a Budd memorandum dated Aug. 9, 1967, highway trailers and containers were included among transportation equipment products not then produced by Budd, but covered by Budd skills in engineering and manufacturing (CX 14).

129. At that time, Budd had not only the ability to design and construct the plant used for the manufacture of van trailers, containers and chassis, but also the ability to produce the necessary tools and lay out the machinery and assembly lines necessary to manufacture these products (CX 86; Cerra 416-17; Scott 1066). Subsequent to the acquisition of Gindy, Budd advertised that its new subsidiary, Gindy, could call on Budd's engineering skills (CX 37). Indeed, subsequent to the acquisition, Gindy did call on Budd's engineering skills. Several Budd engineers were brought over to Gindy from Budd (Walters 512). Budd's corporate manager of facilities was transferred to Gindy after the merger and became Gindy's vice president of operations (Walters 510). At Gindy, he set up new assembly lines and built a new facility for producing refrigerated van trailers (CX 86; Cerra 422-23; Scott 1066, 1097-98).

130. Subsequent to the acquisition of Gindy, Budd assumed full control of the operations of the company (Ginsberg 270). Budd promised the former owner and his son that they would run Gindy (Ginsberg 269). However, David Ginsberg, the former owner, became merely the honorary chairman of the Gindy board and his son Milton left shortly after the acquisition as "He [Milton] felt that they [Budd] were giving orders instead of taking advice." (Ginsberg 228, 270).

131. Budd possessed a name familiar to purchasers of van trailers and containers (findings 132-136).

132. Budd advertised in trade publications designed to reach motor carriers and other users of van trailers and containers (CX 35).

133. Prior to the acquisition, Budd and its distributors sold wheels directly to motor carriers and leasing companies, the major purchasers of van trailers (CX 10C; Ginsberg 232-33; Walters 489-90; Heinmiller 693; Scott 1064; Brown 1503-04; Paterson 1623).

134. Motor carriers and leasing companies often specified Budd wheels on the van trailers which they purchased (Ginsberg 248, 316; Miller 365; Bachman 553, 560, 586; Hammond 661; Heinmiller 706; Scott 1096-97; Brown 1504; Paterson 1623, 1634). Indeed, the name "Budd wheel" was almost a generic description of one of the two types of wheels used on van trailers (CX 33; Ginsberg 249; Bachman 553; Hammond 680; Heinmiller 693, 706).

135. Budd recognized that it possessed a favorable reputation among purchasers of van trailers (CX 101F). During acquisition negotiations with Gindy, Budd officials indicated that Budd's contacts with motor carriers and railroads that owned van trailers could help Gindy (CX 10G; Walters 508-09; Ward 1123).

136. Railroads purchase substantial numbers of van trailers (CX 44F; Miller 357; Bachman 546; Hammond 657, 680, Tway 873; Weaver 908). Budd has long been a leading supplier of passenger cars to railroads (CX 18B-C; CX 34; CX 76B; CX 94D).

137. Budd possessed the requisite financial ability to enter into the manufacture and sale of van trailers and containers and chassis, either de novo or through the acquisition and expansion of a toehold firm, and to become a substantial competitive factor in the sale of these products (complaint and answer, par. 6; CX 37B; Githens 1259; findings 138-143).

138. Budd is one of the largest companies in the Nation, ranking 191st in sales on the Fortune 500 list for 1969. Its securities are publicly traded on the New York Stock Exchange (CX 92; CX 94; CX 95; CX 96; Ward 1126).

139. One means by which Budd could obtain funds was the issuance of additional common stock. In 1968, 1969, and 1970, Budd issued additional common stock for the purpose of making acquisitions (CX 92; CX 95; CX 96) and common share purchase warrants issued in connection with loan transactions (CX 94A; CX 97). Budd's chief financial officer characterized Budd's ability to raise funds through the issuance of stock in 1968 as follows:

> * * * our stock was a well accepted medium at that particular point in time. We were a New York Stock Exchange, a listed company, and our results were considered by the financial community, to be on the upswing, and the price of stock was attractive and that made acquisition possibilities for stock that much more attractive. (Ward 1126.)

140. Another means by which Budd could and did raise substantial sums of money was through borrowings and public debt offerings. In 1969, Budd raised $30 million by a public funding (CX 94A; CX 98; Githens 1258). Of this sum, $8 million was immediately channeled directly to Gindy "to finance its increased installment receivables arising from the expansion of its business" (CX 94D; CX 98B; Githens 1252, 1258). In 1970-1971, Budd borrowed $30 million from several life insurance companies (CX 97A; Githens 1258).

141. Since the merger, Budd has provided substantial sums of money to Gindy directly and indirectly. Budd spent about $1.5 million to renovate Gindy's Eagle plant in order to achieve a higher degree of automation (CX 86; CX 94K-L; Walters 512). Budd will also spend $4 million to build a new plant for its Gindy Division in Martinsville, Va. (Ginsberg 279). The Budd Financial Corporation was established in 1970 as a wholly-owned subsidiary of The Budd Company primarily to service the installment financing originated by Gindy (CX 99B-C; admission 26, 1/15/73; Ginsberg 277). By the end of 1970, Budd had confirmed open lines of credit with banks of about $113 million, of which about $34 million was earmarked for Budd Financial Corporation (CX 101F).

142. Budd's financial ability has strengthened Gindy and could have strengthened a toehold firm (Miller 370-71). Budd had more leverage than Gindy in the money market (Ginsberg 277). Budd's financial ability has enabled Gindy to finance van trailer sales which it otherwise would have lost. Likewise, Budd's financing has increased Gindy's ability to accept, service and dispose of used trailers traded in on the purchase of new trailers (CX 65; CX 146L; Feinberg 834; 837). Finally, Budd's financial backing of Gindy has enabled Gindy to finance the sale of containers, something Gindy could not do previously, as a creditor cannot really secure his interest in the collateral and only Budd could risk the potential disastrous losses of a default (Walters 514-15). Since the acquisition, Gindy's expenditures on advertising have been considerably higher than previously (CX 57).

143. Budd's financial ability has helped Gindy and could have helped a toehold firm establish wholly-owned distribution branches (finding 173). Gindy had three wholly-owned distribution branches prior to the merger (finding 172). By 1973, Gindy had opened six additional branches which repair and sell new and used van trailers (finding 173).

144. In 1968, Budd had research and development capabilities in all kinds of metals, including aluminum (CX 19; CX 20; CX 26B-F; CX 37B; Scott 1039-40). It had developed the Plane-Mate, an aluminum vehicle used as a traveling lounge at airports (CX 80; CX 132; Scott 1048).

145. Budd operated a van trailer testing facility in 1968 (CX 94M; Miller 364; Cerra 420; Walters 490; Bachman 554; Bruce 612; Hammond 1306). This facility could perform almost any kind of test upon a van trailer (Cerra 420-21; Walters 490-91). Budd tested trailer kingpins, frames and beef plates and the heat transfer properties of refrigerated van trailers (CX 94M; Walters 490-91; Bachman 554; Bruce 611-12, 617-19; Hammond 1306).

146. The manager of Budd's testing facility was personally involved in designing and setting up all of the tests, evaluating the results, and writing the reports (Bruce 620). As a result, Budd could have learned about the insulating or heating qualities of van trailers, the strength of materials in the van trailer frame, and the mechanical properties of a van trailer (CX 21A-B; Cerra 421). This knowledge could be very helpful to a van trailer manufacturer (CX 21A-B; Bachman 554-55; Bruce 619-20).

147. At the time of the Gindy acquisition, Budd was the most likely entrant into the manufacture and sale of van trailers, including closed-top dry freight and open-top van trailers, containers and chassis. At that time, no other firm indicated both a strong desire to enter and possessed the several advantages described above which would have aided Budd either as a de novo entrant or in the expansion of a toehold firm in these markets (Scott 1092).

148. Only a few firms expressed an interest in entering (Ginsberg 302, 306, 308; Scott 1091). Of these, only Walter Kidde expressed an interest in acquiring a firm smaller than Gindy (Blatt 750, 755-56). Likewise, only Walter Kidde expressed an interest in more than one van trailer manufacturer (Ginsberg 308). Neither of these firms, nor any other firm, was shown to have possessed any of the factors which made Budd a likely de novo entrant or gave it the ability to expand a toehold producer. Budd's president knew of no firm other than Budd who was seeking a van trailer manufacturer in 1967 or 1968 (Scott 1092). Furthermore, the several firms suggested by respondent's counsel as purported possible entrants had no interest whatsoever in entry (CX 176; CX 179-191; Morris 1237-38).

149. No firm other than Budd possessed the number of advantages possessed by Budd which made Budd a likely de novo entrant or gave it the ability to expand a toehold producer.

150. Truck tractor manufacturers are not as likely entrants into van trailer manufacturing as was Budd. No manufacturer of truck tractors currently makes van trailers (Brown 1512-13; Crumrine 1742; Linnen 1795, 1801). No truck tractor manufacturer, except Mack Truck which has not pursued its expression of interest, has indicated any interest in entering the manufacture of van trailers (CX 181; CX 182A-D; CX 189; Scott 1092; Morris 1237-38; Crumrine 1742).

D. Gindy Is Not a Toehold

151. Budd did not view Gindy as a toehold at the time of its acquisition (CX 11A). In its notice to its shareholders concerning this acquisition, Budd characterized Gindy as "a leading manufacturer of truck trailers and cargo containers * * *." (CX 100C). Similar language was used subsequent to the acquisition to describe the role of Gindy in the van trailer market (CX 59; CX 101B; CX 175).

152. The president of Budd testified that Gindy was a substantial factor in the van trailer market at the time of its acquisition (Scott 1035).

153. Prior to the merger, Gindy was acknowledged to be a major and leading competitor in the industry (CX 41A; CX 59; CX 69E; CX 100C; Bachman 549; Hammond 659; Feinberg 826). Two competitors characterized Gindy as one of "The Big Ones" (Tway 878; Collier 1658). Gindy was viewed as a tough competitor by other van trailer producers (CX 11A; Miller 376-77; Hammond 666; Heinmiller 700; Weaver 904-05; Bernstein 1427; Collier 1658; Crumrine 1731; Linnen 1775). Gindy's customers viewed it as a major competitive factor (CX 73A-B; Feinberg 840; Crumrine 1730).

154. In 1968, Gindy was the fourth largest supplier of closed-top dry freight vans, accounting for 11 percent of shipments (finding 10). In 1969, Gindy was the third largest supplier of closed-top dry freight vans, accounting for 13 percent of such shipments (finding 10).

E. Budd Entrenched Gindy

155. A finance company helps a van trailer manufacturer obtain additional funds which can be used to finance van trailer sales (Miller 370-71 Bachman 558; Hammond 662; Scott 1095; Ward 1143; Bernstein 1425; Todd 1546). The lack of such a finance company was "extremely limiting" on the ability of a van trailer manufacturer to handle a large volume of installment notes (Ward 1134). The ability of a van trailer manufacturer to extend financing to its customers in 1968 was "vitally important" to that manufacturer (finding 67; Miller 372, 396).

156. By use of a finance company, a van trailer manufacturer can obtain funds for financing of his sales at a lower interest rate (Ginsberg 277; Todd 1546).

157. The three largest manufacturers of van trailers in 1968 had finance companies, whereas the smaller van trailer manufacturers did not (CX 124K; Miller 371; Bachman 558, 594; Hammond 662; Feinberg 840; Tway 872; Brown 886, 1497, 1524; Scott 1095, 1101; Ward 1144; Bernstein 1432-33; Crumrine 1730; Linnen 1769). Indeed, the smallest manufacturers did not even finance any of their sales (Feinberg 840; Tway 872).

158. Prior to its acquisition by Budd, Gindy, unlike the smaller van trailer manufacturers, provided extensive financing of its sales (CX 48A-B; CX 49A-B; CX 50A-B; CX 51A-B; CX 52A-B; CX 53A-B). Gindy financed its installment paper on van trailer sales by means of bank loans and long-term borrowing from insurance companies (Ginsberg 375-76, 338-39; Ward 1139-40; Morris 1228; Hindin 1322; Todd 1540-41).

159. Subsequent to acquisition, Budd's investment bankers recommended that a finance company be established for Gindy (Morris 1233; Todd 1545-46).

160. Budd Financial Corporation (hereinafter "Budd Finance") was established in 1970 to help finance the van trailers sold by Gindy (CX 99B-C; CX 146Z-6; Ginsberg 277; Scott 1066; Ward 1143-44; Hindin 1323; Todd 1545).

161. Budd contributed $8 million in funds to establish Budd Finance (CX 94D; Ward 1144: Morris 1234; Githens 1252-53, 1258; Todd 1548).

162. In 1970, Budd loaned Budd Finance an additional $4 million (CX 97B; Ward 1144; Githens 1252-53, 1258).

163. By virtue of the additional equity contributed to Budd Finance, Gindy's capacity to finance van trailer sales increased (Ward 1141-43, 1153; Morris 1235; Hindin 1322-23, 1380-81). At the time of acquisition, the total amount of funds Gindy could borrow to finance its van trailer sales was $16 million (Ward 1141). In May 1969, Budd was able to increase the amount of funds available to Gindy for financing van trailer sales from $16 million to $35 million (Ward 1141-42). Subsequent to the establishment of Budd Finance, the amount of funds available to Gindy for financing van trailer sales was further increased to $48 million (Ward 1144).

164. Budd enlarged and redesigned Gindy's Eagle plant at a cost to Budd of $1 3/4 million (CX 86; CX 94K-L; CX 99B; Walters 512; Scott 1066; Hindin 1327, 1388). This expansion resulted in a 40 percent capacity increase at the Eagle plant (CX 99B). It also erected an addition to the Lebanon plant at a cost to Budd of $500,000 (CX 146L; Hindin 1327, 1388). Such alterations made Gindy by 1971 a more efficient van trailer producer than it was at the time of its acquisition of Budd (Scott 1108).

165. It is an advantage for a van trailer manufacturer to have plants located in major market areas throughout the country (Miller 370-71; Bernstein 1425, 1431; Crumrine 1722-23; Linnen 1774). However, only Fruehauf comes close to having a van trailer manufacturing plant located in each major market area (Bernstein 1427; 1447-50).

Trailmobile and Brown operate three van trailer plants, but neither has a southern or southwestern plant (Linnen 1765; Crumrine 1719-21). In 1968, Strick had no van trailer plants located in the South, Southwest or West (Bachman 559).

166. Budd has plans to erect two new van trailer plants for Gindy (CX 99B). One of these plants, now under construction, will be an enlarged facility to be located in Martinsville, Va. (Ginsberg 278; Walters 512; Hindin 1327). Its expected cost is $4.5 million (Ginsberg 278-79; Hindin 1389). This plant will replace Gindy's present inadequate plant in Martinsville (Ginsberg 318; Hindin 1318, 1327). Budd also purchased land near Chicago for a new midwestern plant for Gindy (Ginsberg 279; Walters 512; Scott 1066; Hindin 1327).

167. It is advantageous for a van trailer manufacturer to be integrated into the manufacture of the components used in assembling a van trailer (Ginsberg 343; Miller 383; Bachman 557; Hindin 1388). The major manufacturers of van trailers are vertically integrated into many of the components used in assembling a van trailer (Bachman 561-62; Crumrine 1731-32; Linnen 1779). Smaller van trailer manufacturers are less highly integrated than are the major manufacturers (Collier 1645).

168. Since the acquisition, Budd has helped Gindy achieve further integration by starting the production of certain components such as kingpin subframes, running gear subframes, landing gear subframes and front and rear ends (CX 146L; Ginsberg 280-81; Hindin 1389).

169. Factory-owned branches (hereinafter "branches") are considered by many manufacturers to be preferable to independent dealers (hereinafter "dealers") in distributing new van trailers (CX 146L; Miller 397; Hammond 674-75; Hindin 1322; Bernstein 1425, 1429; Brown 1495-96; Crumrine 1727). Branches can handle used equipment service and sales more effectively than can dealers (Miller 397; Hammond 674-75; Hindin 1322; Bernstein 1429-31; Brown 1495-96). Branches are used to stock new trailers and thereby gain additional sales from customers who want fast delivery (Miller 374; Crumrine 1727; Linnen 1768-69).

170. Several of the largest manufacturers of van trailers utilize both branches and dealers to distribute their van trailers, relying primarily on the former (Bernstein 1445-46; Brown 1494; Crumrine 1725; Linnen 1767). However, the second largest van trailer manufacturer in 1968 had only a very few branches (Walters 502; Bachman 559).

171. Smaller manufacturers of van trailers rely almost entirely on direct sales efforts from the factory or dealers to distribute their van trailers (Heinmiller 699; Brown 1494; Collier 1640; Daniel 2215).

172. Prior to acquisition, Gindy utilized primarily dealers to sell its van trailers (CX 94K; Hindin 1320). However, it did operate branches in New Jersey, Chicago and Cleveland (Ginsberg 280; Walters 502).

173. Since Budd acquired Gindy, Gindy has opened six additional branches and plans to open four more within the next few years (CX 65; CX 146L; Ginsberg 280; Walters 512-14; Hindin 1322, 1327; Bernstein 1442). Budd has provided between $3 and $4 million to enable Gindy to open these branches (Hindin 1389).

174. Subsequent to the acquisition, Budd has improved the quality of the Gindy van trailer (Weaver 905; Bernstein 1442; Burten 1584; Paterson 1620). In part, this was achieved through a redesign of the Gindy van trailer (CX 86; CX 87; CX 89; CX 146L; Cerra 423-24; Hindin 1331-32; Bernstein 1442; Gross 1562; Paterson 1620). Gindy has introduced a unique inclined roller tandem to replace the sliding tandem previously used (CX 88).

175. Since the acquisition, Gindy has broadened the types of van trailers which it offers by adding furniture and deep drop frame van trailers to its product lines (CX 58; CX 146L; Walters 530-31; Hindin 1332; Bernstein 1442-43).

176. Gindy currently is at maximum capacity. It has a five-month backlog and is turning down orders because it cannot meet delivery times (Hindin 1385-86).

177. Subsequent to the acquisition, Budd has increased substantially the amount of advertising done for Gindy's van trailers, compared to the amount of advertising done by Gindy prior to its acquisition (CX 57; CX 59-62; CX 76; CX 83-84; CX 86-89; Walters 504).

X. The Facts and the Law

A. The Lines of Commerce

One of the principal issues in this case is the product markets. The legal standards to be used in determining the proper line of commerce in Section 7 cases were laid down by the Supreme Court:

> The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. However, within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes * * *. The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes and specialized vendors. Because § 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits any merger which may substantially lessen competition "in any line of commerce" (emphasis supplied), it is necessary to examine the effects of a merger in each such economically significant submarket to determine if there is a reasonable probability that the merger will substantially lessen competition. If such a probability is found to exist, the merger is proscribed. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325 (1962).

When the Brown Shoe criteria are applied to the facts in this matter, it becomes apparent that the four relevant product markets are van trailers, closed-top dry freight van trailers, open-top van trailers and containers and chassis.

Van trailers as a separate and distinct line of commerce meets the following Brown Shoe criteria: industry recognition (findings 33, 34); peculiar characteristics and uses (findings 35-36); unique production facilities (finding 37); distinct customers (findings 38-39); sensitivity to price changes (findings 41-42); and specialized vendors (finding 40).

Closed-top dry freight van trailers and open-top van trailers as separate and distinct lines of commerce meet the following Brown Shoe criteria: industry recognition (findings 44, 52); peculiar characteristics and uses (findings 45-46, 48); distinct customers (finding 47); sensitivity to price changes (findings 49-50); and specialized vendors (finding 51).

Containers and chassis as a separate and distinct line of commerce meets the following Brown Shoe criteria: industry recognition (finding 53); peculiar characteristics and uses (findings 54, 57); distinct customers (finding 58); distinct prices (finding 60); and sensitivity to price changes (finding 59).

It is now well established that it is not necessary for each of the seven criteria set forth in Brown Shoe to be present in every merger case in order to establish a market. A relevant market has been found to exist where three or less of the Brown Shoe criteria were present. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593-95 (1957); General Foods Corporation v. FTC, 386 F.2d 936, 941 (3rd Cir. 1967); Reynolds Metals Company v. FTC, 309 F.2d 223 (D.C. Cir. 1962).

Further analysis is unnecessary since the Commission has already outlined the relevant product markets in Fruehauf Trailer Co., 67 F.T.C. 878 (1965). In that case, involving horizontal acquisitions by Fruehauf, the Commission said:

> The hearing examiner, applying the test declared by the Supreme Court in [Brown Shoe], correctly found that aluminum vans, platform trailers, and dump trailers, among others, were appropriate product markets in which to appraise the competitive effects of the acquisitions, as well as truck trailers generally. 67 F.T.C. at 930, n.2.

B. Budd as an Actual Potential Entrant

The importance of the potential competition doctrine in antitrust analysis is now well established. The latest Commission decision dealing with potential competition is General Mills, Inc., Docket No. 8836 (Oct. 5, 1973), in which the Commission analyzed the effect of eliminating an actual potential entrant:

> Secondly, aside from whether it is viewed as a potential competitor by firms in the market, elimination of a potential entrant by acquisition of a leading firm in that market will eliminate the competition that would have been added had the acquiring firm entered the market de novo or by toehold acquisition. General Mills, Inc., supra, at 5.

When analyzing the "impact" of the loss of a potential entrant, it is important to look not only at what the impact would have been had the potential entrant actually entered through internal expansion or by acquisition of a "toehold," but also at the impact which it had as a deterrent to current competitors by its mere presence on the fringe of the market. United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158 (1964). As the Supreme Court held in Ford-Autolite, a lost potential entrant:

> * * * may well have been more useful as a potential than it would have been as a real producer, regardless how it began fabrication. Had * * * [the potential entrant] taken the internal-expansion route, there would have been no illegality; not, however, because the result necessarily would have been commendable, but simply because that course has not been proscribed. 405 U.S. at 567-68.

More recently, in United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526 (1973), the Court stated:

> Suspect also is the acquisition by a company not competing in the market but so situated as to be a potential competitor and likely to exercise substantial influence on market behavior. Entry through merger by such a company, although its competitive conduct in the market may be the mirror image of that of the acquired company, may nevertheless violate § 7 because the entry eliminates a potential competitor exercising present influence on the market. FTC v. Proctor & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. at 580-581; United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 173-174 (1964). As the Court stated in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S., at 174, "The existence of an aggressive, well equipped and well financed corporation engaged in the same or related lines of commerce waiting anxiously to enter an oligopolistic market would be a substantial incentive to competition which cannot be underestimated." (410 U.S. at 531-32). See also FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., 386 U.S. 568 (1967); Beatrice Foods Company, 67 F.T.C. 473, 716-722 (Apr. 26, 1965).

In Falstaff, the Court went on to hold that even if it is found that the alleged potential entrant would not have entered otherwise, this > * * * does not ipso facto dispose of the potential-competition issue.

> The specific question with respect to this phase of the case is not what Falstaff's internal company decisions were but whether, given its financial capabilities and conditions in the New England market, it would be reasonable to consider it a potential entrant into that market. (410 U.S. at 533.)

The record is clear that it is reasonable to consider Budd a potential entrant into the sale of van trailers, closed-top dry freight van trailers, open-top van trailers, and containers and chassis to motor carriers and other users of these products prior to its acquisition of Gindy. Budd had great financial capabilities; enjoyed a reputation as a quality manufacturer of railroad cars and wheels for van trailers; had the know-how and capacity to enter the markets; had evidenced a long-sustained and strong interest in entering the markets; and had compelling reasons for entering. Moreover, the markets were highly concentrated, the barriers to entry very high and no corporation other than Budd had the inclination, resources and know-how to enter the markets.

Budd made no secret of its interest in the markets under consideration. Budd approached various van trailer manufacturers when merger negotiations with Gindy were suspended (findings 81, 92).

Furthermore, Budd made an inquiry of a possible customer concerning its possible entry. Considering the above, it cannot be said that those already competing in sales to motor carriers, railroads and other users of the products under consideration were unaware of Budd's interest in entering the sale of van trailers, containers and chassis.

It is also now well established that when assessing the loss of a potential entrant "[t]he form of entry is clearly not a determinative factor." Kennecott Copper Corporation, 78 F.T.C. 744, 927 (1971), aff'd, 467 F.2d 67 (10th Cir. 1972). As the Commission stated in The Bendix Corporation, 77 F.T.C. 731 (1970), remanded for further proceedings, 450 F.2d 534 (6th Cir. 1971):

> Various forms of merger entry other than through acquisition of a leading company—for example, a "toehold" acquisition of a small company capable of expansion into a substantial competitive force—may be as economically desirable and beneficial to competition as internal expansion into a relevant market, and must be considered in assessing the potential competition of the acquiring firm which has been eliminated as a result of the challenged merger.
> Although previous cases * * * have only involved potential entry in one form, i.e., by internal expansion, it is clear that the form of entry was not controlling in these decisions. What was determinative in each of these cases was (1) the actual elimination of the additional decision-making, the added capacity, and the other market stimuli which would have resulted had entry taken a pro-competitive form, such as internal expansion; and (2) anticompetitive consequences of the removal of the disciplining effect of a potential competitor from the market's edge. We believe that these adverse effects on competition may result from the elimination of a potential entrant who might have entered by internal expansion or who might have entered by a toehold acquisition. 77 F.T.C. at 817.

A long line of cases sets forth the factors to be considered in determining whether a respondent is an actual potential entrant. The relevant market must be substantially concentrated or exhibit a trend toward concentration The Stanley Works v. FTC, 469 F.2d 498 (2d Cir. 1972); Beatrice Foods Co., 81 F.T.C. 481 (1972). The firm within the market must be a leading or major factor, so that the merger cannot be justified as a "toehold" acquisition:

> From the standpoint of Section 7, and the statutory policy of favoring mergers which may increase competition and prohibiting mergers which may lessen competition, it made a crucial difference whether Bendix merged with Fram or another leading firm, or with any one of the various smaller and less established firms with which it unsuccessfully negotiated (emphasis added). The Bendix Corp., supra, at 824.

A company outside the market will be viewed as a likely or potential entrant if it is shown to have distinctive capabilities, resources, incentives, and interests to enter the particular market. Thus, in United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 660 (1964), the Supreme Court looked to the nearness of the absorbed company to the relevant market, the acquiring firm's "eagerness to enter that market, its resourcefulness and so on." The Supreme Court expanded this analysis in United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., supra, at 175

(1964), in which it discussed the factors it considered key in deciding whether a company was a potential entrant: The company's inclinations, resources, know-how, its long-standing and strong interest in entry, its reputation and business connections with firms in the relevant market, its capacity to enter, and its competitive and economic reasons to do so. Finally, it is essential to show that the acquiring firm is the most likely entrant or one of a few such likely entrants The Bendix Corp., supra, at 830; FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra; United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., supra.

Thus, considering the principles derived from these decisions, a merger eliminates potential competition and is illegal if the following four factors are established: (1) The particular market is shown to be substantially concentrated; (2) the merging firm within the market is shown to be a leading or major factor in that market; (3) the merging firm outside the market is shown to be a likely entrant by internal growth or by a relatively small acquisition as an alternative to the proposed merger; and (4) the acquiring firm is shown to be the most likely entrant or one of few such likely entrants Beatrice Foods Company, Docket 8864 (Oct. 25, 1973); Beatrice Foods Company, supra, at 326 (1972).

Applying these factors to the facts in this matter, Budd was a potential entrant by internal expansion or by "toehold" acquisition or by both methods of entry into the manufacture and sale of van trailers, closed-top dry freight van trailers, open-top van trailers, containers and chassis.

1. Trend Toward Concentration

The Commission has recognized that the elimination by merger of a potential entrant into an industry exhibiting such a high degree of concentration as found in the markets under consideration, can violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act:

> Once having recognized the importance of potential competition, the question then arises under what conditions does the elimination of a potential competitor have the effect proscribed by Section 7 of the Clayton Act? As a general rule, a violation of Section 7 has been found in those circumstances in which the acquired firm is a leading factor in a tight oligopoly. A tight oligopoly has been defined as an industry having a "very small number (eight or fewer) firms supplying 50 percent of the market, with the largest firm having a 20 percent or higher share * * *." Kennecott Copper Corp., supra, at 921-22.

The markets under consideration were already tight oligopolies in 1968, the year of the merger, yet became more concentrated in 1969. The top four van trailer manufacturers accounted for 59 percent and 62 percent of shipments in 1968 and 1969, respectively, and the top four manufacturers accounted for 90 percent and 89 percent of container and chassis shipments, respectively, in these years (findings 62, 64).

Concentration in the major submarket, closed-top dry freight vans, was even higher. The top four manufacturers accounted for 65 percent and 72 percent of shipments in 1968 and 1969, respectively (findings 62, 64).

Moreover, Fruehauf, admittedly the largest factor in the industry, met or exceeded the 20 percent market share benchmark accepted in Kennecott in each of the product markets in question except for open-top van trailers (findings 62, 64).

There had been no substantial entry into the product markets under consideration for 15 years (finding 73). Instead, firms have been leaving these markets (finding 73).

2. Gindy Was a Leading and Major Factor in the Relevant Product Market

Budd itself characterized Gindy as "a leading manufacturer of truck trailers and cargo containers" (findings 151-152). Gindy sold its trailers throughout the United States, and competitors acknowledged that Gindy was a major and leading competitor in the industry, some characterizing Gindy as "one of The Big Ones" (finding 153).

Gindy was the fourth largest supplier of van trailers in 1968 and 1969 (findings 62, 64). As for closed-top dry freight vans, Gindy was also the fourth largest producer in 1968, and third largest in 1969, accounting for 10.8 percent and 12.9 percent of shipments, respectively, in each year (finding 10).

3. Budd Was a Likely Entrant by Internal Growth or by a "Toehold" Acquisition

The record shows conclusively that in 1968 Budd had the distinctive capabilities, resources, incentives, and interests to enter the van trailer, container and chassis markets.

Budd, as a railroad car manufacturer, had the engineering background from which it could have developed its own van trailers, containers and chassis (findings 108-120, 124-130). The metal working skills and machines necessary to manufacture the products sold by Budd and Gindy are similar (findings 108-121). Indeed, Budd had built aluminum containers at its Red Lion plant (finding 117). Budd personnel had the background and experience to manufacture van trailers, containers and chassis (findings 126-130). Budd's executives recognized that van trailer manufacturing was complementary to its production and managerial skills (findings 85-86). In addition, Budd had experience with assembly line techniques necessary to manufacture van trailers (finding 124); had a name familiar to truckers (finding 131); produced items used by truckers, namely, wheels (finding 122); sold to the same types of customer as Gindy (findings 133-136); and had van trailer testing facilities from which Budd could learn a great deal about van trailer design (findings 145-146).

Barriers to entry into the manufacture and sale of van trailers, containers and chassis are high. One of the principal barriers is the need to finance sales, especially to large customers (findings 67-70). The substantial facilities and financial resources required to accept trade-ins and dispose of them is another major entry barrier (finding 71). Budd had the financial resources necessary to surmount these barriers (findings 137-143).

Budd's longstanding interest in the relevant product markets is clearly reflected in the record. Budd made trailer components for Fruehauf during the fifties (finding 74); had approached Brown Trailer to take Fruehauf's place when the relationship with Fruehauf was terminated (finding 75); contacted Utility twice concerning possible acquisition during the period from 1963 to 1968 (finding 81); and, in 1967, Budd's president recommended that Budd seek to enter areas in the transportation equipment industry, among which were highway trailers and containers (finding 84). Budd never seriously considered an acquisition outside the transportation equipment industry (finding 86). When Gindy suspended merger negotiations, Budd made acquisition overtures to several smaller van trailer manufacturers (finding 92). During these negotiations, Budd's president declared that Budd would enter Gindy's business whether or not it acquired Gindy (finding 89).

Budd also had sufficient incentives to enter the relevant product markets. As early as 1961, a Budd executive recommended that Budd cease its railroad car activities and broaden its base to deemphasize Budd's traditional role as a semicaptive supplier to the automotive industry (finding 78). Budd decided to broaden its base by selling proprietary products such as van trailers (finding 79). By 1967, Budd's executives adopted the recommendations of Budd's president that the company enter into areas such as van trailers and containers. These were areas, according to Budd's president, which related to Budd's then current activities and which Budd could understand and manage (findings 84-86). Finally, acquisitions in van trailers, containers and chassis were attractive, as these markets were considerably more profitable than Budd (findings 21, 91).

Given Budd's interest, abilities and incentives, it could have expanded into Gindy's business through internal expansion or by acquiring a smaller, toehold manufacturer. The declaration of Budd's president, that Budd would enter Gindy's business whether or not it purchased Gindy, clearly reveals an intent to enter had its acquisition attempt failed. Other railroad car manufacturers have expanded internally into the manufacture of van trailers, containers and chassis, using railroad car manufacturing facilities, personnel and machinery (findings 109-113, 116). Budd recognized that it too could do so (finding 93), but decided to pursue an easier course, acquisition of Gindy. Several toehold van trailer manufacturers were available to Budd at or about the time of the merger (findings 101-107). Budd could have acquired and expanded one of these toeholds as it planned to, and did, expand Gindy (findings 155-177).

4. Budd Was the Only Likely Potential Entry into the Relevant Product Markets

The record fails to show any other firm interested in entering the relevant product markets (findings 148-150). On the contrary, it was shown that many of the purported potential entrants suggested by Budd's counsel had no interest whatsoever in entry (findings 148-150). The inescapable conclusion is, therefore, that Budd was the only likely potential entrant, either by acquisition or internal expansion.

C. Budd as a Perceived Potential Entrant

Before Budd's acquisition of Gindy, Budd was a perceived potential entrant. In the spring of 1968, Gindy suspended negotiations with Budd (finding 92). At that time, Budd's executives contacted Miller and Dorsey, both van trailer manufacturers, concerning possible acquisition (finding 92). A third-party consultant approached Theurer, another van trailer manufacturer (finding 92). Budd had also contacted Utility twice during the period from 1963 to 1968 (finding 81). Thus, at least four van trailer manufacturers were aware of Budd's interest shortly before the acquisition of Gindy. Because the acquisition occurred so soon after these contacts, Budd did not influence existing competition in the relevant product markets only because the contacted companies did not have enough time to react to Budd's known interest in entry.

D. The Recent Commission Decision in General Mills Does Not Apply to the Instant Case

The evidence which establishes Budd as a potential competitor in van trailers, containers and chassis differs in several respects from the evidence presented in General Mills, supra.

(1) Unlike General Mills, Budd had expressed definite, specific interest in entering the van trailer, container and chassis markets (findings 75-76, 81-93).

(2) Budd not only sought to enter these markets, but to expand within them (findings 95-96, 99), unlike General Mills which sought postacquisition expansion outside of frozen seafood.

(3) The markets in which Budd was alleged to be a potential entrant fit Budd's internal criteria outlined in preacquisition memos and conversations (findings 78-80, 84-91); whereas Gorton did not fit the recommended criteria contained in General Mills' study. Specifically, Budd acquired a highly profitable firm, one whose profit rate was three times that of Budd, whereas Gorton was a low profit firm, especially compared to General Mills (finding 91).

(4) Unlike the lack of complementary relationship between General Mills and Gorton, the products of Gindy were complementary to those of Budd. Both sold products to the same customers (finding 136) and even belong to the same trade association (finding 122). Furthermore, there are similarities in production which were recognized by Budd's management (findings 84-85) and shown by numerous technological relationships (findings 108, 125). Indeed, Budd possessed personnel and production facilities which could have been used to produce Gindy's products (findings 115-121).

(5) If General Mills had not acquired Gorton, it would not have entered the frozen fish market. However, Budd management not only stated that they would enter Gindy's markets with or without Gindy (finding 89), but took steps to implement those alternative entry plans (finding 92).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Commission has jurisdiction of the subject of this proceeding and of respondent Budd.

2. On Oct. 22, 1968, Budd acquired the business and assets of Gindy.

3. Budd and Gindy were, at all times relevant herein, corporations engaged in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Clayton Act, as amended.

4. The proper product markets within which to determine the probable effects of said acquisition, for purposes of this proceeding are: (a) van trailers; (b) closed-top dry freight van trailers; (c) open-top trailers; and (d) containers and chassis.

5. The proper geographic market within which to determine the probable effects of said acquisition, for purposes of this proceeding, is the United States, as a whole.

6. The effect of the acquisition of Gindy by Budd has been, or may be, to lessen competition substantially or tend to create a monopoly in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, in the following ways:

(a) Substantial potential competition between Budd and Gindy in the sale of van trailers, closed-top dry freight and open-top van trailers, and containers and chassis, has been eliminated.

(b) Budd has been eliminated as a substantial potential competitor in the sale of van trailers, closed-top dry freight and open-top van trailers, and containers and chassis.

(c) Entry of new manufacturers into the sale of van trailers, closed-top dry freight and open-top van trailers, and containers and chassis, may be inhibited or prevented.

(d) Other manufacturers in each such line of commerce may be led to agree to acquisition by financially strong companies for defensive or retaliatory reasons.

(e) Barriers to entry of new manufacturers into each such line of commerce have been raised significantly.

7. The acquisition of Gindy by Budd may be substantially to lessen competition, or tend to create a monopoly, as described in Paragraph 6 above, in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U.S.C. §18).

8. Total divestiture of the acquired assets and all additions and improvements thereto is both necessary and appropriate to remedy the probable anticompetitive effects of the unlawful acquisition.

9. As Justice Marshall discussed in Falstaff, the objective evidence in this proceeding makes it abundantly clear that the product market (van trailers, closed-top dry freight and open-top van trailers, and containers and chassis) constituted a highly concentrated market held by a few large firms. Further, the objective evidence in the record, although denied by the respondent, strongly suggests that Budd had both the capability and the incentive to enter the van trailer, closed-top dry freight and open-top van trailer, container and chassis market de novo. There is no question from the testimony of Budd's own witnesses that it intended to go into the market, and furthermore, that it intended to become a national competitor on a par with Fruehauf, Strick and Trailmobile. Budd had the money, all the facilities, plant and equipment to accomplish what it set out to do, de novo, without attaining entry into the market by acquisition of a large firm such as Gindy.

While the testimony of the witnesses and the evidence adduced by Budd would lead one to believe that it had no intention of entering the market de novo, it is the opinion of the trier of the facts in this case that while the subjective statements of the witnesses may appear to be credible, they are insufficient to outweigh the strong objective evidence to the contrary.

The Remedy

It is well settled that the choice of the remedial order is committed to the discretion of the Commission FTC v. Mandel Bros., 359 U.S. 385, 392-93 (1959); Niresk Industries, Inc. v. FTC, 278 F.2d 337, 343 (7th Cir.

1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 883 (1960); L. G. Balfour Company v. FTC, 442 F.2d 1 (7th Cir. 1971). The Commission has the power to order divestiture to restore competition to the state of health it might be expected to enjoy but for the acquisition FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597, 606 n. 4 (1966); see Pan American World Airways Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 312-13 nn. 17 and 18 (1963); Ekco Products Company, 65 F.T.C. 1204, 1214-17 (1964). The remedial phase of antitrust cases is crucial and the primary focus of inquiry as to remedy is whether the relief adequately redresses the economic injury arising out of the violation United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 326, 327. Moreover, "once the government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of law all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor." United States v. du Pont, supra, at 334. Generally, the most appropriate remedy to redress a Section 7 violation is divestiture FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra.

Divestiture is the only appropriate remedy in this matter. Such divestiture will restore Budd as a force on the edge of the market and a de novo[6] potential entrant. See FTC v. Procter & Gamble Co., supra, for a complete discussion of considerations which govern the framing of relief in a Section 7 violation.

ORDER

I

It is ordered, That the respondent, The Budd Company (hereafter Budd), a corporation, and its successors and assigns, shall divest all stock, assets, properties, rights and privileges, tangible and intangible, acquired by Budd as the result of its acquisition of the stock of Gindy Manufacturing Corporation (hereafter Gindy), together with all additions and improvements thereto. Budd shall cause to be transferred as part of such divestiture such portion of the assets of Budd Financial Corporation as relate to or derive from, in whole or in part, Budd's operation of Gindy, including, but not exclusively, personnel, finance contracts, and a share of the uncommitted funds and credit lines, along with such guarantees by Budd as shall be necessary to effect such transfer. Such divestiture shall be absolute, shall be accomplished no later than one (1) year from the service of this order, and shall be subject to the prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission.

---

[6] The term "de novo," as used in this instance, includes entrance by both internal expansion and by toehold.

II

It is further ordered, That such divestiture shall be accomplished absolutely to an acquirer approved by the Federal Trade Commission so as to transfer Gindy as a going business and a viable, competitive, independent concern engaged in the manufacture, production, distribution, sale and financing of van trailers, containers and chassis.

III

It is further ordered, That none of the assets, properties, rights or privileges, described in Paragraph I of this order, shall be sold or transferred, directly or indirectly, to any person who is, at the time of the divestiture, an officer, director, employee, or agent of, or under the control or direction of, Budd, or any of Budd's subsidiary or affiliate corporations, or anyone who owns or controls, directly or indirectly, more than one (1) percent of the outstanding shares of common stock of Budd or to anyone who is not approved in advance by the Federal Trade Commission.

IV

It is further ordered, That pending divestiture Budd shall maintain and operate Gindy (as more fully described in Paragraph I), in the same manner and form as Gindy was being operated at the date the complaint herein issued; shall not commingle Gindy's assets, properties, and financing with other of Budd's businesses and operations, and, shall take no steps to impair or otherwise adversely affect the economic, competitive and financial position of Gindy.

V

It is further ordered, That, for a period commencing on the effective date of this order and continuing for ten (10) years from and after the date of completing the divestiture required by this order, Budd shall cease and desist from acquiring, directly or indirectly, without the prior approval of the Federal Trade Commission, the whole or any part of the stock, share capital, assets, any interest in or any interest of, any domestic concern, corporate or noncorporate, engaged in the manufacture, production, distribution, sale or financing of van trailers, containers and/or chassis, nor shall Budd enter into any arrangement with any such concern by which Budd obtains the market share, in whole or in part, of such concern in the above-described product lines.

VI

It is further ordered, That within thirty (30) days from the date of service of this order and every thirty (30) days thereafter until divestiture is accomplished, Budd shall submit, in writing, to the Federal Trade Commission a report setting forth in detail the manner and form in which Budd intends to comply, is complying, or has complied with the order. All compliance reports shall include, among other things that are from time to time required, (a) the steps taken to accomplish the required divestiture, and (b) copies of all documents, reports, memoranda, communications and correspondence concerning or relating to the divestiture.

With respect to Paragraph V of this order, Budd shall on the first anniversary date of the effective date of Paragraph V and each anniversary date thereafter until the expiration of the prohibition set forth in Paragraph V, submit a report, in writing, listing all acquisitions made by it, the date of each such acquisition or merger, the products involved and such additional information as may from time to time be required.

VII

It is further ordered, That The Budd Company shall notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed changes which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of successor corporations, and that this order shall be binding on any such successor.

DISSENTING STATEMENT OF COMMISSIONER DIXON

SEPTEMBER 3, 1975

My reading of the record in this matter convinces me that Budd was an actual potential entrant into the markets found relevant by the administrative law judge,[1] and that Budd's entry through Gindy was anticompetitive as it did not come about through internal expansion or

[1] Based on the finding that closed-top dry freight trailers and open-top van trailers could be manufactured by the same machinery and distributed through the same channels, the majority concluded that these two products should not be viewed as comprising distinct submarkets. Although cross-elasticity of production and distribution is determinative when considering the outer boundaries of a market, such cross-elasticity is only one of the factors to be considered when drawing submarkets. My reading of the record comports with that of the administrative law judge insofar as he finds that these closed and open-top van trailers are sufficiently distinct to warrant the finding that each should be considered a relevant submarket. Particularly persuasive in this connection is the administrative law judge's finding that these two products are sold to different customers because their end uses are distinct and the finding that there is no cross-elasticity as to price between them. It may be, as an example, that peanut butter and peanut oil are produced by the same machines and distributed by the same wholesalers. Yet we would not conclude from their cross-elasticity of production and distribution that each does not comprise a separate product market. That one cannot be substituted by acquisition of a toehold firm. I cannot accept the majority's holding that Gindy was a toehold firm. It is my understanding that a firm cannot qualify as a toehold if it is already a significant competitive factor in the relevant markets, or is likely to achieve that status without the infusion of capital from the acquiring firm. Assuming, arguendo, that Gindy became significant only after the challenged acquisition,[2] the manner in which it achieved this position demonstrates that Gindy was capable of ascending to such a position in the relevant markets on its own, and that it was likely to do so. There is no dispute that Budd's investment of a few million dollars increased Gindy's production capacity and geographical distribution and was all that was required to bring Gindy into more direct competition with the "industry giants." In brief, it was well within the capacity of Gindy to become, through internal expansion, a significant competitor of Fruehauf, Strick, and Trailmobile, if it was not already at the time of the acquisition. Since this prospect was obviated by the Budd acquisition, as was the potential for Budd to become a significant competitor through internal expansion or acquisition of one of the smaller firms in the relevant markets, the acquisition should not be permitted to stand.

DISSENTING STATEMENT OF COMMISSIONER HANFORD

SEPTEMBER 15, 1975

I agree with Commissioner Dixon that open-top van trailers and closed-top dry freight vans are distinct product submarkets, and that the submarket which the majority has defined as encompassing both types of trailers fails to reflect economic reality. Accordingly, I find I am unable to agree with the majority's conclusion that Budd's purchase of Gindy constitutes entry by toehold acquisition.

What we have here is a situation in which Budd was, prior to the acquisition, an actual potential entrant into markets which are characterized by high concentration and substantial barriers to effective competition. Moreover, it was one of the few most likely potential entrants into these markets. Budd could have entered these markets by toehold acquisition or de novo through internal expansion. It had the capacity to do so. Had it entered in either of these two ways, it would have been a direct competitor of Gindy, which at the time of the acquisition was ranked number two in the production of open-top van trailers. In addition, the other leading firms in this market would have had to contend with aggressive new competition from Budd as for the other by the end user, and that there is no price cross-elasticity between them would be determinative. So it should be with open and closed-top van trailers.

[2] This assumption is unquestionably without merit with respect to the open-top van trailer submarket, as Gindy's 16 percent share of that submarket placed it as the second largest producer of these vans.

well as the existing competition from Gindy. Thus, the acquisition results in the loss of one of the few firms which could have and was likely to be, had it entered de novo or by a toehold acquisition, an important additional competitor in this highly concentrated market.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

AUGUST 29, 1975

BY ENGMAN, Commissioner:

The Budd Company appeals from the initial decision in this matter in which the administrative law judge found that its acquisition of the Gindy Manufacturing Corporation ("Gindy") in 1968 violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

According to the Fortune Directory of the 500 Largest United States Industrial Corporations, in 1967 Budd was the 250th largest industrial corporation in the nation in terms of sales ($469.5 million) and was one of the largest independent automotive suppliers in the nation and the largest independent supplier of body parts to the automotive industry. Budd principally manufactured automotive bodies, wheels, rims, hubs, drums, brakes, jigs and dies used in the manufacture of automotive body parts. In addition it was a leading manufacturer of railroad and mass transit cars.

Prior to its acquisition by Budd on Oct. 22, 1968, Gindy was a Pennsylvania corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of van trailers, containers and container chassis. For fiscal year 1968, Gindy sales were approximately $32 million and its assets amounted to about $44 million.

On Oct. 22, 1968, through an exchange of Budd stock valued at $29.7 million, Budd acquired the outstanding capital stock of Gindy.

The complaint alleges that prior to the acquisition Budd was one of the most likely potential entrants into the manufacture and sale of van trailers, closed-top dry freight van trailers, open-top van trailers, and containers and container chassis, and that by acquiring Gindy, Budd eliminated itself as a substantial potential competitor in these markets. The complaint further alleges that these markets and segments thereof are highly concentrated and characterized by high entry barriers.

After extensive hearings, the administrative law judge sustained these allegations and entered an order requiring divestiture of the acquired firm.

I. RELEVANT PRODUCT MARKETS

The broadest product markets found by the ALJ to be appropriate for this case are (1) "van trailers" and (2) "containers and chassis." "Van trailers" refers to the large box-type trailers attached permanently to a chassis with wheels that are pulled by a truck tractor. Truck trailers that are not "van trailers" would include tank and bulk commodity trailers (for hauling liquids, gas, cement, and the like); platform trailers and low bed heavy haulers (used, for instance, to transport heavy machinery and girders); pole and logging trailers; and dump trailers. Trucks and truck bodies are not included with the term "van trailers" which is used exclusively to refer to trailers of 5-ton capacity or more that are pulled by a truck tractor. A van trailer can be open or closed at the top and is usually made with aluminum or steel or both. Vans represent by far the largest percentage of all types of truck trailers.

"Containers and chassis" refer to large, closed box-type structures which can be used for intermodal transportation of goods, by rail, motor carrier, or ship. The container is designed to be detachable from the chassis on which it sits when pulled by a truck. Sizes are standardized and containers must be strong enough to be hoisted and stacked on top of one another during shipboard transit.

Respondent does not dispute the existence of these product markets, although it suggests that a broader "all truck trailer" market would be a more appropriate market in which to view the acquisition.

We are satisfied that the "van trailers" and "containers and chassis" each constitute appropriate markets for purposes of the case. It is not disputed that van trailers are produced on fairly unique production lines which cannot be quickly utilized to produce other types of non-van trailers such as tank, platform, logging, or dump trailers. Also, because of their special design, there is little or no substitution in end use between van trailers and these other types of truck trailers. Likewise, containers and chassis serve a distinct function that separates them from van trailers and they are usually constructed on different assembly lines than those used to build van trailers.

In addition to the foregoing product markets, the ALJ found that subcategories of van trailers listed by the Department of Census as "closed-top dry freight van trailers" and "open-top van trailers," constitute relevant submarkets for purposes of this case. Respondent takes sharp issue that these finer divisions constitute markets, as did its economist-witness Dr. Oliver Williamson (Tr. 2088-2090).

We agree with respondent and its expert witness that "closed-top dry freight van trailers" and "open-top van trailers" do not constitute meaningful economic markets. The market for open top trailers is limited as they are used mainly to carry freight, such as steel lengths, which must be loaded from the top by cranes. Census reported a total of $19.8 million in open-top van trailer production for 1968 as compared to $246.1 million for closed-top dry freight van trailers.[1] Although it is true that a buyer may not find these types substitutable for particular end uses, the record nevertheless establishes that production and distribution facilities for each are identical and are essentially identical among other types of vans. Both "closed" and "open" top vans are commonly made by all van trailer manufacturers, including Gindy, and do not require separate assembly lines (CX 90, 91, Tr. 386-87, 572, 640-41, 703, 877, 890, 1343).

No doubt the reason that complaint counsel urge the existence of separate "closed-top" and "open-top" van markets is that Gindy's "market share" is much higher if these product lines are used. Although Gindy's share of all van trailer shipments in 1968 was 8.4 percent (giving it an industry rank of number 4), its production of open-top trailers happened to represent nearly 16 percent of all open-top van trailer shipments in that year (giving it a rank of number 2 in the production of open-top vans). Its share of U.S. production of "closed-top dry freight vans" in 1968 and 1969 also exceeded 10 percent. The inappropriateness of making a distinction in market definitions based on the presence or absence of a top on the trailer[2] is evidenced by the fact that in the following year, although Gindy's market share and ranking stayed nearly the same in overall van sales, its shipment of open-top trailers declined precipitously from $3,150 million to $1,268 million resulting in a drop from 15 percent to 7.8 percent of the industry total in just one year. The difference was made up by the production of other types of van trailers, thus evidencing ease of production flexibility. By 1972, Gindy's share of open-top vans dropped even further, down to 4.17 percent.

The ALJ, in accepting complaint counsel's argument that "closed-top" and "open-top" van trailers each constitute a relevant submarket, mechanically relied on the fact that several of the submarket criteria referred to in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325 (1962) were applicable, such as peculiar characteristics and uses, distinct prices, and industry recognition of open-top van trailers as a category of truck trailers. But as the Court observed in a later case, "[T]hese [Brown Shoe] guidelines offer no precise formula for judgment and they necessitate, rather than avoid, careful consideration based upon the entire record" United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 449 (1964). Cross-elasticity of supply can also be an important consideration in defining markets. See Brown Shoe, supra at 325 n. 42. The interchangeability of production and distribution facilities between two products is a strong indication that in measuring the relevant market and the degree of market power held by firms, the output of both products should be included since the manufacturer of one can shift readily to the production and sale of the other in response to profit opportunities. Cf. Sterling Drug, Inc., 80 F.T.C. 477 (1972). See also United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 510-11 (1948). Because the record establishes such a high degree of cross-elasticity of production, and identical marketing ease, among van trailers, we conclude that "open-top" and "closed-top" van trailers do not constitute separate submarkets.

[1] Total production of all vans in 1968 amounted to $381.7 million. It should be noted that "open-top vans" and "closed-top dry freight vans" do not account for all vans. In addition to these subcategories, Census lists under "vans" the following; insulated vans ($84 million), drop frame (furniture-type) vans ($22 million), and livestock vans ($9 million).

[2] There are differences in construction between open-top and closed-top freight trailers in addition to the presence or absence of a roof. Open-top trailers must have stronger top rails among other things and in fact sell for a slightly higher price than equivalent size closed-top vans. Nevertheless, as noted, production procedures and equipment are the same. Both types of trailers are produced on the same assembly line, and no additional expenditures are required to switch production capability from one to the other (Tr. 386-87, 1343).

In adopting "van trailers" and "containers and chassis" as lines of commerce, we do not deny that there is probably an even broader economic market encompassing these and other trailers. It appears that there is considerable interchangeability in production equipment and skills over the long-run between all types of truck trailers except for tank and bulk commodity trailers which seem to fall in a specialized production class all of their own. Indeed, the Commission in Fruehauf Trailer Co., 67 F.T.C. 878 (1965) found "truck trailers generally" to be a relevant product market for analyzing the acquisitions involved there. Consequently, in addition to the two product markets adopted in the initial decision, we will also examine the instant acquisition in terms of market share statistics for a broader market consisting of all truck trailers (except tank and bulk commodity trailers).

II. GEOGRAPHIC MARKET

The record supports the ALJ's findings that the relevant geographic market is the United States as a whole for sales of van trailers and containers and chassis. This is not to say that all trailer manufacturers are able to compete uniformly throughout the Nation. High transportation costs, even for such mobile products as trailers, make it difficult to supply trailers to distant locations. Nevertheless neither party suggests that anything less than the Nation should be considered the proper geographic market.

Respondent does argue that foreign producers of containers have competed with domestic producers of containers and that purchasers of containers look beyond the boundaries of the United States for supplies of this product. Respondent asserts that since the market statistics for containers do not include container production of foreign firms, the initial decision's market analysis is defective insofar as containers are concerned. The record indicates that there has been little competition from foreign-made containers insofar as domestic consumption in this country is concerned. Shipping lines are the primary buyers of containers and Federal regulations prohibit American shipping line operators from purchasing cargo containers of foreign manufacture with capital reserve funds. 30 F.R. 12036 (Sept. 21, 1965). Furthermore, since the devaluation of the U.S. dollar, foreign container manufacturers have found it particularly difficult to sell containers in this country.

III. MARKET CONCENTRATION

Universe figures for the various lines of commerce described above were taken from Census Bureau publications. Shipments of individual firms were obtained directly from the manufacturers. The following tables show relevant data for the years 1966 through 1968 for Gindy and the leading three firms in each of the markets:[3]

Before the loss of a potential entrant can be viewed as violating Section 7, it must be established that the market is concentrated or threatens to become so, that entry barriers are high, and that the acquired firm is a leading factor in the market. Kennecott Copper Corp., 78 F.T.C. 744, 921-22 (1971), aff'd, 467 F.2d 67 (10th Cir. 1972); The Bendix Corp., 77 F.T.C. 731 (1970), remanded for further proceedings, 450 F.2d 534 (6th Cir. 1971). If the market is not concentrated, there is usually little opportunity for the sellers to collectively maintain prices above competitive levels and any diminution of potential competition will not be material. On the other hand, if the market is concentrated but entry barriers are low, potential competition will be important but since there will be a large number of firms able to come into the market under approximately the same conditions, the merger of one of those firms with an existing seller will make no difference because the threat of new entry will remain approximately the same. Beatrice Foods Company, 81 F.T.C. 481, 530 (1972); General Mills, Inc., Dkt. 8836, Slip Opinion Oct. 5, 1973, p.5 n.2 [83 F.T.C. 696].

As the foregoing tables show, 4-firm concentration ratios are approximately 60 percent or more, with the largest firm, Fruehauf, usually representing about 25 percent of output. The top three firms (Fruehauf, Trailmobile, and Strick) collectively shared more than 50 percent of the output in each of the markets during the three years leading up to the year of acquisition. Although the record indicates that the balance of the markets are shared by nearly a hundred firms, clearly these markets are substantially concentrated. The Stanley Works, 78 F.T.C. 1023, 1065 n. 12 (1971), aff'd, 469 F.2d 498 (2d Cir. 1972); Beatrice Foods Company, Dkt. 8864 (July 1, 1975) [86 F.T.C. 1].

In addition, the ALJ found that there were substantial barriers to entry insofar as entering on a substantial level of production is concerned. Respondent argues that no barriers exist, as the manufacture of trailers and containers requires no extensive know-how or expensive equipment, patent licenses are not required, only a small amount of capital is needed to start manufacturing, and there appear to be no significant economies of scale in manufacturing. However we think the record bears out the ALJ's finding, although the term "barriers to effective competition" might convey a more accurate picture than "barriers to entry," see Fruehauf Trailer Co., 67 F.T.C. 878, 930-931 (1965). Small van trailer manufacturers generally do not have the ability to extend or obtain credit to finance a sale of a large number of trailers to large customers or to offer finance terms competitive with terms offered by the large trailer manufacturers. It is not uncommon for the largest companies in the industry to sell trailers to fleet operators with virtually no downpayment on 6 to 8 year credit terms (I.D. findings 68-69). Manufacturers who do not have the capital resources to finance sales on these terms generally cannot arrange such favorable terms through banks (Tr. 257-58, 371-73, 502, 757, 829, 840, 873-74, 886).

In addition, the larger van manufacturers have an advantage as they have geographically-dispersed branch outlets that enable them to service and resell large lots of used trailers that have been accepted as trade-ins in sales to fleet operators.

Respondent argues that these requirements are merely incremental in nature since any given sales transaction requires a small additional amount of money and it is possible to enter "on a shoestring" if one is willing to do so. This may be so, but the most important customers are the large motor common carriers and truck-leasing companies who buy in large lots—often a hundred or several hundred units at a time. Only a few trailer manufacturers, led by Fruehauf and Trailmobile, have had the facilities to deal with these fleet operators who prefer to place their orders with manufacturers who can accept trade-ins on a large scale and extend favorable financing terms.

Lest there be any misunderstanding, we do not suggest as does the initial decision, that the superior ability of the larger trailer manufacturers to offer services and financing is an "unfair" advantage that is somehow anticompetitive. The advantages are ones that basically arise out of firm size and, although in part may be caused by imperfections in the capital market, are nevertheless beneficial to the customers who are served thereby. They should therefore, be viewed as providing real, and not simply "pecuniary," economies.

The ALJ found that the trailer manufacturing industry is "highly profitable." However there is little concrete evidence in the record in the form of actual profit data. Although Gindy in the year preceding the acquisition had been highly profitable (this fact quickened Budd's interest in acquiring it), little information is revealed by the profit and loss statements of the top firms since for the most part they are parts of conglomerate corporations which do not report profits and losses on a product-line basis.[4] There was much testimony to the effect that the industry is at least regarded by both insiders and outsiders as a low-profit industry. A number of firms have exited from the industry in recent years because of losses, including Highway Trailer Company, which in 1968 ranked number six in the van trailer market.

The record indicates that from 1966 onward van trailer prices have not risen at a pace commensurate with increases in cost of labor and material. Prices even declined to below 1966 levels from 1967 through 1969 (I.D. finding 65 and accompanying charts).

[4] By 1968, Fruehauf was a large diversified corporation. In terms of assets it exceeded Budd in size and ranked as the 234th largest industrial corporation in the country. Trailmobile was owned by the Pullman Company which was the 149th largest corporation. Until December 1968 Strick was a subsidiary of Penn Central. Brown Trailers was a division of the Clark Equipment Company, the 193rd largest corporation in terms of sales. Great Dane Trailers was a subsidiary of United States Freight Company.

The foregoing suggests that despite the degree of concentration evidenced by the market share figures, the market may have been performing in a manner that has yielded prices and profits at a competitive or near-competitive level. The Commission has taken this into account in evaluating complaint counsel's argument that the loss of Budd as a grassroots entrant was an important loss to the market.

IV. BUDD AS A POTENTIAL ENTRANT

The administrative law judge found that since at least 1956 Budd has been a potential entrant into the manufacture and sale of van trailers and containers and chassis and that by acquiring Gindy, Budd removed itself as an actual future entrant in these markets either by entry de novo or by acquisition of a small company. In addition he found that Budd was perceived by firms in the market as a potential entrant and loss of its presence at the edge of the market removed any disciplining effects that would have ensued from its continued presence as a perceived potential entrant.

Respondent takes strong issue with all of these findings, arguing that Budd was not interested in entering the trailer industry except by acquisition of a firm having an operation of the scale and profitability that Gindy possessed. Respondent argues that the Gindy acquisition was in fact procompetitive because Gindy's advancement in the market had reached a plateau and without access to capital for expansion and financing of sales on a mere competitive basis it could not hope to make inroads on the market position of Fruehauf and Trailmobile.

On the question of whether Budd was a perceived potential entrant, we disagree with the ALJ. A large number of industry witnesses testified in this proceeding and when asked whether they had viewed Budd as a potential entrant before the Gindy acquisition, the response was uniformly "no." Notwithstanding such testimony the ALJ reasoned:

> In the spring of 1968, Gindy suspended [merger] negotiations with Budd. At that time Budd's executives contacted Miller and Dorsey, both van trailer manufacturers, concerning possible acquisition. A third-party consultant approached Theurer, another van trailer manufacturer. Budd also contacted Utility twice during the period 1963 to 1968. Thus, at least four van trailer manufacturers were aware of Budd's interest shortly before the acquisition of Gindy. (initial decision pp. 50-51. [pp. 562, herein])

However executives from Miller, Dorsey, Theurer and Utility testified they did not perceive Budd as a potential entrant (Tr. 714, 1660, 1831, 1852, 1917). Prior to the time Budd acquired Gindy, these and the other trailer companies who appeared at the hearing did not take Budd into account in formulating competitive practices and prices (Tr. 524, 714, 753-54, 1304, 1439, 1510-11, 1646, 1738-39, 1776, 1904, 1917, 2216-17). Nor is there any reason to believe that had the Gindy acquisition not taken place Budd's continued presence outside the market would have influenced industry prices. Numerous industry witnesses, including representatives from the market leaders, identified other firms and types of firms they considered more likely to enter the truck trailer industry than Budd. These included automobile manufacturers (Tr. 1362-63), truck tractor manufacturers (Tr. 1362-63, 1511-14, 1591, 1628-29, 1633, 1740-42, 1777-78, 1868) and truck body manufacturers (Tr. 1588-91, 1753-54). No witness testified that their prices or practices were affected by these firms. The only conclusion that can be reasonably drawn from the evidence is that there is no basis upon which to believe that Budd's continued presence at the edge of the market would have any greater effect on market performance.

We are left then with the argument that Budd was a likely actual entrant which would have entered the market at some time in the future by means other than the Gindy acquisition.[5] This finding is also strongly disputed by the respondent. We find it unnecessary, however, to review the lengthy arguments that have been presented on this issue.

Although the ALJ found that Budd was an actual potential entrant into the van and container markets, we think he jumped too quickly to the conclusion that entry by way of acquiring Gindy was anticompetitive. Insufficient attention was paid to whether Gindy should be viewed as a "toehold or foothold firm," acquisition of which would lead to improved competition against dominant market leaders. As the Commission observed in Bendix Corporation, supra 77 F.T.C. at 818-19 (1970); "[I]n a highly concentrated, sluggish market, the acquisition of a small industry member by a powerful, innovative firm which, by building upon the base of the smaller firm can pose a more effective competitive challenge to the industry giants [may promote competition]. Such procompetitive mergers are not only not forbidden by Section 7, they are positively encouraged." "[T]he threat of a toehold merger by a powerful firm may often serve as a much greater incentive to competitive performance in the affected market than the prospect of more costly and slower internal, de novo expansion." id. at 819.[6] [5] The Supreme Court has explicitly reserved decision on whether elimination of a non-perceived but likely entrant can violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act. As it noted in United States v. Marine Bancorporation, supra, 418 U.S. at 625:

"The Court has not previously resolved whether the potential competition doctrine proscribes a market extension merger solely on the ground that such a merger eliminates the prospect for long-term deconcentration of an oligopolistic market that in theory might result if the acquiring firm were forbidden to enter except through a de novo undertaking or through the acquisition of a small existing entrant (a so-called foothold or toehold acquisition). Falstaff expressly reserved this issue." Accord U.S. v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 537.

The Commission has recently reaffirmed its view that elimination through merger of a likely procompetitive entry falls within the scope of Section 7. Beatrice Foods Company, Dkt. 8864, July 1, 1975, slip opinion, p. 12 n.6 [86 F.T.C. 1 at 63].

In the Bendix case the Commission struck down the acquisition by Bendix of the third-ranking firm (Fram) which had 17.2 percent of the market. However it characterized as a toehold firm that could lawfully have been acquired by Bendix, fourth-ranking Wix Manufacturing Company which had 9.5 percent of the market and was not shown to be technologically inferior. Similarly, the Ajax Company, recognized as a permissible toehold or foothold candidate in Stanley Works, 78 F.T.C. 1023, 1072 (1971) aff'd on other grounds, 469 F.2d 498, 508-09 n.24 (2d Cir. 1972), ranked third in the market with a share of about 8 percent. As we recently noted, the Commission has generally considered "firms having market shares below 10 percent as toehold companies, acquisition of which would have been procompetitive" Beatrice Foods Company, Dkt. 8864 (July 1, 1975, slip opinion p. 17 n.8 [86 F.T.C. 1 at 67]).

V. GINDY'S POSITION IN THE INDUSTRY

Market share data set forth supra, show that Gindy ranked considerably below Fruehauf, Trailmobile, and Strick. In the overall trailer market Gindy's share fluctuated between 4.9 percent and 6.5 percent during the three years prior to the merger. In the van trailer market, where Gindy's share was highest, it never rose appreciably above 7-8 percent as compared to Fruehauf's 27 percent and Trailmobile's 17 percent. Gindy's market position in 1968 was much closer to firms ranking below it, such as Brown Trailer (6.6 percent of the van trailer market in 1968), Highway (5.5 percent), and Great Dane (5.1 percent). Complaint counsel in fact characterize Highway and Great Dane as available "toehold" firms. In the container-and-chassis market, Gindy ranked number 6 with only 3.8 percent of the market.

At the time of acquisition, Gindy's principal manufacturing plant was located in Eagle, Pa., in addition to which it had a manufacturing plant located in Lebanon, Pa. and in Martinsville, Va.; and a relatively small production facility in St. Louis, Mo., which was later closed down as obsolete. Gindy was described by numerous industry witnesses as being a regional producer. Ninety-five percent of its sales were made in the Eastern part of the United States. In contrast, Fruehauf and

[6] See also Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 319: "When concern as to the Act's breadth [amended Section 7] was expressed, supporters of the amendments indicated that it would not impede, for example, a merger between two small companies to enable the combination to compete more effectively with larger corporations dominating the relevant market * * *."

Trailmobile were viewed by industry witnesses as the "national companies," and for many years have dominated the industry.[7] Fruehauf, for instance, had trailer production plants located in California (two plants), Texas (two plants), Nebraska, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. In addition it owned 80 sales and/or service outlets located throughout the country. Trailmobile had production facilities in Pennsylvania, Missouri, Texas, and California, and 30 factory-owned branch service and sales outlets. At the time Gindy was acquired by Budd the only facilities owned by Gindy outside of the Philadelphia area, except for the aforesaid manufacturing plants, was an outlet for selling used trailers which was located in Chicago, Ill. and a facility in Camden, N.J. for repairing used trailers.

Fruehauf, Trailmobile, and Strick had their own finance divisions, which because of their leverage in the money market, were able to offer financing on better terms than were generally available from banks. Prior to the merger, Gindy depended upon credit arrangements with several banks and an insurance company. The record shows, and the ALJ found, that "because of the tight money situation [in 1968] for all van trailer manufacturers, Gindy could not secure the financing to expand its position in its various markets rapidly as it had been expanding" I.D. finding 22; Tr. 275-76.

The administrative law judge, in holding that Gindy could not be viewed as a toehold or foothold acquisition candidate, relied on the fact that Gindy's shares in the alleged submarket "closed-top freight vans" exceeded 10 percent in 1968 and 1969 (findings 151-154). However, as we have held, this is not a meaningful economic market or submarket and Gindy's shares varied from 3 to 8 percent in the relevant markets during the years immediately prior to the merger.

We believe it to be desirable to observe a general rule in potential competition cases that firms possessing no more than 10 percent in a target market (where, as here, the 4-firm concentration is approximately 60 percent or more) should ordinarily be presumed to be toehold or foothold firms. This presumption by no means is conclusive and the inference of lack of anticompetitive effects flowing from acquisition of such a firm can be rebutted in particular cases.[8] The 10 percent

Ct. 3199 (1974), the district court held that acquisition of Tidewater Oil Company by the Phillips Petroleum was not a toehold or foothold acquisition. Tidewater ranked seventh in the sale of motor gasoline in California (the relevant market) and had a 6-7 percent share of the market. The Court specifically found that "Phillips did not use Tidewater as a small base from which to expand its operations and did not have a substantial need to build upon the acquisition demarcation is supported by the prior Commission cases, as noted, and is not inconsistent with the Department of Justice Merger Guidelines.[9]

In this case, the presumption is supported by the record which shows that the acquisition of Gindy by Budd engendered increased capacity and other procompetitive forces, the very effects the toehold doctrine was designed to elicit.

The record shows that to compete optimally in this industry, a producer of trailers must have a network of plants and sales and service facilities geographically dispersed throughout the country, a broad line of truck trailer products, and capability to provide financing of customers' purchases of trailers on competitive terms (Tr. 257-58, 372-73, 397, 752, 674-75, 1134, 1316, 1319, 1321-23, 1425, 1428-31, 1491-92, 1644, 1794). Geographic dispersion of plants and outlets is required for several reasons. Customers of trailer manufacturers have been getting larger and so have the size of their orders. Freight costs of delivering are substantial and it is difficult to compete in States which are far distant from a manufacturing plant (Tr. 1328-29, 1618-19, 1662, 1773-74). Branch factories and outlets provide greater capacity to fill large orders, take trades, and provide service and repair facilities (Tr. 1728, 1768-69, 1793).

We have already noted that at the time of acquisition Fruehauf and Trailmobile were the only producers of trailers and containers that operated on a nationwide basis. Their product lines were far broader than other producers of van trailers and chassis (Tr. 902, 1318, 1427-28, 1583, 1720, 1873). Fruehauf has been recognized as the dominant market factor in setting financing terms to customers (Tr. 502, 518-19, 675, and see Fruehauf Trailer Co., [67] F.T.C. 878, 920-924 (1965)). Fruehauf, Trailmobile and Strick were offering more attractive finance terms than Gindy was able to obtain or offer.

In the opinion of Gindy officials, without the financial assistance Budd made available to Gindy subsequent to the acquisition it is doubtful that Gindy would have substantially augmented its preacquisition level of operations (Tr. 515, 274-75; 1228-29, 1242). Budd officials viewed Gindy as undercapitalized in comparison to Fruehauf and other major trailer companies, and that with Budd's help it could grow to become a more effective competitor, particularly in the area of financing trailer sales, and could be expanded from a regional to a national competitor (see, e.g. CX 10F, CX 69E, Tr. 1050-51).

* * *" id. at 1258. As indicated in the discussion in the text the facts are quite different with respect to Budd's acquisition of Gindy.

[9] The Guidelines states in pertinent part (¶18): "[T]he Department will ordinarily challenge any merger between one of the most likely entrants into the market and; * * * (iii) one of the four largest firms in a market in which the shares of the eight largest firms amount to approximately 75% or more, provided the merging firm's share of the market amounts to approximately 10% or more." 1 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. ¶4510. Two refinements noted in subparagraph (iv)—that challenges will also be made (A) where the merging firm's share of the market is not insubstantial and there are no more than one or two likely entrants into the market or (B) the merging firm is a rapidly growing firm—are not applicable here. The record does not support a finding that there are no more than one or two likely entrants in the trailer business. And, as indicated in this opinion, there is substantial reason to believe that Gindy had reached a plateau in its growth absent a means of raising capital at a cost lower than was available to it in 1968.

Subsequent to the acquisition, Budd established a financial corporation to help finance the van trailers sold by Gindy as well as sales by other Budd divisions. By virtue of this finance subsidiary Gindy was able to finance trailer sales on more competitive terms. Furthermore, for the first time it was able to provide customer finance on container sales, which theretofore had been considered too risky by commercial banks. This enabled Gindy to compete in container sales and financing with Fruehauf and Trailmobile (Tr. 515, 1141-43, 1153, 1235, 1322-23, 1380-81). The amount of funds available to finance Gindy customers was increased by $32 million (I.D. finding 163).

In addition, Budd enlarged Gindy's Eagle plant and increased its capacity by 40 percent at a cost to Budd of $1.75 million. An addition to the Lebanon plant was made by Budd and a cost to it of $500,000. The record supports the ALJ's finding that these alterations made Gindy by 1971 "a more efficient van trailer producer than it was at the time of acquisition" (I.D. finding 164).

At the time of the hearing, Budd had also purchased land in Chicago for a new midwestern Gindy plant and had plans to erect two new van trailer plants (CX 99B). Since the acquisition, Gindy has also opened six additional branch outlets and had plans to open four more. Budd provided between $3 and $4 million to enable Gindy to open these factory branches (Tr. 1389). Under the direction of Budd, Gindy has broadened the types of trailers which it offers and has improved the design of the Gindy van trailer.

Gindy has been viewed by its competitors as being a stronger and more effective competitor subsequent to the acquisition. A former executive vice president of Fruehauf, who viewed Gindy prior to the acquisition as "just one of the smaller competitors on the east coast," testified:

> Q. Now, did this situation change after the acquisition of Budd-of Gindy by Budd?
> A. Yes. Gindy opened up some new plants—branches, built another plant, got into the container business, got into the freight business to a greater extent, got into the container chassis business; were just more of a factor. They introduced a broader line of—I think they started introducing open tops; a better line of and more competitive line of refrigerator trailers. About that time, as I recall, Gene Hindin came with them and he did a fine job of redesigning, taking some cost out of the trailer and changing their whole approach toward manufacturing—quality control and everything else when he came in.
> And as a result, they firmed up and broadened their scope. They moved into Chicago a little more strongly, out into the west coast. The first time we started feeling their sales ability was down in the Dallas area and St. Louis (1441-1442).

The law judge, relying on the foregoing and other post acquisition changes made by Budd in the Gindy Company, concluded that the acquisition also violated Section 7 because it entrenched Gindy and raised entry barriers. Contrary to the conclusions reached by the ALJ, there is nothing in the record to support the view that the acquisition has raised existing entry barriers or has otherwise "entrenched" Gindy. Between 1968 and 1972 Gindy's dollar sales of trailers increased from $35.7 million to $56.5 million, its share of that market increasing from 6.01 percent to 7.07 percent. But it appears that Gindy's gain was Fruehauf's loss. Fruehauf's market share dropped during the same period of time from 28.88 percent to 23.28 percent. (The aggregate share of the three leading firms also declined, from 52.47 percent to 47.61 percent.) Representatives of smaller firms testified that they did not believe the acquisition had made it more difficult for them to grow. For the most part the smaller trailer manufacturers increased their respective shares of the market after 1968.[10] Although these post-acquisition data do not conclusively settle the question, clearly these are not the trends of a less competitive market.

In view of our finding that the acquisition did not lessen competition, the initial decision will be vacated and the complaint dismissed.

ORDER AFFIRMING DENIAL OF RESPONDENTS' MOTIONS BASED ON ASSERTIONS OF RES JUDICATA AND COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL

By leave of the administrative law judge, respondents have filed four applications for review of his "Order Denying Respondents' Motions and Related Requests Relying Upon Assertions of Res Judicata and Collateral Estoppel" dated Mar. 5, 1975. Essentially, respondents argue that certain issues raised in this proceeding have already been conclusively determined against the Government in previous actions brought against them by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. Although he denied the motions, the law judge determined that they raised issues which met the criteria for interlocutory review set forth in Section 3.23(b) of the Commission's Rules of Practice. The Commission agrees and has determined to place the order of Mar. 5, 1975 on its docket for review.

The law judge's order was based primarily on his conclusion that judicial determinations in actions brought by the Department of Justice under the antitrust laws are not binding in subsequent actions brought by the Federal Trade Commission. His analysis of the relevant statutes convinced him that Congress did not intend that the public interest in vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws be thwarted by strict application of the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel. Furthermore, he found respondents' contention that privity always exists between officers of the United States Government too simplistic, in that it ignores the plain fact that the Justice Department is not authorized to enforce the Federal Trade Commission Act, which is the basis for the instant proceeding.

For the reasons stated in the law judge's thorough analysis, we are inclined to agree with the above conclusions. However, there is no need to rest our decision in this matter solely on a novel question of statutory interpretation. Even assuming the conclusive effect of the Justice Department's antitrust actions on the Commission, the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel are inapplicable since the specific cases upon which respondents rely do not involve the same issues and charges which are raised by the instant matter.

The consent settlements cited by respondents Standard Oil Company of California and Atlantic Richfield Company were, at most, determinations that the acquisitions in question, under the conditions set forth in the agreements with the Justice Department, did not significantly lessen competition within the meaning of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. This is entirely different from the questions raised in the instant matter as to whether these companies and six other respondents have pursued "a common course of action" which inhibited competition.

Similarly inapplicable to the instant matter is the provision contained in the agreement between the Justice Department and respondents Texaco, Inc., Exxon Corporation, and Gulf Oil Corporation,[1] settling the so-called Cartel Cases.[2] The provision purports to bar plaintiff, which respondents vigorously argue includes the entire United States Government, from reasserting "any claim or charge * * * made by plaintiff in the complaint or otherwise in this action." Assuming, arguendo, that the Justice Department has the authority to bargain away the statutory duty of the Commission to make a determination as to the public interest in challenging alleged illegal acts and practices, the two matters involve clearly different "claims and charges." The Cartel Cases charged the above companies and others with conspiracies to violate Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 73 of the Wilson Tariff Act, whereas the instant matter, as noted above, charges a different group of companies with "pursuing a common course of action" in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[1] These respondents are joined in appealing the law judge's decision regarding the Cartel Cases by respondent Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

[2] United States v. Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), 60 Trade Cases ¶69,849 (S.D.N.Y. 1960), and United States v. Gulf Oil Corp., 1960 Trade Cases ¶69,851 (S.D.N.Y. 1960), as superseded by United States v. Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), 1969 Trade Cases ¶¶72,742, 72,743 (S.D.N.Y. 1968); United States v. The Texas Co., 1963 Trade Cases ¶70,819 (S.D.N.Y. 1963).

Finally, respondents plead the conclusive effect of two litigated matters. However, United States v. Arkansas Fuel Company, 1960 Trade Cases ¶69,619 (N.D. Okla. 1960), charging all respondents except Atlantic Richfield with criminal conspiracy, is clearly inapplicable to the instant civil action. Aside from the different nature of the charges themselves, the standard of proof must be at least as great in the subsequent action as in the former in order for res judicata or collateral estoppel to be applicable. Helvering v. Mitchell, 303 U.S. 391, 397 (1938). This requirement is not satisfied by the judge's remarks to the effect that the Government had failed to meet its burden by a wide margin, since such remarks are merely dicta and do not affect the standard of proof involved.

In the other litigated matter cited by respondents, United States v. Standard Oil Company (Indiana), 1964 Trade Cases ¶71,215 (N.D. Cal. 1964), the court dismissed a challenge to defendant's acquisition of Honolulu Oil Corporation. Respondent/defendant now argues that all of the court's findings of fact are binding upon the Commission, including those to the effect that the petroleum industry is highly competitive at all levels (Findings No. 109-150). However, it is well established that only the "ultimate facts" which are essential to the judgment are conclusive in subsequent actions. Yates v. United States, 354 U.S. 298, 337-38 (1957). It is difficult to determine to what extent, if any, the court based its decision on the broad conclusions asserted by respondent, but one fact which is clearly essential, and which could alone be the basis for the decision, is the conclusion in the memorandum accompanying the findings that the acquisition was "de minimis by any standard."

For the foregoing reasons,

It is ordered, That the administrative law judge's order of Mar. 5, 1975 be placed on the Commission's docket for review.

It is further ordered, That the aforesaid order be, and it hereby is, affirmed.

Commissioner Nye concurs in the result. He believes all respondents' motions are premature and should therefore be denied.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that TV Stereo City Freight Liquidators, Inc., a corporation, and Dennis R. LaVine, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have engaged in acts and practices contrary to the Commission's Trade Regulation Rule Relating to Deceptive Advertising as to Sizes of Viewable Pictures Shown by Television Receiving Sets (16 CFR 410), as amended, in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and have also engaged in acts and practices in violation of the provisions of the above-mentioned Acts, and the implementing regulation, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent TV Stereo City Freight Liquidators, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and formerly doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business formerly located at 5245 Marlton Pike, Pennsauken, N.J.

Respondent Dennis R. LaVine is an individual and is the principal officer of the corporate respondent. He formulated, directed and controlled the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is 31 Kendall Blvd., Oaklyn, N.J.

PAR. 2. Respondents were engaged in the advertising, offering for rental or sale, rental or sale and distribution of television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances or other articles of merchandise to the public at retail.

COUNT I

Alleging violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two, hereof, are incorporated by reference in Count I as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have caused their said merchandise, when rented or sold, to be shipped from their place of business in the State of New Jersey to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States, and maintained a substantial course of trade in said merchandise in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing the rental or purchase of certain television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances or other articles of merchandise, the respondents made numerous statements and representations by repeated advertisements inserted in newspapers of interstate circulation, and by oral statements and representations of their salesmen to prospective purchasers or renters with respect to their merchandise and services.

Typical and illustrative, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, separately and in connection with the oral statements and representations of respondents' salesmen to customers and prospective customers, the respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. By and through the use of the words "Comparative Retail Value $899.00. Our price only $699.00," and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, that said comparative retail value was the price at which the same merchandise was being offered for sale by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

2. By and through the use of the terms "Rent or Buy," "Pay Only $5.68," and other terms of similar import or meaning, that purchasers or renters of respondents' merchandise were being given a bona fide option of renting said merchandise on a week-to-week basis at the advertised rate.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The same merchandise was not offered for sale at the comparative price by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

2. Respondents did not offer to purchasers or renters of respondents' merchandise a bona fide option of renting the merchandise on a week-to-week basis at the advertised rate. To the contrary, the rental of any of respondents' merchandise required a $100 deposit and a minimum rental period of six months.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents made representations, separately and in connection with the oral statements and representations of respondents' salesmen to customers and prospective customers, concerning the size of viewable pictures shown by television receiving sets bought and distributed by them and thereby represented, directly or by implication, that the indicated size so described was the actual size of the viewable picture area measured on a single plane basis.

PAR. 8. In representing, directly or indirectly, the actual size of the viewable pictures shown by television receiving sets, respondents have represented television picture sizes that did not represent the horizontal dimension of the actual viewable picture area of the television receiving set.

PAR. 9. On Apr. 21, 1971, after due notice and hearing, the Commission promulgated its amendment of the trade regulation rule relating to the deceptive advertising of television picture sizes (31 F.R. 3342), which rule became effective on Jan. 1, 1967. This amendment of the Trade Regulation Rule relating to the Deceptive Advertising as to Sizes of Viewable Pictures Shown by Television Receiving Sets (16 CFR 410), as amended, became effective on Dec. 10, 1971. On the basis of its findings, as set out in the "Accompanying Statement of Basis and Purpose" of the said Trade Regulation Rule, the Commission determined that it constitutes an unfair method of competition and an unfair and deceptive act or practice to:

PAR. 10. Notice is hereby given that the presentation of evidence in the course of a hearing in this proceeding may be required to dispose of the issues that may arise as a result of the allegations contained in Paragraphs One through Four and Paragraphs Seven through Nine herein, and that if the issues presented as a result of the allegations contained in those paragraphs should be resolved in substantiation of such allegations, then the above trade regulation rule is relevant to the alleged practices of the respondents. Therefore, the respondents are given further notice that they may present evidence, according to Section 1.12(c) of the Commission's Procedures and Rules of Practice, to show that the above trade regulation rule is not applicable to the alleged acts or practices of respondents. If the Commission should find that the above rule is applicable to the alleged acts or practices of the respondents, then it will proceed to make its findings, conclusions, and final order in this proceeding on the basis of that rule. A copy of the rule and Accompanying Statement of Basis and Purpose, marked Appendix A, is attached hereto and made a part of this pleading.

PAR. 11. The aforesaid methods of competition and acts and practices of respondents, as alleged in Paragraph Seven hereof, were contrary to the provisions and requirements of the Commission's Trade Regulation Rule relating to Deceptive Advertising As To Sizes of Viewable Pictures Shown By Television Receiving Sets (16 CFR 410), as amended, and thereby constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of their business respondents were in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale or rental of television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances and other articles of merchandise of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

PAR. 13. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading, and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were true and into the purchase or rental of substantial quantities of respondents' merchandise by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 14. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violation of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two, hereof, are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 15. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, respondents in the ordinary course of business as aforesaid, and in connection with their credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, have caused customers to execute binding retail installment contracts, hereinafter referred to as the contracts. Respondents have not provided these customers with any other consumer credit cost disclosures.

By and through the use of these retail installment contracts, respondents in some instances:

1. Failed to disclose the sum of the cash price, all charges which are included in the amount financed but which are not part of the finance charge, and the finance charge, and to describe that sum as the "deferred payment price," as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(ii) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 16. In the ordinary course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents caused to be published advertisements to aid, promote and assist credit sales as "advertisement" and "credit sale" are defined in Regulation Z.

By and through the use of certain of said advertisements respondents:

1. Failed to make disclosures clearly, conspicuously, and in a meaningful sequence, and in the form and manner prescribed under Section 226.6(a) of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d) of Regulation Z.

2. Disclosed in a number of instances the amount of weekly payments computed to the amount of monthly payments without disclosing whether such payments will have to be made weekly or monthly if credit is extended. Failure to disclose such information has the ability and tendency to mislead or confuse customers in violation of Section 226.6(c) of Regulation Z.

3. Stated the amount of installment payment or period of payment scheduled to repay the indebtedness without also stating all the following items, in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) thereof:

(i) the cash price;

(ii) the amount of the downpayment or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;

(iii) the number, amount and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if credit is extended;

(iv) the amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate; and

(v) the deferred payment price.

PAR. 17. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failures to comply with the provisions of Regulation Z, constitute violations of that Act, and, pursuant to Section 108 thereof, respondents thereby violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INITIAL DECISION BY THOMAS F. HOWDER, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

JULY 17, 1975

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Commission issued a complaint on Jan. 7, 1975, charging respondents TV Stereo City Freight Liquidators, Inc., a corporation, and Dennis R. LaVine, individually and as an officer of said corporation, with unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The complaint also charged respondents with violating the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Said complaint and accompanying notice order were personally served on respondent LaVine on Feb. 21, 1975. Under Section 4.4(a)(1)(ii) of the Commission's Rules of Practice, service upon respondent LaVine constitutes valid service upon the respondent corporation. No answer or other response has been received, although answer was required within 30 days following service.

Section 3.12(c) of the Commission's Rules of Practice provides that failure to file answer within the time provided shall be deemed to constitute waiver of the right of appearance and to contest the allegations of the complaint. Further, this section authorizes the administrative law judge, without further notice to respondents, to find the facts to be as alleged in the complaint and to enter an initial decision containing such findings, appropriate conclusions, and order.

Pursuant to the above rule, complaint counsel on Apr. 8, 1975, moved that respondents be held in default for failure to answer the complaint. Complaint counsel's motion is hereby granted, and the following findings, conclusions and order are issued:

FINDINGS OF FACT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent TV Stereo City Freight Liquidators, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and formerly doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business formerly located at 5245 Marlton Pike, Pennsauken, N.J.

Respondent Dennis R. LaVine is an individual and is the principal officer of the corporate respondent. He formulated, directed and controlled the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is 31 Kendall Blvd., Oaklyn, N.J.

PAR. 2. Respondents were engaged in the advertising, offering for rental or sale, rental or sale and distribution of television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances or other articles of merchandise to the public at retail.

I

The findings set forth in Paragraphs One and Two are incorporated by reference into the following findings set forth in Paragraphs Three through Fourteen, inclusive.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have caused their said merchandise, when rented or sold, to be shipped from their place of business in the State of New Jersey to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States, and maintained a substantial course of trade in said merchandise in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing the rental or purchase of certain television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances or other articles of merchandise, the respondents made numerous statements and representations by repeated advertisements inserted in newspapers of interstate circulation, and by oral statements and representations of their salesmen to prospective purchasers or renters with respect to their merchandise and services.

Typical and illustrative, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

Rent or Buy
Scott 300 Watts
Pay only $5.68 weekly
Rent/Buy
Comparative retail value $899.

Our price Only $699.

Our price $469 with Free Stand.
Dumont Sheridan 25" Color,
Pay only $5.68 Weekly Rent/Buy,
Comparative retail value $899.
Our price only $699.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, separately and in connection with the oral statements and representations of respondents' salesmen to customers and prospective customers, the respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. By and through the use of the words "Comparative Retail Value $899. Our price only $699," and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, that said comparative retail value was the price at which the same merchandise was being offered for sale by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

2. By and through the use of the terms "Rent or Buy," "Pay Only

$5.68," and other terms of similar import or meaning, that purchasers or renters of respondents' merchandise were being given a bona fide option of renting said merchandise on a week-to-week basis at the advertised rate.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The same merchandise was not offered for sale at the comparative price by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

2. Respondents did not offer to purchasers or renters of respondents' merchandise a bona fide option of renting the merchandise on a week-to-week basis at the advertised rate. To the contrary, the rental of any of respondents' merchandise required a $100 deposit and a minimum rental period of six months.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business, respondents made representations, separately and in connection with the oral statements and representations of respondents' salesmen to customers and prospective customers, concerning the size of viewable pictures shown by television receiving sets bought and distributed by them and thereby represented, directly or by implication, that the indicated size so described was the actual size of the viewable picture area measured on a single plane basis.

PAR. 8. In representing, directly or indirectly, the actual size of the viewable pictures shown by television receiving sets, respondents have represented television picture sizes that did not represent the horizontal dimension of the actual viewable picture area of the television receiving set.

PAR. 9. On Apr. 21, 1971, after due notice and hearing, the Commission promulgated its amendment of the trade regulation rule relating to the deceptive advertising of television picture sizes (31 F.R. 3342), which rule became effective on Jan. 1, 1967. This amendment of the trade regulation rule relating to the Deceptive Advertising as to Sizes of Viewable Pictures Shown by Television Receiving Sets (16 CFR 410), as amended, became effective on Dec. 10, 1971. On the basis of its findings, as set out in the "Accompanying Statement of Basis and Purpose" of the said trade regulation rule, the Commission determined that it constitutes an unfair method of competition and an unfair and deceptive act or practice to:

> Use any figure or size designation to refer to the size of the picture shown by a television receiving set or the picture tube contained therein unless such indicated size is the actual size of the viewable picture area measured on a single plane basis. If the indicated size is other than the horizontal dimension of the actual viewable picture area such size designation shall be accompanied by a statement, in close connection and conjunction therewith, clearly and conspicuously showing the manner of measurement.

PAR. 10. Respondents were placed on notice by the complaint that they could present evidence in the course of a hearing in this proceeding as might be required to dispose of the issues that could arise as a result of the allegations contained in Paragraphs One through Four and Paragraphs Seven through Nine herein, and that if the issues presented as a result of the allegations contained in those Paragraphs should be resolved in substantiation of such allegations, then the above trade regulation rule would be relevant to the alleged practices of the respondents. The respondents were given further notice that they could present evidence, according to Section 1.12(c) of the Commission's Procedures and Rules of Practice, to show that the above trade regulation rule was not applicable to the alleged acts or practices of respondents, and that if the Commission should find that the above rule was applicable to the alleged acts or practices of the respondents, then it would proceed to make its findings, conclusions, and final order in this proceeding on the basis of that rule. A copy of the rule and Accompanying Statement of Basis and Purpose, marked Appendix A, was attached to the complaint and made a part of that pleading.

PAR. 11. The aforesaid methods of competition and acts and practices of respondents, as alleged in Paragraph Seven hereof, were contrary to the provisions and requirements of the Commission's trade regulation rule relating to Deceptive Advertising As To Sizes of Viewable Pictures Shown By Television Receiving Sets (16 CFR 410), as amended, and thereby constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of their business respondents were in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale or rental of television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances and other articles of merchandise of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

PAR. 13. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading, and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were true and into the purchase or rental of substantial quantities of respondents' merchandise by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 14. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

II

The findings set forth in Paragraphs One and Two are incorporated by reference into the following findings set forth in Paragraphs Fifteen through Seventeen, inclusive.

PAR. 15. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, respondents in the ordinary course of business as aforesaid, and in connection with their credit sales, as "credit sale" is defined in Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, have caused customers to execute binding retail installment contracts, hereinafter referred to as the contracts. Respondents have not provided these customers with any other consumer credit cost disclosures.

By and through the use of these retail installment contracts, respondents in some instances:

1. Failed to disclose the sum of the cash price, all charges which are included in the amount financed but which are not part of the finance charge, and the finance charge, and to describe that sum as the "deferred payment price," as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(ii) of Regulation Z.

PAR. 16. In the ordinary course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents caused to be published advertisements to aid, promote and assist credit sales as "advertisement" and "credit sale" are defined in Regulation Z.

By and through the use of certain of said advertisements respondents:

1. Failed to make disclosures clearly, conspicuously, and in a meaningful sequence, and in the form and manner prescribed under Section 226.6(a) of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d) of Regulation Z.

2. Disclosed in a number of instances the amount of weekly payments computed to the amount of monthly payments without disclosing whether such payments will have to be made weekly or monthly if credit is extended. Failure to disclose such information has the ability and tendency to mislead or confuse customers in violation of Section 226.6(c) of Regulation Z.

3. Stated the amount of installment payment or period of payment scheduled to repay the indebtedness without also stating all the following items, in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) thereof:

(i) the cash price;

(ii) the amount of the downpayment or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;

(iii) the number, amount and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if credit is extended;

(iv) the amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate; and

(v) the deferred payment price.

PAR. 17. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failures to comply with the provisions of Regulation Z, constitute violations of that Act, and, pursuant to Section 108 thereof, respondents thereby violated the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents TV Stereo City Freight Liquidators, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Dennis R. LaVine, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale or rental, sale or rental or distribution of television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances or any other articles of merchandise or services, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. (a) Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that by purchasing any of respondents' merchandise or services, customers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and a compared price for said merchandise or services in respondents' trade area unless a substantial number of the principal retail outlets in the trade area regularly sell said merchandise or services at the compared price or some higher price.

(b) Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that by purchasing any of respondents' merchandise or services, customers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and a compared value price for comparable merchandise, unless substantial sales of merchandise of like grade and quality are being made in the trade area at the compared price or a higher price and unless respondents have in good faith conducted a market survey or obtained a similar representative sample of prices in their trade area which established the validity of said compared price and it is clearly and conspicuously disclosed that the comparison is with merchandise or services of like grade and quality.

(c) Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing:

(1) that any amount is respondents' usual and customary retail price for merchandise unless such amount is the price at which the merchandise has been usually and customarily sold at retail by respondents in the recent regular course of business.

(2) that any saving is afforded in the purchase of merchandise from the respondents' retail price unless the price at which the merchandise is offered constitutes a reduction from the price at which said merchandise is usually and customarily sold at retail by the respondents in the recent regular course of business.

2. Failing to maintain and produce for inspection or copying for a period of three (3) years, adequate records (a) which disclose the facts upon which any savings claims, sale claims and other similar representations as set forth in Paragraph 1., of this order are based, and (b) from which the validity of any savings claims, sale claims and similar representations can be determined.

3. Representing, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, that an individual can rent any of respondents' merchandise for any specified amount and any period of time without clearly and conspicuously disclosing in immediate conjunction with such offer, the terms, conditions or limitations of respondents' rental plans; or misrepresenting, in any manner, the advantages, amounts, sales, time period, terms, conditions or limitations of respondents' rental plans.

4. Using any figure or measurement to designate or describe, directly or by implication, the size of the picture tube with which their television receiving sets are equipped which is greater than the horizontal measurement of the viewable area of the tube on a single plane basis, unless it is conspicuously disclosed in immediate connection therewith that said figure or measurement is the diagonal measurement, when such is the fact; or an accurate specification of the viewable area of the tube, in square inches, is conspicuously disclosed in immediate connection with such figure or measurement.

It is further ordered, That respondents TV Stereo City Freight Liquidators, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Dennis R. LaVine, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with any extension of consumer credit or advertisement to aid, promote, or assist directly or indirectly any extension of consumer credit, as "consumer credit" and "advertisement" are defined in Regulation Z (12 CFR §226) of the Truth in Lending Act (Pub.L. 90-321, 15 U.S.C. §1601, et seq.), do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Failing to disclose the sum of the cash price, all charges which are included in the amount financed but which are not part of the finance charge, and the finance charge, and to describe that sum as "deferred payment price" as required by Section 226.8(c)(8)(ii) of Regulation Z.

2. Failing in such advertising to make disclosures clearly, conspicuously, and in a meaningful sequence, and in the form and manner prescribed under Section 226.6(a) of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d) of Regulation Z.

3. Representing the amount of weekly payments computed to monthly payments, unless the customer is told whether he will have to make payments weekly or monthly; or stating, utilizing, or placing any additional information or explanations with any disclosure required by Regulation Z so as to mislead or confuse the customer or contradict, obscure, or detract attention from the required information, as required by Section 226.6(c) of Regulation Z.

4. Representing in any such advertisement, directly or by implication, that no downpayment is required, the amount of the downpayment or the amount of any installment payment, either in dollars or as a percentage, the dollar amount of any finance charge, the number of installments or the period of repayment, or that there is no charge for credit, unless all of the following items are clearly and conspicuously stated, in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) of Regulation Z:

(i) the cash price;

(ii) the amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;

(iii) the number, amount, and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended;

(iv) the amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate; and

(v) the deferred payment price.

5. Failing in any consumer credit transaction or advertisement, to make all disclosures, determined in accordance with Section 226.4 and 226.5 of Regulation Z, in the manner, form and amount required by Sections 226.6, 226.7, 226.8, 226.9 and 226.10 of Regulation Z.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall maintain for at least a one (1) year period, following the effective date of this order, copies of all advertisements, including newspaper, radio and television advertisements, direct mail and in-store solicitation literature, and any other such promotional material utilized for the purpose of obtaining leads for the sale or rental of television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances or any other articles of merchandise or services, utilized in the advertising, promotion or sale or rental of television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances or any other merchandise or services.

It is further ordered, That respondents, for a period of one (1) year from the effective date of this order, shall provide each advertising agency utilized by respondents and each newspaper publishing company, television or radio station or other advertising media which is utilized by the respondents to obtain leads for the sale or rental of television sets, radios, stereos, radio/television/stereo combinations, electric appliances or any other merchandise or services, with a copy of the Commission's news release setting forth the terms of this order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondents deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future personnel of respondents engaged in the offering for sale, sale of any product, consummation of any extension of consumer credit or in any aspect of preparation, creation, or placing of advertising, and that respondents secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least 30 days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

FINAL ORDER

The administrative law judge filed his initial decision in this matter on July 17, 1975, finding respondents to have engaged in the acts and practices as alleged in the complaint and entering a cease-and-desist order against respondents. A copy of the initial decision and order was served on the respondents on Aug. 7, 1975. No appeal was taken from the initial decision.

The Commission having now determined that the matter should not be placed on its own docket for review, and that the initial decision should become effective as provided in Section 3.51(a) of the Commission's Rules of Practice,

It is ordered, That the initial decision and order contained therein shall become effective on Sept. 8, 1975; and

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a written report, signed by the respondents, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR RECONSIDERATION

Respondent Ash Grove Cement Company ("Ash Grove") has moved, pursuant to Section 3.55 of the rules of practice, for reconsideration of the Commission's final order and opinion, dated June 24, 1975. [85 F.T.C. 1121]

Section 3.55 provides that a petition for reconsideration "* * * must be confined to new questions raised by the decision or final order and upon which the petitioner had no opportunity to argue before the Commission."

Respondent claims that the Commission's order raises such a question:

> namely, conceding arguendo that Ash Grove's acquisition of Lee's Summit [Ready-Mixed Concrete & Materials Company] and Fordyce [Concrete, Inc.] violated the Clayton Act, whether an order of divestiture is appropriate and in the public interest in view of substantial evidence in the record which shows that the challenged acquisitions resulted in consumer benefits in the form of lower prices and a vigorous enhancement of price competition in the sale of portland cement and ready-mixed concrete in the "Kansas City" area.

Respondent, however, had an opportunity, which it exercised, to argue before the Commission its claim that the acquisitions benefited consumers and enhanced price competition. See respondent's brief on appeal at 30-38. The Commission ordered divestiture of Fordyce and Lee's Summit only after a full review of the record, including the extensive briefing and oral argument on appeal, and a consideration of all of respondent's contentions raised therein.

It is ordered, That respondent's petition for reconsideration be, and it hereby is, denied.

In the Matter of

Docket 9033. Order, Sept. 9, 1975

Denial of application of Investor Protective League, Inc., for review of administrative law judge's order denying its motion to intervene.

Appearances

For the Commission: Thomas F. McNerney, William J. Murphy III and Charles G. Brown II.

For the respondents: Jerome Schestack, Schnader, Harrison, Segal & Lewis and Irving Kagan, Philadelphia, Pa., for Hertz Corporation. Alan S. Ward, Baker, Hostetler, Frost & Towers, Wash., D.C. for Avis Rent-A-Car System, Inc. Michael P. Sullivan, Gray, Plant, Mooty & Anderson, Minneapolis, Minn., J. Wallace Adair, Howery, Simon, Baker & Murchison, Wash., D.C. and Robert W. Bird, Minneapolis, Minn., all for National Car Rental System, Inc.

Order Denying Application for Review

The administrative law judge, on July 23, 1975, denied a motion to intervene filed by Investor Protective League, Inc., ("Investor") pursuant to Section 3.14 of the rules of practice. On Aug. 6, 1975, Investor filed an application for review of the law judge's order under Section 3.23(a).

Before the Commission will permit intervention "it must be demonstrated that (1) the persons seeking such intervention desire to raise substantial issues of law or fact which would not otherwise be properly raised or argued, and (2) the issues thus raised are of sufficient importance and immediacy to warrant an additional expenditure of the Commission's limited resources on a necessarily longer and more complicated proceeding in that case, when considered in light of other important matters pending before the Commission" Firestone Tire [Rubber Co., 77 F.T.C. 1666, 1669 (1970).

Investor is apparently a membership corporation consisting of consumer renters of automobiles from respondents. In support of its motion before the administrative law judge, Investor claimed that it had filed a class action against respondents in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York (Docket No. 75 Civil 940) and that the Commission's determination will have a significant impact on Investor's lawsuit. Investor also noted that if it were made a party to the proceedings before the Commission it would have available evidence before the Commission for use in its private lawsuit. Finally, Investor suggested that it has an interest in "the type of relief granted."

Investor, however, has failed to show that it will raise before the Commission any issues, substantial or otherwise, that would not otherwise be properly raised or argued. The Commission, therefore, cannot see any reason why it should exercise its discretion to review the law judge's order. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the application of Investor Protective League, Inc., for review of the order of the administrative law judge denying its motion to intervene be, and it hereby is, denied.

Docket 8942. Complaint, Nov. 16, 1973-Decision, Sept. 10, 1975

For the respondents: George Maislen, Freeport, N.Y.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Lifetime Filter Equipment Corp., a corporation, and Peter A. Cattano, Sr., individually, and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Lifetime Filter Equipment Corp. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 6 Brooklyn Ave., Freeport, N.Y.

Respondent Peter A. Cattano, Sr. is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution to dealers and the public of products used in connection with swimming pools, including, but not limited to filters, diving boards, handrails, steps, pumps, chemicals, piping, heaters and instruments.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, their said products, when sold, to be shipped from their place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States, and maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said products in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products by dealers and consumers, respondents have made, and are now making, numerous statements and representations in advertising and promotional material with respect to the nature and limitations of their warranty, the durability of their products, and their business affiliations.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

LIFETIME is revolutionizing
the swimming pool market
THE DYNAMIC NEW LIFETIME FILTER
HPF 1000

Unconditional GUARANTEE
Lifetime Filter

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the aforesaid statements and representations and others of similar import and meaning, but not specifically set out herein, respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

1. Since the swimming pool filters manufactured and sold by respondents are the products of a corporation denominated Lifetime Filter Equipment Corp., said filters are designed to be operative for the lifetime of the original owner.

2. The swimming pool filters sold by respondents are unconditionally guaranteed.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The swimming pool filters sold by respondents are not lifetime filters since they are not designed to last for the lifetime of the purchaser and the guarantee offered by respondents is limited to a maximum duration of five years.

2. The swimming pool filters sold by respondents are not unconditionally guaranteed. The filters are guaranteed for a period of five years. The first year of the guarantee provides for replacement of parts at no charge to the user. The remaining four years of the guarantee provide for parts replacement on a sliding scale of charges. Therefore, the guarantee provided by respondents is subject to conditions and limitations.

Therefore, the statements and representations, as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof, were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and are now, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of products used in connection with swimming pools, including, but not limited to, filters and other swimming pool accessories.

PAR. 8. The use by the respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements and representations, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore issued its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereof with violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the respondents having been served with a copy of that complaint; and

The Commission having withdrawn the matter from adjudication for the purpose of considering settlement by the entry of a consent order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as set forth in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Lifetime Filter Equipment Corp. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 140 E. Merrick Rd., in the Village of Freeport, State of New York.

2. Representing, directly or by an implication, that any product sold by respondents will last or endure for a "lifetime" or for any other period beyond what can reasonably be expected for said product.

3. Using, in any manner, in conjunction with the model designations or specifications of any product sold by the respondents the word lifetime or any such word or phrase which exaggerates the life expectancy of the product.

4. Furnishing to dealers or any other persons, any written, printed, or photographic material in which the word lifetime is used in any manner in describing any product sold by the respondents.

5. Representing, directly or by implication, that any of respondents' products are warranted or guaranteed, unless:

(1) the nature and extent of the warranty or guarantee, the identity of the warrantor or guarantor and the manner in which the warrantor or guarantor will perform thereunder are clearly and conspicuously disclosed in immediate conjunction therewith, and,

(2) the guarantor does in fact perform all of the actual and represented obligations and requirements, directly or impliedly represented, under the terms of each such warranty or guarantee.

It is further ordered, That the prohibitions contained in provision 1. of this order shall become effective as of Oct. 1, 1975.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall forthwith deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future personnel and distributors of respondents engaged in the advertising, offering for sale or sale of respondents' products, installations or services, and that respondents secure a signed statement acknowledging the receipt of said order from each such person.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal

Trade Commission, having reason to believe that North American Pools, Inc., a corporation, and John Maione, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent North American Pools, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business located at 547 Union Blvd., Totowa, N.J.

Respondent John Maione is an individual and is an officer of North American Pools, Inc. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His home address is 253 Fifth St., Palisades Park, N.J.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale and distribution of swimming pools and swimming pool accessories.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, the aforementioned swimming pools and swimming pool accessories, when sold, to be shipped from the places of business of their supplier located in the United States to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State from which such shipments originate.

There is now, and has been, at all times mentioned herein a substantial and continuous course of trade in said swimming pools and swimming pool accessories in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products, respondents have made statements and representations with respect thereto in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation, and by advertisements transmitted over television stations located in some States of the United States having sufficient power to carry such broadcasts across State lines, and by oral statements and representations made by respondents, their representatives, agents or employees with respect to the nature and limitations of their offers, their prices, their purchases, savings, and the quality of their products.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

* * * Unconditionally guaranteed for 10 years * * * Swimming Pools are maintenance Free * * * Usual Selling Price * * * excess of $4000 * * * Reduced Prices * * * use of Pools as models or demonstrators.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the aforesaid statements and representations and others of similar import and meaning, but not specifically set out herein, respondents have represented and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

1. The offers set out in their advertisements are bona fide offers to sell swimming pools of the kind therein described and on the terms and conditions stated.

2. Their advertised offers of a swimming pool for $489, $589 or $789 is a special or sale price and respondents' purchasers or potential purchasers are being offered a price for said pool which would effect a savings amounting to the difference between the special or sale price and some higher price at which such pool is usually and customarily sold.

3. Swimming pools sold by respondents are maintenance free.

4. Some swimming pools sold by respondents are unconditionally guaranteed for a period of ten years.

5. Certain swimming pools sold by respondents are usually sold at prices higher than those offered to potential purchasers and therefore respondents' purchasers are being offered a special or bargain price for said pools which would effect a savings amounting to the difference between the usual and customary price and the price at which the pools are being sold.

6. After the installation of their pool is completed, some purchasers who permit their pools to be used for demonstration and advertising purposes by respondents in selling pools to other persons would receive an allowance or reduction in price.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The offers set out in respondents' advertisements are not bona fide offers to sell swimming pools of the kind therein described at the prices or on the terms and conditions stated but are made for the purpose of obtaining leads to persons interested in purchasing said pools. After obtaining such leads, respondents' salesmen or representatives call upon such persons and disparage respondents' advertised swimming pools and otherwise discourage the purchase thereof and attempt to sell and frequently do sell different and more expensive swimming pools.

2. The advertised swimming pools are not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices and savings are not thereby afforded to purchasers from respondents' usual and customary selling price.

3. The swimming pools sold by respondents are not maintenance free.

4. The swimming pools sold by respondents are not warranted in every respect without conditions or limitations for a period of ten years or any other period of time. Such warranty or guarantee as may be provided is subject to numerous terms, conditions and limitations with respect to the duration of the warranty or guarantee. The purchaser is not informed of the nature and extent of the warranty or guarantee, the identity of the warrantor or guarantor and the manner in which the warrantor or guarantor will perform thereunder until after the installation of the swimming pool.

5. Certain swimming pools sold by respondents have not usually been sold at prices higher than those offered to potential purchasers. Respondents use the stated higher price to mislead potential purchasers into the belief that they are receiving a special or discount price. Respondents do not have a usual and customary selling price for these pools and the prices at which these pools are sold is often substantially below the stated price and varies from purchaser to purchaser depending upon the resistance of the particular purchaser.

6. After the installation of the swimming pool sold by respondents is completed, the purchaser's pool will not, in most instances, be used for demonstration or advertising purposes by respondents. As a result of allowing, or agreeing to allow their pools to be used as demonstrators or models, purchasers are not granted reduced prices or allowances.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Four hereof, were, and are, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business, and in furtherance of a sales program to induce the purchase of their swimming pools and swimming pool accessories, respondents and their salesmen or representatives have engaged in the following additional unfair, false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices:

In a substantial number of instances, through the use of the false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices set forth in Paragraphs Four through Six above, respondents or their salesmen or representatives have induced purchasers to sign contracts upon initial contact by not giving the purchaser sufficient time to carefully consider the purchase and consequences thereof.

PAR. 8. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' swimming pools and swimming pool accessories by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been in substantial competition, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, with corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of swimming pools and other products of the same general kind and nature as sold by respondents.

PAR. 10. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent North American Pools, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business located at 547 Union Blvd., Totowa, N.J.

Respondent John Maione is an individual and is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of said corporation and his address is the same as that of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents, North American Pools, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and John Maione, individually and as an officer of the aforesaid corporation and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, distribution or installation of swimming pools or any other product, in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Advertising or offering for sale any products for the purpose of obtaining leads or prospects for the sale of different products unless the advertised products are capable of adequately performing the function for which they are offered, and respondents maintain an adequate and readily available stock of said products.

2. Using any advertising, sales plan or procedure involving the use of false, deceptive or misleading statements or representations designed to obtain leads or prospects for the sale of other merchandise.

3. Representing, directly or indirectly, that any products or services are offered for sale when such is not a bona fide offer to sell said products or services.

4. Disparaging, any product, installation or service which is advertised or offered for sale by respondents.

5. Representing, directly or by implication, that any price for a swimming pool or other product or service sold by respondents is a special, preseason or sale price, when such price does not constitute a significant reduction from an established selling price at which such swimming pool, product or service has been sold in substantial quantities by respondents in the recent, regular course of business.

6. Representing, in any manner, that the swimming pools or any other products sold by respondents are maintenance free or require no periodic servicing or inspection.

7. Representing, directly or indirectly, that any of the respondents' products, installations or services are warranted or guaranteed, unless the nature and extent of the warranty or guarantee, the identity of the warrantor or guarantor and the manner in which the warrantor or guarantor will perform thereunder are clearly and conspicuously disclosed in immediate conjunction therewith; and unless respondents promptly and fully perform all of their obligations and requirements, directly or impliedly represented under the terms of each such warranty or guarantee.

8. Representing that by purchasing any merchandise, purchasers are afforded savings amounting to the difference between respondents' stated price and respondents' former price unless such merchandise has been sold or offered for sale at retail in good faith for a reasonably substantial period of time in the recent, regular course of business.

9. Misrepresenting, in any manner, the amount of savings available to purchasers or prospective purchasers of any merchandise sold or offered for sale by respondents.

10. Representing, directly or indirectly, that any price is reduced from respondents' former price if records customarily maintained by respondents fail to establish that such price constitutes a significant reduction from the price at which such merchandise has sold in substantial quantities or offered for sale in good faith for a reasonably substantial period of time, by respondents in the recent, regular course of their business.

11. Misrepresenting, directly or indirectly, that the pool of any of respondents' purchasers or prospective purchasers will be used for any type of advertising, demonstration or model or that as a result of such use, respondents' purchasers or prospective purchasers will be granted reduced prices or will receive a discount on the purchase price of said pool.

12. Failing to furnish the buyer with a fully completed receipt or copy of any contract pertaining to such sale at the time of its execution, which is in the same language, e.g., Spanish, as that principally used in the oral sales presentation and which shows the date of the transaction and contains the name and address of the seller, and in immediate proximity to the space reserved in the contract for the signature of the buyer or on the front page of the receipt if a contract is not used and in bold face type of a minimum size of 10 points, a statement in substantially the following form:

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to all operating personnel, agents or representatives concerned with the promotion, sale and distribution of swimming pools or any other article of merchandise and secure from such person a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order.

It is further ordered, That no provision of this order shall be construed in any way to annul, invalidate, repeal, terminate, modify or exempt respondents from complying with agreements, orders or directives of any kind obtained by any other agency or act as a defense to actions instituted by municipal or state regulatory agencies. COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and of the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Tony Evans Motors, Inc., a corporation, doing business as Tony Evans Mobile Home Show, Capital Mobile Home Show, Mobile Home Show, and Repo Information Center, and Anthony P. Evans, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts and the implementing regulation promulgated under the Truth in Lending Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Tony Evans Motors, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by the virtue of the laws of the State of Nevada, with its principal office and place of business located at 3290 Kietzke Lane, Reno, Nev.

Individual respondent Anthony P. Evans is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the policy, acts and practices of the corporation, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising and sale to the public of mobile homes and furniture and accessories designed for use in mobile homes.

PAR. 3. In the ordinary course of their business as aforesaid, respondents regularly arrange for and offer to arrange for the extension of consumer credit as "consumer credit" and "arrange for the extension of credit" are defined in Regulation Z, the implementing regulation of the Truth in Lending Act, duly promulgated by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

PAR. 4. Subsequent to July 1, 1969, respondents, in the ordinary course of their business as aforesaid, have published and broadcast and are causing to be published and broadcast advertisements of their goods and services, as "advertisement" is defined in Regulation Z. These advertisements aid, promote, or assist directly or indirectly extensions of consumer credit in connection with the sale of these goods and services. By and through the use of the advertisements, respondents:

1. State the rate of finance charge without describing that rate as the "annual percentage rate," in violation of Section 226.10(d)(1) of Regulation Z.

2. State the amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required and/or the amount of the monthly installment payments which can be arranged in connection with a consumer credit transaction, without, in all cases, also stating all of the following items, in terminology prescribed under Section 226.8 of Regulation Z, as required by Section 226.10(d)(2) thereof:

(i) The cash price;

(ii) The amount of the downpayment required or that no downpayment is required, as applicable;

(iii) The number, amount and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the indebtedness if the credit is extended;

(iv) The amount of the finance charge expressed as an annual percentage rate; and

(v) The deferred payment price.

PAR. 5. Pursuant to Section 103(q) of the Truth in Lending Act, respondents' aforesaid failures to comply with the provisions of Regulation Z constitute violations of that Act and pursuant to Section 108 thereof, respondents have thereby violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the San Francisco Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Truth in Lending Act and the implementing regulation promulgated thereunder; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Acts, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Orlando of Calabria, Inc., a corporation, trading also as Orlando of Italy, and Orlando Jiacinto, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Orlando of Calabria, Inc., trading also as Orlando of Italy, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located at 2 W. Fordham Road, Bronx, N.Y.

Respondent Orlando Jiacinto is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents operate the Orlando of Italy salon and promote on their own behalf, among others, the implant hair replacement system hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "system." The system involves a surgical procedure whereby synthetic sutures (prolene) or similar synthetic thread are stitched into the scalps of respondents' customers. Hairpieces are then attached to the suture loops. Respondents sell, install and maintain the system, except that the surgical procedure itself is performed by a medical doctor.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents promote the system by advertising in newspapers of general circulation which are distributed across State lines, and by mailing promotional literature to prospective customers who respond to such advertising. As a result of such newspaper advertising, and literature mailing, respondent has maintained a substantial course of trade in commerce, as "commerce" is used in Sections 5 and 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and as a result of such newspaper advertising and mailing of promotional literature, have disseminated and caused to be disseminated false advertisements by United States mails, within the meaning of Section 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of the hair implant replacement system, respondents, directly have made numerous statements and representations in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general circulation and in other promotional literature. Typical of the statements and representations contained in said advertisements and promotional literature, but not all inclusive, are the following:

> Our new medical process gives you a full head of permanent hair.
> Permanence and the completely natural look.
> You can really shampoo, swim, dive, ski, etc.
> So natural a procedure that your friends will think you are growing new hair.
> You can participate in all activities!
> Your new hair looks, feels, and functions like your own.
> * * * Can be restyled easily with a pocket comb.
> * * * It won't come off.

PAR. 5. Through the use of the above advertisements, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, and by oral statements and representations made by employees and agents of the respondents, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. The implant system does not involve wearing a hairpiece, or toupee.

2. The hairpiece applied becomes part of the anatomy like natural hair, and has characteristics of natural hair, including the following:

(a) The same appearance as natural hair upon normal observation and upon extreme close-up examination.

(b) It may be cared for like natural hair, particularly in that actions such as washing, combing, brushing and mussing may be performed on it in the same manner as might a person with natural hair.

(c) The wearer may engage in physical activities with as much disregard for his hairpiece as might a person with natural hair.

3. After the system has been applied, the wearer can care for it himself, and will not have to seek professional or skilled assistance in maintaining the system, and that the customer will not incur charges over and above the charge for installing the system.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The system does involve the wearing of a hairpiece or toupee.

2. The hairpiece applied does not become part of the anatomy like natural hair. The system involves the suturing of synthetic threads into the scalp of the recipient by a surgical procedure and which may be rejected by the body. The hairpiece differs from natural hair in many respects, including the following:

(a) It does not have the same appearance as natural hair in a substantial number of instances. It is often discernible as a hairpiece or toupee upon normal observation, and upon extreme close-up examination.

(b) It cannot be cared for like regular hair but requires special care and handling. Strong pulling on the hair, such as may be expected to occur in washing, combing, brushing, and mussing, can cause pain because of the pressure exerted on the sutures in the scalp, may cause bleeding, and may cause the sutures to pull out. As a consequence, washing the hair and scalp is difficult. Because washing is difficult, foreign particles and dead skin tissue tend to accumulate beneath the implant hair application and become a significant source of irritation. The hair styles into which the hairpiece may be combed or brushed without professional treatments are limited.

(c) The wearer may not engage in physical activities with as much disregard for his hairpiece as might a person with natural hair. The wearer must at all times be careful that the hair does not pull or get pulled, or become tangled, or strained. Discomfort and pain may be caused by common actions, such as rolling the head on a pillow during sleep.

3. The wearer cannot in most instances care for the hairpiece himself; he must seek professional or skilled assistance on many occasions. Medical problems associated with the surgery or the continuing presence of synthetic thread in the scalp may require subsequent visits to a medical doctor. A substantial additional charge for such service could be incurred. Respondents' applied hair is subject to bleaching in sunlight and other discoloration normally associated with hairpieces, and where the hairpiece has been color-dyed, loss of dye through washing and normal wear; thus replacement hairpieces are required at intervals in order to maintain a color match with any natural hair the wearer may have.

The statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents, have represented in advertisements the asserted advantages of the system, as hereinbefore described. In many cases, respondents have represented their system to be painless and have not disclosed in such advertisements that a surgical procedure is a required step in the system. In no case have respondents' advertisements disclosed:

(a) that clients may experience discomfort and pain as a result of the surgical procedure, from the synthetic sutures themselves, and from pulling normally incident to wearing the hairpiece;

(b) that clients will be subject to the risk of irritation, infections, and skin diseases as a result of the surgical procedure and as a result of the synthetic sutures remaining in the scalp;

(c) that permanent scarring to the scalp may result from the required surgical procedures, and as a result of the synthetic sutures remaining in the scalp.

The consequences described in this paragraph have in fact occurred, and to a reasonable medical certainty can be expected to occur, and respondents knew, and had reason to know, that they could be expected to occur. Furthermore, the surgical procedure has not been used in conjunction with respondents' system for a sufficient experimental period to determine the extent of seriousness of the above side effects, and whether there are any other side effects, including but not limited to rejection of the synthetic sutures through the human body's natural rejection process.

Therefore, the advertisements referred to in Paragraph Seven are false and misleading and the acts and practices referred to in said paragraph are unfair and deceptive.

PAR. 8. For the purpose of inducing the purchase of the system, respondents entice members of the purchasing public to their salon with advertisements of "a permanent head of hair that will not come off" as a solution to baldness and like advertisements to attract members of the purchasing public concerned about their hair loss, and with offers of free information without any obligations. In most cases respondents do not disclose details of their system unless and until a prospect visits their salon. When members of the purchasing public have visited the salon, they have been subjected to emotional sales pressure, for the purpose of persuading them to sign a contract for the application of the implant system, and to make a substantial downpayment, without being afforded a reasonable opportunity to consider and comprehend the scope and extent of the contractual obligations involved, the seriousness of the surgical procedure and the possibilities of discomfort, pain, disease, or disfigurement related to the continued presence of the synthetic suture in the scalp. Persons are insistently urged to sign such contracts and make such down payments, through the use of persistent and emotionally forceful sales presentations employing the following tactics, among others:

1. Representing that the psychological benefit of having hair replaced is so significant as to be of immediate necessity and that, subconsciously, bald men are desperate for prompt relief.

2. Inducing prospects to sign contracts and/or make down payments before they have consulted a medical doctor and freely and openly discussed with such doctor the medical risks and consequences of the surgical procedure, and of the synthetic suture being embedded in their scalp. Such consultations typically occur immediately before the commencement of surgery, by which time the client is likely to feel pressured to go through with the application.

Therefore, the advertisements referred to in Paragraph Eight were and are false and misleading, and the acts and practices set forth in such paragraph were and are false and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms, and individuals, in the sale of cosmetics, devices and treatments for the concealment of baldness.

PAR. 10. The use by respondents of the above unfair and deceptive representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead consumers, and to unfairly influence consumers to hurriedly and precipitately sign contracts for the application of the implant hair replacement system, and to make partial or full payment therefor, without affording them reasonable opportunity to consider and comprehend the scope and extent of the contractual obligations involved, or the seriousness of the surgical procedure, and the possibilities of discomfort, pain, disease or disfigurement related thereto, and related to the continual presence of the synthetic suture in the scalp, or to compare prices, techniques, and devices available from competing corporations, firms, and individuals selling baldness concealment cosmetics, devices, and treatments to the purchasing public.

PAR. 11. The respondents' acts and practices alleged herein are to the prejudice and injury of the purchasing public, and to respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and false advertisements disseminated by United States mails, and in commerce, in violation of Section 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Orlando of Calabria, Inc., trading also as Orlando of Italy, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 2 W. Fordham Rd., Bronx, N.Y.

Respondent Orlando Jiacinto is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Orlando of Calabria, Inc., a corporation, trading also as Orlando of Italy or under any other name or names, its successors and assigns and its officers, and Orlando Jiacinto, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device or through franchisees or licensees, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the implant replacement system or other hair replacement product or process involving surgery (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "system"), in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, or by the United States mails within the meaning of Section 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication:

1. That the system does not involve wearing a device or cosmetic which is like a hairpiece or toupee;

2. That after the system has been applied, the hair applied becomes part of the anatomy like natural hair, and has the following characteristics of natural hair:

a. The same appearance in all applications as natural hair, upon normal observation, and upon extreme close-up examination;

b. it may be cared for like natural hair where care involves possible pulling on the hair;

c. the wearer may engage in physical activity and movement with the same disregard for his hair as he would if he had natural hair.

3. That after the system has been applied, the wearer can care for it himself, and will not have to seek professional or skilled assistance in maintaining the system, and that the customer will not incur maintenance costs over and above the cost of applying the system.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in advertising, offering for sale, selling or distributing the system, disclose clearly and conspicuously that:

1. The system involves a surgical procedure resulting in the implantation of synthetic sutures in the scalp, to which hair is affixed.

2. By virtue of the surgical procedure involving implantation of synthetic sutures in the scalp, and by virtue of the synthetic suture remaining in the scalp, there is a risk of discomfort, pain, infection, scarring, and other skin disorders.

3. Continuing special care of the system is necessary to minimize the probabilities and risks referred to in subparagraph two of this paragraph, and such care may involve additional costs for medications and assistance.

4. The purchaser is advised to consult with his personal physician about the system before deciding whether to purchase it.

Respondents shall set forth the above disclosures separately and conspicuously from the balance of each advertisement or presentation used in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, and shall devote no less than 15 percent of each advertisement or presentation to such disclosures. Provided, however, That in advertisements which consist of less than ten column inches in newspapers and periodicals, and in radio and television advertisements with a running time of one minute or less, respondents may substitute the following statement, in lieu of the above requirements:

> Warning: This application involves surgery whereby synthetic sutures are placed in the scalp. Discomfort, pain, and medical problems may occur. Continuing care is necessary. Consult your own physician.

No less than 15 percent of such advertisements shall be devoted to this disclosure, such disclosure shall be set forth clearly and conspicuously from the balance of each of such advertisements, and if such disclosure is in a newspaper or periodical, it shall be in at least eleven point type.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the sale of the system, provide prospective purchasers with a separate disclosure sheet containing the information required in the immediately preceding paragraph of this order, subparagraphs one through four thereof, and that respondents require that, prior to executing any contract to purchase said system, such prospective purchasers, sign and date the disclosure sheet after the sentence, "I have read the foregoing disclosures and understand what they mean," and that Orlando of Calabria, Inc. provide a copy of said disclosure sheet to the customers and retain such signed disclosure sheet for at least three years.

It is further ordered, That, in connection with the sale of the system, no contract for application of the system shall become binding on the purchaser prior to midnight of the third day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed, and that:

1. Respondents shall clearly and conspicuously disclose, orally prior to the time of sale, and in writing on any contract, promissory note or other instrument executed by the purchaser in connection with the sale of the system, that the purchaser may rescind or cancel any obligation incurred by mailing or delivering a notice of cancellation to the office responsible for the sale prior to midnight of the third day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed.

2. Respondents shall provide a separate and clearly understandable form which the purchaser may use as a notice of cancellation.

3. Respondents shall not negotiate any contract, promissory note, or other instrument of indebtedness to a finance company or other third party prior to midnight of the fifth day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, serve a copy of this order upon each present and every future licensee or franchisee, and upon each physician participating in application of respondents' system, and obtain written acknowledgment of the receipt thereof; and that respondents obtain from each present and future licensee or franchisee an agreement in writing, (1) to abide by the terms of this order, and (2) to cancellation of their license or franchise for failure to do so; and that respondents cancel the license or franchise of any licensee or franchisee that fails to abide by the terms of this order. Respondents shall retain such acknowledgments and agreements for so long as such persons or firms continue to participate in the application or sale of respondents' system.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions or departments.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, licensees, or franchisees, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That in the event that the corporate respondent merges with another corporation or transfers all or a substantial part of its business or assets to any other corporation or to any other person, said respondent shall require such successor or transferee to file promptly with the Commission a written agreement to be bound by the terms of this order; Provided, That if said respondent wishes to present to the Commission any reasons why said order should not apply in its present form to said successor or transferee, it shall submit to the Commission a written statement setting forth said reasons prior to the consummation of said succession or transfer.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent Orlando Jiacinto promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further understood that nothing contained in this order shall be construed in any way to annul, invalidate, repeal, terminate, modify or exempt respondents from complying with agreements, orders or directives of any kind obtained by any other agency or act as a defense to actions instituted by municipal or State regulatory agencies.

Nothing in this order shall be construed to imply that any past or future conduct of respondents is subject to and complies with the rules and regulations of, or the statutes administered by the Federal Trade Commission.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

1. The system does involve the wearing of a hairpiece or toupee.
2. The hairpiece applied does not become part of the anatomy like natural hair. The system involves the suturing of synthetic threads into the scalp of the recipient by a surgical procedure and which may be rejected by the body. The hairpiece differs from natural hair in many respects, including the following:

(a) It does not have the same appearance as natural hair in a substantial number of instances. It is often discernible as a hairpiece or toupee upon normal observation, and upon extreme closeup examination.

(b) It cannot be cared for like regular hair but requires special care and handling. Strong pulling on the hair, such as may be expected to occur in washing, combing, brushing, and mussing, can cause pain because of the pressure exerted on the sutures in the scalp, may cause bleeding, and may cause the sutures to pull out. As a consequence, washing the hair and scalp is difficult. Because washing is difficult, foreign particles and dead skin tissue tend to accumulate beneath the implant hair application and become a significant source of irritation. The hair styles into which the hairpiece may be combed or brushed without professional treatments are limited.

(c) The wearer may not engage in physical activities with as much disregard for his hairpiece as might a person with natural hair. The wearer must at all times be careful that the hair does not pull or get pulled, or become tangled, or strained. Discomfort and pain may be caused by common actions, such as rolling the head on a pillow during sleep.

3. The wearer cannot in most instances care for the hairpiece himself; he must seek professional or skilled assistance on many occasions. Medical problems associated with the surgery or the continuing presence of synthetic thread in the scalp may require subsequent visits to a medical doctor. A substantial additional charge for such service could be incurred. Respondents' applied hair is subject to bleaching in sunlight and other discoloration normally associated with hairpieces, and where the hairpiece has been color-dyed, loss of dye through washing and normal wear; thus replacement hairpieces are required at intervals in order to maintain a color match with any natural hair the wearer may have.

The statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents, have represented in advertisements the asserted advantages of the system, as hereinbefore described. In many cases, respondents have represented their system to be painless and have not disclosed in such advertisements that a surgical procedure is a required step in the system. In no case have respondents' advertisements disclosed:

(a) that clients may experience discomfort and pain as a result of the surgical procedure, from the synthetic sutures themselves, and from pulling normally incident to wearing the hairpiece;

(b) that clients will be subject to the risk of irritation, infections, and skin diseases as a result of the surgical procedure and as a result of the synthetic sutures remaining in the scalp;

(c) that permanent scarring to the scalp may result from the required surgical procedures, and as a result of the synthetic sutures remaining in the scalp.

The consequences described in this paragraph have in fact occurred, and to a reasonable medical certainty can be expected to occur, and respondents knew, and had reason to know, that they could be expected to occur. Furthermore, the surgical procedure has not been used in conjunction with respondents' system for a sufficient experimental period to determine the extent of seriousness of the above side effects, and whether there are any other side effects, including but not limited to rejection of the synthetic sutures through the human body's natural rejection process.

Therefore, the advertisements referred to in Paragraph Seven are false and misleading and the acts and practices referred to in said paragraph are unfair and deceptive.

PAR. 8. For the purpose of inducing the purchase of the system, respondents entice members of the purchasing public to their salon with advertisements of "It is a patented technique of permanently implanting hair to the scalp used exclusively by Hair Replacement Centers." as a solution to baldness and like advertisements to attract members of the purchasing public concerned about their hair loss, and with offers of free information without any obligations. In most cases respondents do not disclose details of their system unless and until a prospect visits their salon. When members of the purchasing public have visited the salon, they have been subjected to emotional sales pressure, for the purpose of persuading them to sign a contract for the application of the implant system, and to make a substantial downpayment, without being afforded a reasonable opportunity to consider and comprehend the scope and extent of the contractual obligations involved, the seriousness of the surgical procedure and the possibilities of discomfort, pain, disease, or disfigurement related to the continued presence of the synthetic suture in the scalp. Persons are insistently urged to sign such contracts and make such down payments, through the use of persistent and emotionally forceful sales presentations employing the following tactics, among others:

1. Representing that the psychological benefit of having hair replaced is so significant as to be of immediate necessity and that, subconsciously, bald men are desperate for prompt relief.

2. Inducing prospects to sign contracts and/or make down payments before they have consulted a medical doctor and freely and openly discussed with such doctor the medical risks and consequences of the surgical procedure, and of the synthetic suture being embedded in their scalp. Such consultations typically occur immediately before the commencement of surgery, by which time the client is likely to feel pressured to go through with the application.

Therefore, the advertisements referred to in Paragraph Eight were and are false and misleading, and the acts and practices set forth in such paragraph were and are false and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms, and individuals, in the sale of cosmetics, devices and treatments for the concealment of baldness.

PAR. 10. The use by respondents of the above unfair and deceptive representations and practices has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead consumers, and to unfairly influence consumers to hurriedly and precipitately sign contracts for the application of the implant hair replacement system, and to make partial or full payment therefor, without affording them reasonable opportunity to consider and comprehend the scope and extent of the contractual obligations involved, or the seriousness of the surgical procedure, and the possibilities of discomfort, pain, disease or disfigurement related thereto, and related to the continual presence of the synthetic suture in the scalp, or to compare prices, techniques, and devices available from competing corporations, firms, and individuals selling baldness concealment cosmetics, devices, and treatments to the purchasing public.

PAR. 11. The respondents' acts and practices alleged herein are to the prejudice and injury of the purchasing public, and to respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and false advertisements disseminated by United States mails, and in commerce, in violation of Section 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Hair Replacement Centers of Flushing, Inc., trading also as American Hair Design Centers, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 33-21 Francis Lewis Blvd., Flushing, N.Y. 11358.

Respondent Jan Felson is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondent Hair Replacement Centers of Flushing, Inc., a corporation, trading also as American Hair Design Centers, and/or under any other name or names, its successors and assigns and its officers, and Jan Felson, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives, and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device or through franchisees or licensees, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the implant replacement system or other hair replacement product or process involving surgery (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "system"), in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, or by the United States mails within the meaning of Section 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication:

1. That the system does not involve wearing a device or cosmetic which is like a hairpiece or toupee;

2. That after the system has been applied, the hair applied becomes part of the anatomy like natural hair, and has the following characteristics of natural hair:

a. The same appearance in all applications as natural hair, upon normal observation, and upon extreme closeup examination;

b. it may be cared for like natural hair where care involves possible pulling on the hair;

c. the wearer may engage in physical activity and movement with the same disregard for his hair as he would if he had natural hair.

3. That after the system has been applied, the wearer can care for it himself, and will not have to seek professional or skilled assistance in maintaining the system, and that the customer will not incur maintenance costs over and above the cost of applying the system.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in advertising, offering for sale, selling or distributing the system, disclose clearly and conspicuously that:

1. The system involves a surgical procedure resulting in the implantation of synthetic sutures in the scalp, to which hair is affixed.

2. By virtue of the surgical procedure involving implantation of synthetic sutures in the scalp, and by virtue of the synthetic suture remaining in the scalp, there is a risk of discomfort, pain, infection, scarring, and other skin disorders.

3. Continuing special care of the system is necessary to minimize the probabilities and risks referred to in subparagraph two of this paragraph, and such care may involve additional costs for medications and assistance.

4. The purchaser is advised to consult with his personal physician about the system before deciding whether to purchase it.

Respondents shall set forth the above disclosures separately and conspicuously from the balance of each advertisement or presentation used in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, and shall devote no less than 15 percent of each advertisement or presentation to such disclosures. Provided, however, That in advertisements which consist of less than ten column inches in newspapers and periodicals, and in radio and television advertisements with a running time of one minute or less, respondents may substitute the following statement, in lieu of the above requirements:

> Warning: This application involves surgery whereby synthetic sutures are placed in the scalp. Discomfort, pain, and medical problems may occur. Continuing care is necessary. Consult your own physician.

No less than 15 percent of such advertisements shall be devoted to this disclosure, such disclosure shall be set forth clearly and conspicuously from the balance of each of such advertisements, and if such disclosure is in a newspaper or periodical, it shall be in at least eleven point type.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the sale of the system, provide prospective purchasers with a separate disclosure sheet containing the information required in the immediately preceding paragraph of this order, subparagraphs one through four thereof, and that respondents require that, prior to executing any contract to purchase said system, such prospective purchasers, sign and date the disclosure sheet after the sentence, "I have read the foregoing disclosures and understand what they mean," and that Hair Replacement Centers of Flushing, Inc. provide a copy of said disclosure sheet to the customers and retain such signed disclosure sheet for at least three years.

It is further ordered, That, in connection with the sale of the system, no contract for application of the system shall become binding on the purchaser prior to midnight of the third day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed, and that:

1. Respondents shall clearly and conspicuously disclose, orally prior to the time of sale, and in writing on any contract, promissory note or other instrument executed by the purchaser in connection with the sale of the system, that the purchaser may rescind or cancel any obligation incurred by mailing or delivering a notice of cancellation to the office responsible for the sale prior to midnight of the third day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed.
2. Respondents shall provide a separate and clearly understandable form which the purchaser may use as a notice of cancellation.
3. Respondents shall not negotiate any contract, promissory note, or other instrument of indebtedness to a finance company or other third party prior to midnight of the fifth day, excluding Sundays and legal holidays, after the day on which said contract for application of the system was executed.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, serve a copy of this order upon each present and every future licensee or franchisee, and upon each physician participating in application of respondents' system, and obtain written acknowledgment of the receipt thereof; and that respondents obtain from each present and future licensee or franchisee an agreement in writing, (1) to abide by the terms of this order, and (2) to cancellation of their license or franchise for failure to do so; and that respondents cancel the license or franchise of any licensee or franchisee that fails to abide by the terms of this order. Respondents shall retain such acknowledgments and agreements for so long as such persons or firms continue to participate in the application or sale of respondents' system.

It is further ordered, That respondents, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the system, forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions or departments.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, licensees, or franchisees, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That in the event that the corporate respondent merges with another corporation or transfers all or a substantial part of its business or assets to any other corporation or to any other person, said respondent shall require such successor or transferee to file promptly with the Commission a written agreement to be bound by the terms of this order; Provided, That if said respondent wishes to present to the Commission any reasons why said order should not apply in its present form to said successor or transferee, it shall submit to the Commission a written statement setting forth said reasons prior to the consummation of said succession or transfer.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent Jan Felson promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further understood that nothing contained in this order shall be construed in any way to annul, invalidate, repeal, terminate, modify or exempt respondents from complying with agreements, orders or directives of any kind obtained by any other agency or act as a defense to actions instituted by municipal or State regulatory agencies.

Nothing in this order shall be construed to imply that any past or future conduct of respondents is subject to and complies with the rules and regulations of, or the statutes administered by the Federal Trade Commission.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

ORDER DENYING JOINT APPLICATION FOR REVIEW

The administrative law judge, by order dated July 15, 1975, denied respondents' joint motion to nullify his order of June 19, 1975, granting complaint counsel's application for the taking of depositions. On July 25, 1975, the Commission denied an application by General Mills, Inc., for a stay of the commencement of complaint counsel's deposition program pending respondents' appeal from the discovery order of July 15, 1975. On Aug. 1, 1975, the law judge denied respondents' joint request for a determination that the order raised issues which met the criteria for interlocutory review set forth in Section 3.23(b) of the rules of practice.

Respondents claim that the law judge's refusal to grant their request for a determination under Section 3.23(b) was an abuse of discretion and that the Commission has the inherent power to review any ruling by an administrative law judge. However, as the Commission has already ruled in this case, "the Administrative Law Judge has broad discretion in controlling the conduct of adjudicative proceedings, and his rulings will be reviewed only in cases of clear abuse." Order Denying Applications for Review, May 29, 1974, p. 3. Respondents have not made such a showing.

Complaint counsel's deposition schedule is undoubtedly extensive, but the law judge has found that the information sought is "highly relevant" to the allegations in the complaint and that the depositions may facilitate the trial of this matter. He has also found that "[d]iscovery of the information known to individual employees of respondents is available only through personal confrontation with these individuals," and that the discovery could not be accomplished by voluntary methods order denying respondents' joint motion to nullify the order of June 19, 1975, for the taking of depositions requested by complaint counsel, July 15, 1975, p. 3. We cannot find that the law judge abused his discretion in making these determinations.

However we do not overlook respondents' unanswered assertion that at initial pretrial hearings in August 1972 complaint counsel indicated a need for only limited further discovery. We are concerned that more than three years have elapsed since the complaint issued in this matter. Under these circumstances, measures must be taken to assure that any remaining discovery is completed as expeditiously as possible.

It is ordered, That respondents' joint application for review of the order of the administrative law judge, dated July 15, 1975, be, and it hereby is, denied;

It is further ordered, That the administrative law judge, after consultation with the parties, promptly establish a schedule for trial and that he certify to the Commission a report on the status of this matter in 30 days.

ORDER TO ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE DIRECTING DISPOSITION OF EX PARTE COMMUNICATION

The administrative law judge has certified to the Commission pursuant to Section 4.7(c) of the rules of practice, a letter he received on July 14, 1975, addressed to "Administrative Law Judge, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C."

The letter clearly constitutes an ex parte communication under Section 4.7(a) and, ordinarily, should be placed on the public record rules of practice, Section 4.7(c). However, although the letter is unsigned, the writer, an employee of respondent, apparently fearing that details are revealed in the letter which would disclose his identity, states his belief that, unless the letter's confidentiality is preserved, he will lose his job.[1] Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the administrative law judge advise counsel of the substance of the communication and that, upon request, counsel be permitted to examine the communication, with instructions that they not disclose any identifying details to respondent or others;

It is further ordered, That the communication not be considered by the administrative law judge in the decision of this case.

Denial of respondents' motion to dismiss the complaint or in alternative to withdraw matter from adjudication for settlement purposes.

Appearances

For the respondents: Lee Leovinger, Hogan & Hartson, Wash., D.C.

ORDER DENYING RESPONDENTS' MOTION TO DISMISS THE COMPLAINT OR, IN THE ALTERNATIVE, TO WITHDRAW FROM ADJUDICATION

Respondents move to dismiss the complaint, or in alternative, to withdraw the matter from adjudication until the Commission has afforded respondents an opportunity "fully to exercise their rights" to negotiate a settlement. Their motion was certified to the Commission by the administrative law judge pursuant to Section 3.22(a) of the rules of practice.

Respondents claim that (1) evidence was obtained by staff during the course of the pre-complaint investigation in an improper fashion and (2) respondents were not afforded an opportunity to negotiate a settlement prior to the issuance of the Part III complaint.

The first claim must be rejected. Respondents contend that during the course of the pre-complaint investigation Commission staff sent letters seeking information from individual Amway distributors which falsely purported to be compulsory process and which misrepresented that Amway distributors were not under investigation.

We have, however, previously rejected challenges to the sufficiency and propriety of pre-complaint investigations. E.g., Food Fair Stores, Inc., Docket No. 8935, order denying motion for reconsideration, Apr. 23, 1974 [83 F.T.C. 1578]; All-State Industries of North Carolina, supplemental clarifying opinion of the Commission, 74 F.T.C. 1591, 1592 (1968).

If a complaint were to be open to challenge on the ground that there was inadequate or incompetent evidence before the Commission or the staff prior to issuance of the complaint, "* * * the resulting delay would be great indeed. The result of such a rule would be that before trial on the merits a [respondent] could always insist on a kind of preliminary trial to determine the competency and adequacy of the evidence" presented by the staff to the Commission. Lawn v. United States, 355 U.S. 339, 349 (1958); Costello v. United States, 350 U.S. 359, 363 (1956) (indictment not subject to challenge on the ground that incompetent evidence presented to grand jury).[1]

Our ruling is, of course, without prejudice to any attempts by respondents to move the administrative law judge to suppress evidence they claim to have been improperly obtained.

Finally, the Commission rejects respondents' claim that they had a right under Part II of the Commission's Rules of Practice to negotiate a settlement. The rules in effect prior to Apr. 4, 1975, like those presently in effect, afforded the Commission broad discretion to determine whether persons should be afforded an opportunity to have a matter disposed of without resort to Part III adjudicative procedures. There has been no showing that this discretion was abused.

It should be noted that under the amended rules respondents can still seek a settlement by filing a motion before the administrative law judge to withdraw the matter from adjudication. Even if the motion is opposed by complaint counsel, the law judge may certify the matter to the Commission with his recommendation if it appears that there is a "likelihood of settlement" rules of practice, Section 3.25(b). Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the aforesaid motion to dismiss the complaint or, in the alternative, to withdraw the matter from adjudication be, and it hereby is, denied.

Certain of the statements and representations have been placed by respondents in the "Help Wanted" columns of newspaper advertisements.

In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents cause persons who respond to their newspaper advertisements, television and radio commercials and business reply cards to be visited by respondents' salesmen in the homes of such persons.

For the purpose of inducing the sale of respondents' training courses, such salesmen make to prospective purchasers many statements and representations, directly or by implication, regarding job opportunities, wages, the qualifications of respondents' students who complete respondents' training courses, the nature of the training provided in respondents' training courses, the placement assistance furnished to respondents' graduates in obtaining employment, and other matters. D. Oral Statements by Sales Representatives.

Truck drivers are making $14,000 to $22,000 a year.

After graduating, you can walk in anywhere and get a truck driver's job.

The trucking field is crying for truck drivers.

There are over 190 trucking companies who hire their truck drivers through American Tractor Trailer.

The course takes one month, and you'll be driving the second month.

I only want to talk to individuals who are seriously interested in driving tractor trailers.

The school accepts only four out of every ten applicants.

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above statements and representations and others of similar import and meaning, but not expressly set out herein, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that:

1. The corporate respondents operate, represent or are affiliated with, trucking companies.

2. Respondents offer employment to qualified applicants who will be trained as truck drivers.

3. Respondents have been requested by trucking companies to train drivers for jobs as truck drivers with such companies upon completion of said training.

4. Graduates of respondents' training courses will be qualified thereby for employment as truck drivers without further training or experience.

5. Respondents had a reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be an urgent need or demand for persons who complete respondents' training courses.

6. Respondents had a reasonable basis from which to conclude that persons who complete respondents' training courses earn such amounts as $300 per week, or over $12,000 per year and other stated amounts as truck drivers.

7. Respondents provide a placement service which will secure jobs as truck drivers for graduates of said courses who want to work in that capacity.

8. Graduates of respondents' training courses who want to work are assured jobs as truck drivers as a consequence of graduating from said courses.

9. Respondents' sales representatives are trained or qualified vocational counselors.

10. Respondents accept only qualified candidates for enrollment in said training courses.

11. Respondents' training courses provide a minimum of 20 hours of road-driving instruction.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The corporate respondents do not operate or represent, and are not affiliated with trucking companies.

2. Respondents do not offer employment to persons who will be trained as truck drivers. The real purpose of such advertisements is to obtain leads to prospective purchasers of respondents' training courses.

3. Respondents have not been requested by trucking companies to train persons for jobs as truck drivers with such companies upon completion of said training.

4. Graduates of respondents' training courses are not thereby qualified for employment as truck drivers without further training or experience.

5. Respondents had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be an urgent need or demand for persons who complete respondents' training courses.

6. Respondents had no reasonable basis from which to conclude that persons who complete respondents' training courses earn amounts such as $300 per week, over $12,000 per year and other stated amounts as truck drivers as a result of such training.

7. Respondents do not provide a placement service which will secure jobs as truck drivers for graduates of said courses who want to work in that capacity.

8. Graduates of said courses who want to work are not assured jobs as truck drivers as a consequence of graduating from said courses.

9. Respondents' sales representatives are not trained or qualified vocational counselors. Respondents' representatives are commissioned salesmen who possess no special training, experience, title, qualifications or status.

10. Respondents accept all candidates for enrollment in said training courses. Respondents impose no qualifications on prospective enrollees and accept any person for enrollment in such courses who is willing to execute a contract and pay the required tuition for the training courses.

11. Respondents' training courses do not provide a minimum of 20 hours of road-driving instruction. To the contrary, students receive substantially less road-driving instruction.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were, and are, false, misleading, unfair, or deceptive acts or practices.

PAR. 7. Through the use of the aforesaid advertisements, television and radio commercials, business reply cards, brochures and otherwise, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that there is or will be an urgent need or demand for respondents' graduates in positions for which respondents train them and that respondents' graduates earn such amounts as $300 per week, over $12,000 per year and other stated amounts as truck drivers. Respondents had at the time of said representations no reasonable basis adequate to support the representations. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 8. (a) In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have offered, and are now offering, for sale training courses purporting to prepare purchasers thereof for employment as truck drivers without disclosing in advertising or through their sales representatives: (1) the recent percentage of persons who have completed the training course who were able to obtain the employment for which they were trained; (2) the employers that hired any such persons; (3) the initial salary any such persons received; and (4) the percentage of recent enrollees of each school for each course offered that have failed to complete their course of instruction. Knowledge of such facts by prospective purchasers of respondents' training courses would indicate the possibility of securing future employment upon completion of the training courses, and the nature of such employment. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose a material fact which, if known to certain consumers, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to purchase such training courses. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices.

(b) Respondents have offered, and are now offering, for sale training courses purporting to prepare purchasers thereof for employment as truck drivers without disclosing in advertising or through their sales representatives that:

1. Many employers of truck drivers prescribe a minimum age of twenty-one years of age for drivers;

2. Many employers of truck drivers give preferential consideration in hiring to driver-applicants who are twenty-five years of age or more because of insurance cost savings; and

3. Many employers of truck drivers give preferential consideration in hiring to driver-applicants with actual truck-driving experience.

Knowledge of such facts by prospective purchasers of respondents' training courses would indicate the possibility of securing future employment upon completion of the training courses, and the nature of such employment. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose material facts which, if known to certain consumers, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to purchase such training courses. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 9. In the further course and conduct of their business and in the furtherance of their purpose of inducing prospective enrollees to execute enrollment contracts for their training course, respondents and their employees, salesmen, and representatives have engaged in the following additional unfair, false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices.

In a substantial number of instances, through the use of the false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices set forth in Paragraphs Four through Eight, respondents or their representatives have been able to induce prospective enrollees into executing enrollment contracts upon initial contact without affording the enrollee sufficient time to carefully consider the purchase of the training course and the consequences thereof.

PAR. 10. Respondents have been and are now failing to disclose material facts while using the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading or deceptive acts and practices, to induce persons to pay or to contract to pay over to them substantial sums of money to purchase or pay for courses of instruction whose value was virtually worthless to said persons for purposes of obtaining future employment in the jobs for which they were provided training.

Respondents have received the said sums and have failed to offer refunds and have failed to refund such sums to, or to rescind such contractual obligations of, substantial numbers of enrollees and participants in such training courses who were unable to secure employment in the positions and fields for which they have been purportedly trained by respondents.

The use by respondents of the aforesaid acts and practices, their continued retention of said sums and their continued failure to rescind such contractual obligations of their customers, as aforesaid, are unfair acts or practices.

The effect of using the aforesaid acts and practices to secure substantial sums of money is or may be to substantially hinder, lessen, restrain, or prevent competition between respondents and the aforesaid competitors.

Therefore, the said acts and practices constitute an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 11. By and through the use of the aforesaid acts and practices, respondents place in the hands of others the means and instrumentalities by and through which they may mislead and deceive the public in the manner and as to the things hereinabove alleged.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms, and individuals engaged in the sale of training courses covering the same or similar subjects.

PAR. 13. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading, unfair or deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and their failure to disclose material facts as aforesaid has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and complete, and to induce a substantial number thereof to purchase respondents' training courses by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 14. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INITIAL DECISION BY DANIEL H. HANSCOM, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

JULY 28, 1975

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Commission issued a complaint in this matter on Apr. 8, 1975, charging American Tractor Trailer Training, Inc., American Tractor Trailer Training School, Inc. and Charles R. Schwab, individually and as an officer of said corporations, with unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The complaint and the accompanying notice order were served on American Tractor Trailer Training School, Inc. on May 14, 1975, and on American Tractor Trailer Training, Inc. and Charles R. Schwab on May 15, 1975.

No answer or other response was received from any of the respondents within thirty (30) days following service of the complaint as required by the Commission's Rules of Practice for Adjudicative Proceedings, nor by the later date of July 9, 1975, set by the administrative law judge (see order providing for reconsideration of default if answer is filed by July 9, 1975, issued June 27, 1975, and order confirming default issued July 18, 1975).

Respondents are, therefore, in default and the undersigned so finds. Section 3.12(c) of the Commission's Rules of Practice provides that failure to file answer within the time provided shall be deemed to constitute waiver of the right of appearance and to contest the allegations of the complaint. Further, this Section authorizes the administrative law judge, without further notice to respondents, to find the facts to be as alleged in the complaint and to enter an initial decision containing such findings, appropriate conclusions, and order. Accordingly, the following findings, conclusions and order are issued:

5. Respondents had a reasonable basis from which to conclude that there is now or will be an urgent need or demand for persons who complete respondents' training courses.

6. Respondents had a reasonable basis from which to conclude that persons who complete respondents' training courses earn such amounts as $300 per week, or over $12,000 per year and other stated amounts as truck drivers.

7. Respondents provide a placement service which will secure jobs as truck drivers for graduates of said courses who want to work in that capacity.

8. Graduates of respondents' training courses who want to work are assured jobs as truck drivers as a consequence of graduating from said courses.

9. Respondents' sales representatives are trained or qualified vocational counselors.

10. Respondents accept only qualified candidates for enrollment in said training courses.

11. Respondents' training courses provide a minimum of 20 hours of road-driving instruction.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The corporate respondents do not operate or represent, and are not affiliated with trucking companies.

2. Respondents do not offer employment to persons who will be trained as truck drivers. The real purpose of such advertisements is to obtain leads to prospective purchasers of respondents' training courses.

3. Respondents have not been requested by trucking companies to train persons for jobs as truck drivers with such companies upon completion of said training.

11. Respondents' training courses do not provide a minimum of 20 hours of road-driving instruction. To the contrary, students receive substantially less road-driving instruction.

Therefore, the statements and representations set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof were, and are, false, misleading, unfair, or deceptive acts or practices.

PAR. 7. Through the use of the aforesaid advertisements, television and radio commercials, business reply cards, brochures and otherwise, respondents have represented, directly or by implication, that there is or will be an urgent need or demand for respondents' graduates in positions for which respondents train them and that respondents' graduates earn such amounts as $300 per week, over $12,000 per year and other stated amounts as truck drivers. Respondents had at the time of said representations no reasonable basis adequate to support the representations. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 8. (a) In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have offered, and are now offering, for sale training courses purporting to prepare purchasers thereof for employment as truck drivers without disclosing in advertising or through their sales representatives: (1) the recent percentage of persons who have completed the training course who were able to obtain the employment for which they were trained; (2) the employers that hired any such persons; (3) the initial salary any such persons received; and (4) the percentage of recent enrollees of each school for each course offered that have failed to complete their course of instruction. Knowledge of such facts by prospective purchasers of respondents' training courses would indicate the possibility of securing future employment upon completion of the training courses, and the nature of such employment. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose a material fact which, if known to certain consumers, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to purchase such training courses. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices.

(b) Respondents have offered, and are now offering, for sale training courses purporting to prepare purchasers thereof for employment as truck drivers without disclosing in advertising or through their sales representatives that:

1. Many employers of truck drivers prescribe a minimum age of twenty-one years for drivers;

2. Many employers of truck drivers give preferential consideration in hiring to driver-applicants who are twenty-five years of age or more because of insurance cost savings; and

3. Many employers of truck drivers give preferential consideration in hiring to driver-applicants with actual truck-driving experience.

Knowledge of such facts by prospective purchasers of respondents' training courses would indicate the possibility of securing future employment upon completion of the training courses, and the nature of such employment. Thus, respondents have failed to disclose material facts which, if known to certain consumers, would be likely to affect their consideration of whether or not to purchase such training courses. Therefore, the aforesaid acts and practices were, and are, false, misleading, deceptive or unfair acts or practices.

PAR. 9. In the further course and conduct of their business and in the furtherance of their purpose of inducing prospective enrollees to execute enrollment contracts for their training course, respondents and their employees, salesmen, and representatives have engaged in the following additional unfair, false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices.

In a substantial number of instances, through the use of the false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices set forth in Paragraphs Four through Eight, respondents or their representatives have been able to induce prospective enrollees into executing enrollment contracts upon initial contact without affording the enrollee sufficient time to carefully consider the purchase of the training course and the consequences thereof.

PAR. 10. Respondents have been and are now failing to disclose material facts while using the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading or deceptive acts and practices, to induce persons to pay or to contract to pay over to them substantial sums of money to purchase or pay for courses of instruction whose value was virtually worthless to said persons for purposes of obtaining future employment in the jobs for which they were provided training. Respondents have received the said sums and have failed to offer refunds and have failed to refund such sums to, or to rescind such contractual obligations of, substantial numbers of enrollees and participants in such training courses who were unable to secure employment in the positions and fields for which they have been purportedly trained by respondents.

The use by respondents of the aforesaid acts and practices, their continued retention of said sums and their continued failure to rescind such contractual obligations of their customers, as aforesaid, are unfair acts or practices.

The effect of using the aforesaid acts and practices to secure substantial sums of money is or may be to substantially hinder, lessen, restrain, or prevent competition between respondents and the aforesaid competitors.

Therefore, the said acts and practices constitute an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 11. By and through the use of the aforesaid acts and practices, respondents place in the hands of others the means and instrumentalities by and through which they may mislead and deceive the public in the manner and as to the things hereinabove alleged.

PAR. 12. In the course and conduct of their business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms, and individuals engaged in the sale of training courses covering the same or similar subjects.

PAR. 13. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading, unfair or deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and their failure to disclose material facts as aforesaid have had, and now have, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and complete, and to induce a substantial number thereof to purchase respondents' training courses by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 14. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

5. Failing to keep adequate records which may be inspected by Commission staff members upon reasonable notice which substantiate the data and information required to be disclosed by Paragraph 6 of this order and prescribed in Appendix A hereto.

6. APPENDIX B

"Base period" shall mean that period of time that begins with the entrance and ends with the graduation of respondents' most recent graduating class, provided that the class graduated at least three (3) months prior to the date on which respondents must begin to disseminate the necessary statistics with respect to the base period.

The three (3) month period immediately following the close of the base period shall be used by respondents to monitor and record the employment success of all enrollees whose enrollment terminated during the base period. Respondents may not include in the computation of statistics for the base period persons whose enrollment terminated during the three (3) month recordation period. Such persons will be included in the statistics for the base period that covers their graduating class.

On the first business day falling more than three (3) months after the graduation of the most recent graduating class respondents shall begin to disseminate statistics for that base period. Respondents shall continue to distribute said statistics until the first business day falling three (3) months after the graduation of the next graduating class.

The following example describes how base periods will be utilized by respondents:

Base period 1 will cover the period that begins with the entrance and ends with the graduation of the first class whose graduation date occurs after the effective date of this order. Therefore if a class began on Jan. 1, 1975 and graduated on Mar. 1, 1975 then from Mar. 1, 1975 until June 1, 1975 respondents would monitor and record the employment experience of all enrollees whose enrollment terminated during the base period, Jan. 1, 1975 to Mar. 1, 1975. Respondents would begin disseminating these statistics on the first business day after June 1, 1975.

Base period number two (2) would begin with entrance and end with the graduation of the next graduating class. If that class began on Feb. 1, 1975 and graduated on Apr. 1, 1975 then from Apr. 1, 1975 to July 1, 1975 respondents would monitor and record the employment experience of all enrollees whose enrollment terminated during base period number two (2) Feb. 1, 1975 to Apr. 1, 1975. Respondents would begin disseminating these statistics on the first business day after July 1, 1975.

FINAL ORDER

The administrative law judge filed his initial decision in this matter on July 28, 1975, finding respondents to have engaged in the acts and practices as alleged in the complaint and entering a cease and desist order against respondents. That initial decision was entered after the default of respondents in filing an answer to the complaint and to the administrative law judge's subsequent order providing for reconsideration of default if answer is filed by July 9, 1975. A copy of the initial decision and order was served on the respondents American Tractor Trailer Training, Inc. and Charles R. Schwab on Aug. 14, 1975 and respondent American Tractor Trailer Training School, Inc. on Aug. 18, 1975. No appeal was taken from the initial decision.

The Commission having now determined that the matter should not be placed on its own docket for review, and that the initial decision should become effective as provided in Section 3.51(a) of the Commission's Rules of Practice, It is ordered, That the initial decision and order contained therein shall become effective on Sept. 17, 1975; and

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a written report, signed by the respondents, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Fair Credit Reporting Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Checkmate Inquiry Service, Inc., a corporation, and Samuel Berke, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Checkmate Inquiry Service, Inc. is a corporation, organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 29 E. 10th St., New York, N.Y.

Respondent Samuel Berke is an individual and is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including those hereinafter set forth. His business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time in the past have been, for monetary fees and/or dues, regularly engaged in the practice of assembling or evaluating consumer credit information for the purpose of furnishing to third parties consumer reports, as "consumer report" is defined in Section 603(d) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act. Respondents regularly use a means or facility of interstate commerce for the purpose of preparing and furnishing said consumer reports. Therefore, respondents are a consumer reporting agency, as "consumer reporting agency" is defined in Section 603(f) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 3. Respondents in the ordinary course and conduct of their business as aforesaid are now, and subsequent to Apr. 25, 1971 have been, engaged in the preparation, offering for sale, sale and distribution of information on consumers, including consumer reports, as defined in Section 603(d) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 4. Respondents fail to:

A. Clearly and conspicuously disclose to the consumer his or her right to request that a consumer statement, codification, or summary thereof with respect to disputed information, be sent by respondents to persons designated by the consumer and who have received the disputed information within the previous two years for employment purposes or within the previous six months for any other purpose;

B. Furnish the consumer statement, codification or summary thereof to any persons specifically designated by the consumer and qualified under Section 611(d) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act to receive such information.

Therefore, respondents are in violation of Section 611(d) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 5. When a dispute cannot be resolved and the consumer submits a brief statement of his or her version of the nature of the dispute, respondents fail to clearly note in subsequent consumer reports containing the information in question that it is disputed by the consumer and provide either the consumer statement or a clear and accurate codification or summary thereof.

Therefore, respondents are in violation of Section 611(c) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices and omissions set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five are in violation of the Fair Credit Reporting Act and, pursuant to Section 621(a) of that Act, respondents have thereby violated Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Fair Credit Reporting Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Act, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Checkmate Inquiry Service, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located at 29 E. 10th St., New York, N.Y.

Respondent Samuel Berke is an officer of the corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of the corporate respondent. His principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Checkmate Inquiry Service, Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officer Samuel Berke, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, in connection with the collecting, assembling or furnishing of consumer reports, as "consumer report" is defined in Section 603(d) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (Pub. L. No. 91-508, 15 U.S.C. §1601, et seq.), shall forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Failing to explicitly disclose in writing to the consumer his or her right to request that a consumer statement with respect to disputed information be sent by respondents to persons designated by the consumer who have received the deleted or disputed information within two years for employment purposes or within six months for any other purpose. Such disclosure shall be made at or prior to the time the information is deleted or the consumer's statement regarding the disputed information is received.
2. Failing to furnish any consumer statement, codification or summary thereof to any person designated by the consumer and qualified under Section 611(d) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act to receive such information. Such notification shall take place within five business days after the deletion or receipt of the consumer's request that the statement, codification or summary be sent.
3. Failing, whenever a statement of dispute has been filed, unless there are reasonable grounds to believe that the statement of dispute is frivolous or irrelevant, to clearly note in any subsequent consumer report containing the information in question that it is disputed by the consumer, and to provide either the consumer's statement or a clear and accurate codification or summary thereof.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, at all times subsequent to the effective date of this order, maintain complete business records relative to the manner and form of their compliance with this order during the immediately preceding two-year period. Such records shall include all correspondence with consumers and consumer report applicants, policy directives, completely filled out interview reports, complaints from consumers and consumer report applicants, and other pertinent documents. Such records shall be kept in chronological order separate from the consumer files and shall be made available for inspection and photocopying by any authorized representative of the Federal Trade Commission upon reasonable notice at respondents' place of business or other properly designated location.

It is further ordered, That respondents deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all employees now or thereafter engaged in the collecting, assembling, evaluating or furnishing of consumer information to third parties and that respondents secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale, resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

ORDER

The administrative law judge has filed a motion to modify the Commission's order denying joint application for review, dated Sept. 16, 1975, to provide more time for the filing of the status report required by the order.

Although, under other circumstances, the reasons stated in the motion may have justified an extension of time, our concern that the case proceed to trial as expeditiously as possible requires that these matters be handled by the chief administrative law judge, or his designee, rather than delay them. Accordingly,

It is ordered, That the chief administrative law judge, or his designee, after consultation with the parties, schedule a trial as promptly as possible and certify to the Commission a report on the status of this matter no later than Oct. 20, 1975.

It is ordered, That the genuine and authentic copies submitted by the parties pursuant to their joint motion received Sept. 15, 1975, and described therein, be admitted to replace exhibits entered into evidence at the trial before the administrative law judge but which exhibits are presently missing from the official exhibit binders.

ORDER DENYING PETITION TO REOPEN PROCEEDINGS

On July 25, 1975, respondent petitioned, pursuant to Section 3.72(b) of the Commission's Rules of Practice, to reopen the proceedings in this matter for the purpose of setting aside the consent order entered on Mar. 11, 1969. That consent order attempted to remedy an alleged violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act through General Mills' acquisition of Morton Foods and Tom Huston Peanut Company (Tom's). The Commission's charge was that those acquisitions substantially lessened competition in the "manufacture, distribution and sales of potato chips and corn chips."

The order required respondent, for a period of ten years, to secure Commission approval prior to acquiring any firm engaged in the manufacture or wholesale distribution of any consumer products of the type manufactured by General Mills as of the date of the order and its subsidiaries (including Morton Foods and Tom's).

Several months after the order was entered, General Mills sold Morton Foods. General Mills now claims this sale has changed the facts sufficiently to make the order an "undue hardship for General Mills to continue to be burdened with * * *."

The arguments in support of this proposition do not explain what hardship is being suffered by General Mills, nor is there described any change in facts sufficient to justify modifications of a Commission order.

On review, the order is found to continue to be reasonably related to the conduct complained of and fairly calculated to assist in the restoration of competitive conditions in the marketplace.

It is ordered, That the aforesaid petition be, and it hereby is, denied.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR AN EXTENSION OF TIME

By motion filed with the Secretary of the Commission on Sept. 11,

---

* For appearances, see p. 686, herein.

1975, the Bureau of Competition has applied to the Commission for an extension of time to answer the petition to reopen these proceedings filed by General Mills, Inc. on July 25, 1975.

The time to file a response to petitioner's motion expired, pursuant to subsection 3.72(b) of the Commission's Rules of Practice, on Aug. 24, 1975. The Bureau of Competition does not adequately explain its failure to file a timely response by the bare statement that the petition "having apparently been mislaid, was not received by the Compliance Division of the Bureau of Competition until Sept. 9, 1975." While the Commission may, on sufficient showing,[1] grant an extension of time to file a response to a motion to reopen proceedings, no such showing has been made in this case. Therefore,

It is ordered, That this motion be, and the same hereby is, denied.

IN THE MATTER OF

PAY 'N SAVE CORPORATION, ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket C-2729. Complaint, Sept. 23, 1975-Decision, Sept. 23, 1975

Consent order requiring a Seattle, Wash., retailer of drugs and toiletries, wearing apparel, hardware, garden supplies and sporting goods, in connection with its debt collection activities, among other things to cease failing to honor agreements it has made to refrain from further legal action in collecting debts from allegedly delinquent debtors. Where debtor violates the agreement, respondent still must give the debtor notice before taking further legal action. Further, respondent is required to inform the court of the existence of any such agreements or any other response to the summons made by debtor.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Pay 'N Save Corporation, a corporation, and Donald Thoreson, an individual, hereinafter collectively referred to as respondents, have violated

---

[1] Including a demonstration of excusable neglect and substantial prejudice resulting from denial of the opportunity to file a response.

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that a proceeding by it would be in the public interest, issues this complaint:

PARAGRAPH 1. Pay 'N Save Corporation (hereinafter referred to as Pay 'N Save) is a Washington corporation, with its principal place of business located at 1511 Sixth Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Donald Thoreson is an attorney admitted to practice in the state of Washington. He formulates, directs and controls, together with the officers of Pay 'N Save, policies, acts and practices of Pay 'N Save related to legal actions, active and threatened, and is directly and personally responsible for the execution of payment agreements as set forth below. He maintains his principal office at 610 Fourth and Pike Bldg., 1424 Fourth Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Allegations below of respondents' present acts and practices include past acts and practices.

PAR. 2. Pay 'N Save is engaged primarily in the business of retail sales of drugs and toiletries, wearing apparel, hardware, garden supplies and sporting goods through stores in the States of Washington, Oregon, Alaska and California, and through outlets of its subsidiaries including Ernst, Malmo, Lamonts Apparel, Incorporated, Seattle Wholesale Nurseries, Incorporated and Seattle Sporting Goods, Incorporated.

PAR. 3. In the course of its business, Pay 'N Save extends credit to consumers in several states through retail installment and revolving charge card agreements (hereinafter "consumer credit obligations"). Pay 'N Save also engages in the collection of alleged debts based on the above consumer credit obligations in several states. Thus, these activities are in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. Pay 'N Save regularly resorts to use of judicial process to collect debts. The defendant debtors in such cases are predominantly low-income and middle-income persons not represented by counsel.

PAR. 5. In the course of using judicial process to collect debts, Pay 'N Save causes the service of summonses and complaints upon alleged debtors. Following the service of the summons and complaint, but before entry of any judgment, respondent Thoreson often enters into written or oral agreements with the alleged debtors which provide for the periodic payment of specific amounts of money until the alleged debt is satisfied. Pursuant to the making of such agreements, respondents send or cause letters to be sent to the alleged debtors. Typical, but not all inclusive, of the content of such letters are the following statements and representations:

1. This will acknowledge receipt of your recent payment in the sum of $———. We shall expect you to make monthly payments of $———

for the next ——— months until the balance is paid in full. If you follow through with these payments we shall work with you.

2. In line with our agreement we shall expect you to send us a check of $——— by ————— and we shall also expect you to send us $——— on the ——— of each month thereafter until the account is paid in full. If these checks are sent as scheduled we will work with you. If not, we will proceed with additional legal steps.

PAR. 6. Through the use of the foregoing statements, and other similar statements, representations, and agreements, respondents have represented, either directly or by implication, that no further legal action would be taken in the cases involved as long as the alleged debtor complied with the payment agreement.

PAR. 7. The statements and representations described in Paragraphs Five and Six have the tendency and capacity to cause alleged debtors, in reliance on these statements and representations, to make substantial payments to Pay 'N Save prior to any final judicial determination of liability and without the protection of statutory garnishment limitations or exemptions to post-judgment executions, and to fail to make a legal appearance in the lawsuit, to obtain counsel, or otherwise take steps to defend or protect their interests.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact, respondents proceed to take further legal action, including obtaining default judgment without prior notice to the alleged debtor, in cases where the debtor is complying with the terms of the agreement and without regard to the debtor's compliance with the payment agreements. Furthermore, respondents fail to inform the court of the existence of such agreements or of the fact of the debtor's appearance or other response to the summons, whether formal or informal, written or oral, and thus are able to, and do, obtain default judgments without any prior notice to debtor.

Therefore, the statements, representations and practices described above are unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. The acts and practices alleged above are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the Seattle Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Guild Industries Corp., a corporation, and Martin Byrd, individually and as an officer of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Guild Industries Corp. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with its principal office and place of business located at 230 - 23rd St. S., St. Petersburg, Fla.

Respondent Martin Byrd is an individual and officer of said corporate respondent. He formulates, directs and controls the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. His address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been engaged in the manufacture, offering for sale, sale and distribution of infant feeding tables and cribs to franchisees and distributors who sell them to the public. The feeding tables are sold under the trade name "Baby Butler" and the cribs under the trade names "Converta-Crib" and "Starlighter."

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, said merchandise when sold, to be shipped from their place of business in the State of Florida to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States, and maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said merchandise in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have sold and distributed in commerce to franchisees and distributors who sell respondents' products to the public, various types of advertising and promotional materials including, but not limited to, flip-chart sales presentations, audio-visual demonstration materials, brochures and reprints of magazine and newspaper articles. Said promotional materials are designed to assist in and induce the sale of respondents' products. Some franchisees and distributors have added promotional materials of their own which follow the same general pattern of the materials supplied by the respondents.

Typical and illustrative of statements and representations contained in respondents' promotional materials, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

1. Baby Butler products are recommended by leading hospitals, doctors, nurses and pediatricians.
2. Respondents' products are being sold at less than normal retail prices; i.e., at "direct factory discounts to 65%."
3. The salesmen who sell respondents' products to the consuming public are factory demonstrators or representatives.
4. The salesmen who sell respondents' products to the public are "Safety Specialists" and have had special training in safety and safety procedures.
5. Infant fatalities caused by structural defects in conventional high chairs are a frequent occurrence.

6. The life of the prospect's child is endangered by the use of conventional high chairs.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents' products are not, and never have been, recommended or endorsed by leading hospitals, doctors, nurses and pediatricians.

2. Respondents' products are not sold at less than normal retail or discount prices. To the contrary, their products are sold to consumers at prices approximately 100 percent higher than the prices paid by the franchisees or distributors who purchase the products direct from the respondents and therefore such products are sold to consumers at normal or above normal markups.

3. The salesmen are not employed by respondents as factory demonstrators or representatives, but are either franchisees or distributors of respondents or are salesmen for such franchisees or distributors.

4. The salesmen have no special training which would entitle them to be called "Safety Specialists."

5. Infant fatalities caused by structural defects in conventional high chairs are a relatively infrequent occurrence.

6. The life of the prospect's child is not endangered by the use of all conventional high chairs.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraph Four hereof were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 6. Respondents by furnishing their franchisees and distributors with sales and promotional materials have thereby placed in the hands of such franchisees and distributors, the means and instrumentalities by and through which they may mislead the public in the manner and as to the things hereinabove alleged. Respondents' franchisees and distributors have used said promotional materials in the course of sales presentations in the homes of prospective purchasers of respondents' products.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition in commerce with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale of products of the same general kind and nature as those sold by the respondents.

PAR. 8. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations and practices, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' merchandise by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in or affecting commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in or affecting commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Commission having heretofore determined to issue its complaint charging the respondents named in the caption hereof with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the respondents having been served with notice of said determination and with a copy of the complaint the Commission intended to issue, together with a proposed form of order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint to issue herein, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint in the form contemplated by said agreement, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Guild Industries Corp. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Florida, with its office and principal place of business located at 230-23rd St. S., St. Petersburg, Fla.

Respondent Martin Byrd is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his principal office and place of business is located at the above-stated address.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Guild Industries Corp., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Martin Byrd, individually and as an officer of said corporation, and respondents' agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary, division or other device, or through franchisees or licensees, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale or distribution of baby furniture or other articles of merchandise in or affecting commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or by implication, orally or in writing that:

a. Their products have been recommended by leading hospitals, doctors, nurses and pediatricians; or misrepresenting in any manner the endorsement of their products.

b. Respondents' products are sold at direct factory discounts or at less than normal retail prices or at discount prices; or misrepresenting in any manner the savings that consumers will obtain by purchasing respondents' products.

c. Their franchisees and distributors and the agents, representatives and salesmen thereof are direct factory demonstrators or representatives; or misrepresenting in any manner the employment status of persons selling respondents' products to the consuming public.

d. Their franchisees and distributors and the agents, representatives and salesmen thereof are safety specialists and have had special training in safety procedures; or misrepresenting in any manner the qualifications of persons engaged in the sale of respondents' products to the consuming public.

e. Infant fatalities caused by structural defects in conventional high chairs are a relatively frequent occurrence.

f. The lives of children are endangered by the use of conventional high chairs.

2. Inducing the purchase of respondents' products by employing scare tactics through the preparation and dissemination of sales and promotional materials, newspaper clippings and accident pictures which may tend to or do unduly instill fear in members of the purchasing public as to the dangers of the use of conventional high chairs; or misrepresenting in any manner the safety of competitors' products.

Provided, however, That respondents may make available to prospective customers reports or publications of Federal, State or local government agencies or other official and recognized organizations devoted to consumer safety, and which publications and reports are not more than three (3) years old when used.

3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of respondents' distributors, franchisees or salesmen, brochures, sales materials, flip-charts, slides or any other advertising or promotional materials which are intended for use or which may be used in connection with the sales of respondents' products to the consuming public and which contain any of the representations prohibited in Paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof.

It is further ordered, That respondents herein shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their officers and to respondents' present and future representatives, distributors, franchisees and dealers engaged in the sale of respondents' products, and secure from each of such persons a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall direct all of their distributors, franchisees or dealers, to remove and destroy or return to respondents all brochures, sales manuals, flip-charts, or any other advertising materials disseminated to them by the respondents, as described in Paragraph 3 above, of this order and which contain any of the representations prohibited in Paragraphs 1 and 2 above of this order; and in the event any such distributor, franchisee or dealer refuses to comply therewith respondents shall in that event cease to furnish and supply their products to such distributor, franchisee or dealer for resale to the public until such time as compliance with this requirement is obtained.

It is further ordered, That:

(a) Respondents herein shall notify all of their distributors, franchisees, or dealers that respondents are obligated by this order to cease to furnish and supply their products for resale to the public by any distributor, franchisee, or dealer who fails to comply with the requirements of the Federal Trade Commission's Trade Regulation Rule concerning a Cooling-Off Period for Door-to-Door Sales, 16 C.F.R. §429, 37 Fed. Reg. 22934, which is herein incorporated by reference;

(b) In the event that any such distributor, franchisee, or dealer refuses or fails to comply with the requirements of the aforesaid Trade Regulation Rule, respondents shall in that event cease to furnish and supply their products to such distributor, franchisee, or dealer for resale to the public until such time as compliance with the requirements of said Trade Regulation Rule is obtained.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall maintain, for at least a two (2) year period, copies of all literature, brochures, visual aids and any other sales or promotional materials used in connection with the promotion or sale of respondents' products, to include copies of any materials made available or distributed to consumers in the course of such promotion or sale; and such materials shall be made available to Federal Trade Commission representatives for inspection upon request in writing or by visitation during respondents' regular business hours.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent, such as dissolution, assignment or sale, resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries, or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

(b) Required item numbers were not set forth on labels, in violation of Rule 40 of said rules and regulations.

(c) The true animal name of the fur used in such fur products was not shown on labels in violation of Rule 5 of said rules and regulations.

(d) Required information on labels was described in abbreviated form and not spelled out fully, in violation of Rule 4 of said rules and regulations.

(e) Required information on labels was entered in handwriting in violation of Rule 29 of said regulations.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, are in violation of the Fur Products Labeling Act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder and constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having initiated an investigation of certain acts and practices of the respondents named in the caption hereof, and the respondents having been furnished thereafter with a copy of a draft of complaint which the New York Regional Office proposed to present to the Commission for its consideration and which, if issued by the Commission, would charge respondents with violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Fur Products Labeling Act; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid draft of complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in such complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having thereafter considered the matter and having determined that it had reason to believe that the respondents have violated the said Acts, and that complaint should issue stating its charges in that respect, and having thereupon accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34(b) of its rules, the Commission hereby issues its complaint, makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

Respondents Daniel Antonovich and David Antonovich are officers of said corporation. They formulate, direct and control the acts, practices and policies of said corporation and their address is the same as that of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

ORDER

It is ordered, That the respondents Antonovich Bros., Inc., a corporation, its successors and assigns, and its officers, and Daniel Antonovich and David Antonovich, individually and as officers of said corporation, and respondents' representatives, agents and employees, directly or through any corporation, subsidiary or other device in connection with the introduction, or manufacture for introduction, into commerce, or the sale, advertising or offering for sale in commerce, or the transportation or distribution in commerce, of any fur product; or in connection with the manufacture for sale, sale, advertising, offering for sale, transportation or distribution of any fur product which is made in whole or in part of fur which has been shipped and received in commerce; or in connection with the introduction into commerce, or the transportation or distribution in commerce, of any fur, as the terms "commerce," "fur" and "fur product" are defined in the Fur Products Labeling Act, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Failing to affix a label to such fur product showing in words and in figures plainly legible all of the information required to be disclosed by each of the subsections of Section 4(2) of the Fur Products Labeling Act.

2. Failing to set forth the term "natural" as part of the information required to be disclosed on a label under the Fur Products Labeling Act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder to describe such fur product which is not pointed, bleached, dyed, tip-dyed, or otherwise artificially colored.

3. Failing to set forth on a label the item number or mark assigned to such fur product.

4. Failing to set forth on a label the true animal name of the fur used in such fur product.

5. Setting forth information required under the Fur Products Labeling Act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder in abbreviated form on a label pertaining to such fur product.

6. Setting forth required information on a label in handwriting.

Such notice shall include each individual respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged, as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

It is further ordered, That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order.

It is further ordered, That the respondent corporation shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of its operating divisions.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order to cease and desist contained herein.

IN THE MATTER OF FOOD FAIR STORES, INC., ET AL.

CONSENT ORDER, ETC., IN REGARD TO ALLEGED VIOLATION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

Docket 8935. Complaint, July 30, 1973-Decision, Sept. 30, 1975.

Consent order requiring Amterre Development, Inc., a Bala-Cynwyd, Pa., shopping center developer, among other things to cease maintaining resale prices, discouraging discount advertising and selling, and denying competitive prices to the public through the insertion of restrictive provisions in leases and agreements with shopping center tenants.

Appearances

For the Commission: Jonathan E. Gaines and Maynard F. Thompson.

For the respondents: Alex Akerman, Shipley, Akerman, Stein & Kaps, Wash., D.C. Warren J. Kaps, Stein & Rosen, New York City. Glenn A. Mitchell, Stein, Mitchell & Mezines, Wash., D.C.

COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the respondents named in the caption hereof, and hereinafter more particularly designated and described, have violated and are now violating the provisions of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45), and it appearing to this Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof is in the public interest, hereby issues this complaint stating its charges with respect thereto as follows:

1. A. Respondent Food Fair Stores, Inc., (Food Fair) is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at 3175 John F. Kennedy Blvd., Philadelphia, Pa.

Food Fair is engaged in, among other things, the management and operation of a retail food chain, the retail sale of food and other merchandise and, through its subsidiary Amterre Development, Inc. (formerly Food Fair Properties, Inc.,) and other subsidiaries, the development, construction and management of shopping centers. In 1971 Food Fair was the fourth largest retail food chain in the United States with sales of approximately $2 billion.

B. Respondent Amterre Development, Inc. (Amterre) is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 2 Decker Square, Bala-Cynwyd, Pa.

Amterre was formed by and is controlled by Food Fair for the purpose of developing, constructing and managing shopping centers. Food Fair has the exclusive right to the space set aside for a supermarket in each shopping center developed by Amterre. No other supermarket is permitted in these shopping centers without Food Fair's consent.

Amterre, with assets in 1971 of $230 million and a total income of $18 million, is the largest publicly-held shopping center development company in the United States. Through Amterre, Food Fair is presently operating 48 shopping centers throughout the Eastern portion of the United States and 36 free-standing commercial properties with total gross leasable area in excess of 9,000,000 square feet.

2. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents maintain and have maintained a substantial course of trade in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Respondent Food Fair owns and operates in excess of six hundred food store units and department stores located in sixteen different States for which it purchases for resale, and through which, it sells goods in interstate commerce. Amterre, on its own behalf, and on behalf of Food Fair, owns and operates shopping centers in nine different States. In so doing Amterre has been, and is now, engaged in interstate lease negotiations and transactions with its tenants and prospective tenants.

3. Except to the extent that competition has been hindered, lessened and eliminated as set forth in this complaint, respondents Food Fair and Amterre, in the course and conduct of their business of selling, at retail, food and other merchandise, and of developing, constructing, and managing shopping centers, have been and are now in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals and partnerships.

4. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents are and have been engaged in unfair methods of competition and unfair acts and practices in commerce in that they have negotiated, executed and enforced and are now negotiating, executing and enforcing leases which control or eliminate discount sales, exclude discount stores and tend to establish and maintain prices at which or the price ranges within which shopping center tenants and their competitors must sell their merchandise. Additionally, respondents' lease provisions encourage each tenant to enforce price restrictions against its competitors. Pursuant to such lease provisions, respondents' tenant, The Felsway Corporation, has brought suit to enjoin price cutting competitors and eliminate price competition.

5. Through the negotiation, utilization and enforcement of these lease provisions, among others, respondents have entered into agreements which tend to fix prices and which otherwise restrain trade and have engaged in unfair methods of competition and unfair acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having issued a complaint which charges respondents Food Fair Stores, Inc. and Amterre Development Inc., with violating the Federal Trade Commission Act, and

The respondent Amterre Development Inc., and counsel for the Commission having thereafter executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by Amterre Development Inc. of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the aforesaid complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission that the law has been violated as alleged in said complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules, and

The Commission having thereafter accepted the executed consent agreement and placed such agreement on the public record for a period of sixty days, now in further conformity with the procedure prescribed in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Amterre Development Inc. is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business in Bala-Cynwyd, Pa.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of respondent Amterre Development Inc., and the proceeding is in the public interest.

II

A. It is ordered, That respondent cease and desist from making, carrying out, or enforcing, directly or indirectly, an agreement or provision of an agreement which:

B. It is further ordered, That respondent will within thirty (30) days after service of this order mail a copy of Letter "A," attached hereto, to all tenants of its shopping centers whose leases make reference in the use clauses to the price or quality of the merchandise or services to be sold.

C. It is further ordered, That respondent cease and desist from entering into any agreement, directly or indirectly, with any tenant that said tenant may:

1. specify or control or may require respondent to specify or control prices, price ranges, or price lines of merchandise or services sold by any other retailer;

2. control or may require respondent to control discounting by any other retailer; or

3. exclude any retailer from any of respondent's shopping centers by reason of such retailer's discount selling or discount advertising.

D. It is further ordered, That respondent advise the Commission in writing within sixty (60) days of any occasion that:

1. a tenant disapproves the admission into any of respondent's shopping centers of any other retailer;

2. a tenant refuses to approve the renewal of another retailer's lease in any of respondent's shopping centers;

3. a tenant approves the admission of another retailer into any of respondent's shopping centers subject to conditions imposed by the tenant relating to the pricing, price ranges, price lines, trade names, store names, trademarks, brands or lines of merchandise, or the discounting practices or methods of such other retailer; or

4. a tenant enters into an agreement with respondent to become a tenant in any of respondent's shopping centers on condition that respondent refuse to renew the lease of another retailer.

III

It is further ordered, That respondent shall:

A. within thirty (30) days after service of this order upon respondent, notify each of its tenants of this order by providing each tenant with a copy thereof by registered or certified mail;

B. within sixty (60) days after service of this order upon respondent, file with the Commission a report showing the manner and form in which it has complied and is complying with each and every specific provision of this order; and

C. notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any change in the corporate respondent which may affect compliance obligations arising out of this order.

IV

It is further ordered, That the complaint in this proceeding be, and it hereby is, dismissed with respect to respondent Food Fair Stores, Inc.

LETTER "A"

[On Official Amterre Development Inc. stationery]

Gentlemen:

Amterre Development Inc. has consented to the issuance by the Federal Trade Commission of an order which, among other things, prohibits Amterre from specifying that its tenants shall or shall not sell merchandise or services at any particular price or within any range of prices, and that its tenants shall or shall not sell designated price lines of merchandise. A copy of the order is enclosed.

Your lease describes the merchandise or services you are to sell in terms such as "popular priced," "medium priced," "high priced," "Medium to better quality," or the like. Please be advised that such language is intended only as a description of the general quality of the merchandise or services you sell. It is not intended and will not be enforced to affect the retail selling price of your merchandise or services. Pursuant to the terms of the order you are free to set the prices for your merchandise and services and are not required to adhere to any particular price, range of prices, or price lines expressed or implied in your lease or in any other agreement with the shopping center.

This letter shall not operate as a waiver of any rights which Amterre may now have to require you, except as your lease otherwise provides, to sell merchandise or services at a general quality level or levels.

Order requiring four west coast travel agencies located in Seattle, Wash., and San Francisco, Calif., among other things to cease making false claims about "psychic surgery" and promoting tours for such surgery, which has been misrepresented as an actual surgical operation by which diseased tissue or disease-causing material is removed from the body using only the bare hands. The order further requires respondents to send notices to past purchasers and to those who inquire about such tours in the future warning them of the serious danger involved.

AMENDED COMPLAINT

The Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Travel King, Inc., d/b/a Travel King, Inc. & Ramble Tours, Phil-Am Travel Agency, Inc., Gem Travel Service, Inc., and Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc., corporations; Yuda Galazan and Nyla Ford, individually and as officers and directors of Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc.; Ronald Brown, individually and as an officer of Travel King, Inc.; Adeline C. Heredia and Emile H. Heredia, individually and as officers of Phil-Am Travel Agency, Inc.; and Laurence C. Marquez and Marian E. Butterfield, individually and as officers of Gem Travel Service, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that a proceeding in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues this complaint:

PARAGRAPH 1. Travel King, Inc., d/b/a Travel King, Inc. & Ramble Tours (hereinafter "Travel King"), is a Washington corporation, with its corporate office at 1200 - 153rd N.E., Bellevue, Wash., and a branch office at 1401 Seattle Tower Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

* Reported as amended by order of May 31, 1974 of the administrative law judge.

Phil-Am Travel Agency, Inc. (hereinafter "Phil-Am") is a California corporation, with its corporate office at 210 Post St., Suite 205, San Francisco, Calif. and another place of business at 407 Alaska Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

Gem Travel Service, Inc. (hereinafter "Gem") is a California corporation, with its office and principal place of business at 703 Market St., Room 405, San Francisco, Calif.

Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc. (hereinafter "Ramble"), is a Washington Corporation, with its corporate office at 1401 Seattle Tower Bldg., Seattle, Wash. Ramble was formed in December 1973 to succeed Travel King in the operation of the business located at that address.

Yuda Galazan is an individual and is presently managing and purchasing the business of the Travel King branch office located at 1401 Seattle Tower Bldg. He also is an officer, director, and the sole shareholder of Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of Ramble and the aforementioned Travel King branch office, including those hereinafter set forth, and his business address is 1401 Seattle Tower Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

Nyla Ford is an individual and a former officer and principal shareholder of Travel King, and a present officer and director of Ramble. Together with Yuda Galazan, she formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of Ramble and the Travel King branch office including those hereinafter set forth, and her business address is 1401 Seattle Tower Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

Ronald Brown is an individual and an officer and principal shareholder of Travel King. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of Travel King, including those hereinafter set forth. His business address is 1200 - 153rd N.E., Bellevue, Wash.

Adeline C. Heredia and Emile H. Heredia are individuals and officers and the principal shareholders of Phil-Am. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of Phil-Am, including those hereinafter set forth, and their business address is 210 Post Street, Suite 205, San Francisco, Calif.

Laurence C. Marquez and Marian E. Butterfield are individuals and officers and principal shareholders of Gem Travel Service, Inc. They formulate, direct and control the policies, acts and practices of Gem, including those hereinafter set forth, and their business address is 703 Market St., Room 405, San Francisco, Calif.

PAR. 2. Respondents Travel King, Phil-Am, and Gem each operate a general travel agency business, including the sale or arrangement of transportation, accommodations, and other services for travelers.

Allegations below of respondents' present acts or practices include past acts or practices.

PAR. 3. In the course of their businesses, respondents make arrangements for residents of Washington and other states to travel to the Philippines on the tours described below. Promotional materials, letters, contracts, business correspondence, monies and other documents are transmitted between respondents' offices and agents who refer customers to them, customers, common carriers, and other business organizations located in various States of the United States and in other nations of the world. Accordingly, respondents are engaged in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. Respondents Travel King, Phil-Am, and Gem advertise, offer for sale and sell to the general public package tours to the Philippines so that customers may undergo "psychic surgery," purported to be a treatment by which the body is entered without surgical instruments, using only the bare hands. The treatment is also known as "psychic healing," "faith healing," and "spiritual" or "spirit healing" and is performed by persons not licensed in the Philippines or elsewhere to practice medicine.

PAR. 5. Respondents engage in written, oral and visual representations which have the tendency and capacity, directly or by implication, to lead members of the general public to believe that the "psychic surgery" performed in the Philippines is an actual surgical operation, that the body is thereby opened, and that diseased tissue or disease-causing material is thereby removed from the human body. Respondents do so by using, or causing to be used, some means of promotion, including but not limited to one or more of the following:

A. Public dissemination of brochures prepared, printed and paid for with the assistance of certain major international airline companies, specifically Northwest Airlines, Inc. and Pan American World Airways, Inc.

B. Public dissemination of other materials.

C. Newspaper advertisements.

D. Showing of films at public meetings.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

A. The so-called "psychic surgery" performed in the Philippines is not an actual surgical operation, the body is not thereby opened, and neither diseased tissue nor disease-causing material is thereby removed from the human body.

B. Respondents lack a reasonable basis for representations leading members of the general public to believe that the "psychic surgery" performed in the Philippines is an actual surgical operation, that the body is thereby opened, and that diseased tissue or disease-causing material is thereby removed from the human body.

Therefore, the acts and practices referred to in Paragraphs Four and Five are deceptive and unfair.

PAR. 7. Persons suffering from many types of ailments, including cancer, heart disease, multiple sclerosis, blindness, deafness, paralysis, diabetes and arthritis may be led to believe by respondents' promotions that "psychic surgery" is an actual surgical operation, that the body is thereby opened, and that diseased tissue or disease-causing material is thereby removed from the human body. Thus, respondents' promotions of Philippine psychic surgery prey upon and exploit the frustrations and hopes of people who are seriously ill, and their families. Respondents are travel agents, not licensed physicians, and therefore are not qualified to diagnose, advise or select patients for any operation. Further, respondents disclaim responsibility for any medical consequences to their customers during their travel to the Philippine Islands or afterwards. People who are seriously ill, and their families, are vulnerable to the influence of respondents' promotions which hold out a tantalizing hope which the medical profession, by contrast, cannot offer. Therefore, the acts and practices referred to in Paragraphs Four and Five are unfair.

PAR. 8. The result of the respondents' aforesaid misleading, deceptive and unfair acts and practices is that people who are seriously ill may be and are induced to forego conventional medical treatment, thereby worsening their condition and, in some cases, hastening death. Further, the aforesaid acts and practices cause people who are seriously ill and their families to spend large amounts of money and be subjected to the inconvenience of traveling for a nonexistent "operation."

PAR. 9. The respondents' acts and practices are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INITIAL DECISION BY DANIEL H. HANSCOM, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

FEBRUARY 28, 1975

ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT

An amended complaint issued May 17, 1974,[1] charging respondents with promoting, offering for sale and selling package tours to the Philippines so that customers could undergo "psychic surgery," purporting to be a treatment by which the body is entered without surgical instruments "using only the bare hands." According to the complaint, respondents engaged in written, oral and visual representations which had the tendency and capacity to lead members of the public to believe that "psychic surgery" performed in the Philippines is an actual surgical operation, that the body is opened, and that disease-causing material is thereby removed. The complaint further alleged that respondents had no reasonable basis for the representations made, and that persons suffering from many types of ailments including cancer, heart disease, multiple sclerosis, blindness, deafness, paralysis, diabetes and arthritis may be led to believe that "psychic surgery" is an actual surgical operation, that the body is opened and diseased tissue removed. According to the complaint, the frustrations and hopes of the seriously ill and their families were exploited, and the representations had the tendency and capacity to induce the seriously ill to forego conventional medical treatment worsening their condition and in some cases hastening death, or to cause them to spend large amounts of money and to undergo the inconvenience of traveling for a nonexistent "operation." The acts and practices of respondents were challenged as unfair, misleading and deceptive, and violative of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.[2]

ANSWERS

The answers denied any violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, denied the material allegations of the complaint, denied that respondents made any representations, directly or by implication, that "psychic surgery" was an actual surgical operation by which diseased tissue or disease-causing material was removed from the human body, and denied that respondents lacked a reasonable basis for any representations that were made. Most respondents raised affirmative defenses that the tours arranged to visit "psychic healers," "faith healers" or "spiritual healers" in the Philippines, insofar as the King, Inc., Phil-Am Travel Agency, Inc., and Gem Travel Service, Inc. At a prehearing conference held Mar. 6, 1974, in Seattle, Wash., complaint counsel advised of their intention to amend the complaint to add a number of individual respondents, one additional corporate respondent, Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc., and to make certain substantive changes in the allegations. The motion to amend was certified to the Commission together with respondents' opposition on Apr. 5, 1974. The Commission granted the motion to amend and on May 17, 1974, issued an amended complaint which was served on all individual and corporate respondents between May 23 and June 3, 1974. Answers to the amended complaint were filed between June 18 and 26. A timetable for pretrial proceedings was issued by the undersigned on June 24, 1974, setting dates for the completion of discovery, exchange of lists of witnesses and documents, and setting Sept. 9, 1974, for commencement of hearings on the merits.

[2] In addition to a cease and desist order, and certain other relief, restitution for persons purchasing package tours from respondents was sought by complaint counsel. Restitution was not included in the "Notice Order" issued either with the original or the amended complaint. Complaint counsel advised of their intention to seek restitution at the pretrial conference of Mar. 6, 1974, and subsequently filed a "Notice of Intent to Seek Restitution from Corporate and Individual Respondents" on Mar. 22, 1974.

customer and the healers were concerned, were basically religious experiences or activities "imbedded in the religious doctrine of the Christian religion," and that the complaint amounted to an attempted regulation of religious action involving the "testing of the truth or falsity of the religious beliefs" of customers and "faith healers," "spiritual healers," or "psychic healers" in violation of the First Amendment. Travel King, Inc., further alleged that it had nothing to do with what took place between the "customers and the healers." Individual respondent Ronald Brown denied that he was ever actively involved in the operation of Travel King, Inc., and denied any responsibility for the "formulation, direction, arrangement, or administration" of package tours by that corporate respondent.

PROCEEDINGS

Hearings were held between Sept. 9, 1974, and Sept. 24, 1974. Forty-eight witnesses testified, 33 being called by complaint counsel and 15 by respondents. The exhibits received numbered 134, 131 being introduced by complaint counsel and the balance by respondents. The exhibits include promotional literature, advertisements, films, TV scripts, respondents' correspondence with tour members and prospective members, internal memoranda, newspaper articles and clippings which were reproduced and distributed by one or another of respondents, medical reports, and similar materials. The transcript numbers 2,388 pages.

The briefing schedule issued requiring proposed findings to be filed by Nov. 15, 1974, and replies by Nov. 27, 1974. On Nov. 6, 1974, complaint counsel requested an extension of time for findings to Dec. 13, 1974, and to Jan. 10, 1975, for replies. This was granted by the undersigned as to all parties provided an extension of time for filing the initial decision to Feb. 28, 1975, was granted by the Commission. Such an extension was granted on Dec. 17, 1974.

BASIS OF DECISION

This matter is now before the undersigned for initial decision based on the allegations of the complaint, answers, evidence, and the proposed findings of fact, conclusions and briefs filed by respondents and complaint counsel. All proposed findings of fact, conclusions and arguments not specifically found or accepted herein are rejected. The undersigned, having considered the entire record, and all the contentions of both sides, makes the following findings and conclusions, and issues the order set out at the end hereof:

FINDINGS OF FACT

RESPONDENTS

Travel King, et al.

1. Travel King, Inc., was incorporated in 1969 in the State of Washington. From September 1972 to February 1974, Travel King had its main office in Bellevue, Washington, a suburb of Seattle. From April 1973 to May 1974, a branch office was maintained in downtown Seattle which did business as Travel King, Inc. & Ramble Tours. Although Travel King still exists as a corporate entity, it has had no place of business since May 1974 and, according to its answer and that of Nyla Ford, it is no longer doing business.

2. Ramble Travel & Tours, Inc. (hereinafter "Ramble") was incorporated in the State of Washington on Dec. 7, 1973. Ramble's corporate offices were located in downtown Seattle, Wash., where Ramble did business from Dec. 7, 1973, until May 1974, using the trade names Travel King and Travel King & Ramble Tours. The business purpose of the formulation of Ramble was to operate a travel agency and to succeed Travel King in the operation of the downtown Seattle business. Ramble continued using the same name as its predecessor in order to maintain name identification with its customers and also continued using the same travel brochures.

3. In 1971, Nyla Ford began purchasing the business of Travel King. In September 1972, Ronald Brown became half-owner of the business, Nyla Ford remaining owner of the other half. This dual ownership continued until February 1973, when Ronald Brown acquired Nyla Ford's interest, corporate respondent Travel King being in financial difficulties. Since Feb. 1, 1973, individual respondent Ronald Brown has been the sole owner of Travel King, Inc. Nyla Ford has been president of Travel King from September 1972 until the present. She was an incorporator. She also served as vice president and a director of Ramble Travel & Tours, Inc., from Dec. 7, 1973, until February 1974. However, she held no stock in Ramble.

4. Yuda Galazan has been president of Ramble Travel & Tours, Inc., from its incorporation on Dec. 7, 1973, to the present, owning 100 percent of its stock. Prior to the formation of Ramble, Mr. Galazan was active during the fall of 1973 in the management of the downtown Seattle office of Travel King, Inc., and engaged in the promotion of "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines as later set out herein.

Representations to the Public by Travel King

8. Travel King, Inc. disseminated travel brochures, advertisements and promotional literature, and sponsored promotional meetings, including film showings in hotels and similar places in the Seattle metropolitan area, to market tours to the Philippines. Representations were made to members of the public in connection with the promotion of such tours that "healers" in the Philippines, variously known as "psychic surgeons," "psychic healers," "faith healers" and "spiritual" or "spirit healers," or the like, would open bodies with their bare hands, remove diseased tissue or disease-causing material, and that thereby many persons were cured of serious, even terminal illnesses, as well as of chronic conditions of a troublesome, painful, or incapacitating nature.

9. "RAMBLE TOURS TO THE PHILIPPINES" is the tour brochure used by Travel King to describe the Philippine tour. Travel King requested Northwest Orient Airlines to distribute this brochure widely. The schedule provides for "Visit to Famous Spiritualist of The Philippines," and contains a release to be signed by the tour member for any "responsibility regarding any treatment or treatments administered by the Faith Healers" (CX 2). "TOUR TO THE PHILIPPINES" (CX 5) is a single sheet which sets out the cost of the tour, and also contains a summary of the basic information provided in CX 2. The reservation application form (CX 6), which Travel King, and also Mr. Galazan, used for a time during the beginning of these group tours, likewise provides for a release for any treatment or treatments by "Faith Healers." Mr. Galazan testified that CX 2, 5 and 6 were sent in the mail to interested customers and to past tour customers for them to pass on to other people (see admissions of Travel King and Galazan; Galazan, Tr. 820, 830-35, 867-68).

10. "QUESTIONS YOU MAY HAVE" (CX 7A-B) is a description issued by Travel King and Mr. Galazan in the promotion of its tours to the Philippines describing "psychic surgery," stating that it is not connected with any one church but that "people of all faiths" are healed, that "anyone" can be helped, and that "upward of 70% are happy with the results." The leaflet lists major and minor ailments which may be treated, guarantees appointments, and states that many doctors go to the Philippines "for treatment themselves," and that other doctors are "researching" the phenomenon. The leaflet was prepared in the fall of 1973 when the travel agency became involved in answering questions about health, so that those who worked in the office could answer questions. It was distributed to those inquiring about the tours, and was mailed to those who signed up as tour members prior to departure. The printing was paid for either by Mr. Galazan directly or by Travel King, Inc., with Mr. Galazan eventually reimbursing the travel agency (Galazan, Tr. 815-18; Tr. 1830-31).

11. "QUESTIONS YOU MAY HAVE" was distributed to the public, as stated, in connection with the promotion of tours to the Philippines by Travel King. Among other statements in this leaflet were the following (CX 7A-B): There are men in the Philippines who have (or claim to have) the powers to heal and/or operate on persons without instruments of any kind. They do this with no sanitation, and no pain, entering the body with their hands, operating in a matter of minutes, and with prayer closing the body leaving no scar.

* * * * * * *

> WHAT TYPE OF CURES? Cancer, coronary, multiple sclerosis, blindness, deafness, tumors, diabetes, blood clots, arthritis, etc.; these are some ailments people have claimed were cured. Some have been told they only have months to live and others who have minor ailments.

* * * * * * *

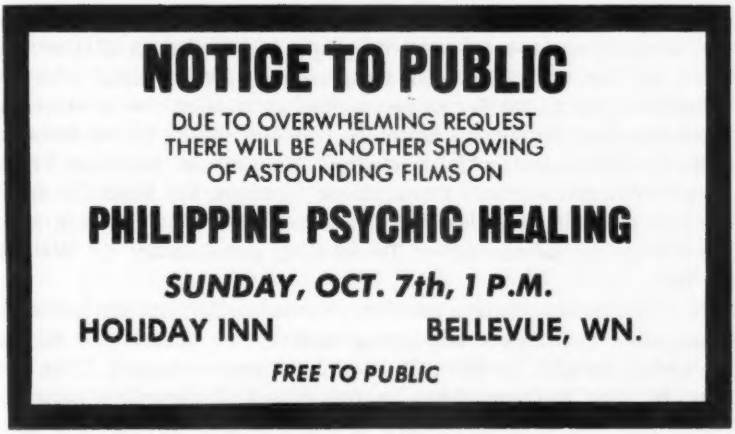
> HOW DOES OUR AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION FEEL ABOUT THIS? Most doctors due to their training are sceptical, and yet we have many doctors going for treatment themselves, as well as others around the world who are now in the process of researching all available information.

12. CX 8A-H is a series of photocopied newspaper, news letter, and magazine articles conveying the impression that the human body is opened with the bare hands, that diseased tissue or disease-causing material is removed curing serious or terminal illnesses. Numerous references are made to actual surgery with the bare hands, the body being opened, and diseased tissue or disease-causing material being removed.

13. Hundreds of copies of the foregoing newspaper articles were printed by Mr. Galazan and distributed at various public film showings sponsored by Travel King held during the fall of 1973. Ms. Hasson, the Travel King office manager, recalled delivering multiple copies of CX 8A-H in bulk to one of the film showings held during September or October of 1973 (Galazan, Tr. 830-33, Hasson, Tr. 1901).

Public Film Showings and Advertising Thereof

14. Travel King sponsored a number of public meetings, announced by advertisements in major Seattle newspapers, at which films depicting Philippine "healers" were shown to the public. The advertisements were placed during the fall of 1973 in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, the Seattle Times, and other papers such as the Aberdeen Daily World (CX 9, 10, 14-16, 192, 193 AND 197). The advertisement of Oct. 6, 1973, in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer was as follows (CX 10):



NOTICE TO PUBLIC

DUE TO OVERWHELMING REQUEST
THERE WILL BE ANOTHER SHOWING OF ASTOUNDING FILMS ON

PHILIPPINE PSYCHIC HEALING

SUNDAY, OCT. 7th, 1 P.M.

HOLIDAY INN BELLEVUE, WN.

FREE TO PUBLIC

15. The public meetings were held in Seattle, Bellevue, Bellingham, and Everett, and several hundred people attended each of them. Ms. Ford and Mr. Galazan attended representing Travel King, with Mr. Galazan acting as master of ceremonies at at least one of them. At these meetings, individuals known as Tom Muchlinski, Elaine Shinn, or both, spoke concerning "faith healing." Mr. Galazan described Travel King's tours and services. During these meetings, Ms. Ford also spoke to those attending and described the tours offered by Travel King to the Philippines (admissions of Travel King and Galazan; Dr. Wallace, Tr. 753).

16. The record contains the film, provided by Mr. Galazan, shown at these public meetings or one similar to it (CX 80; Galazan, Tr. 825-26; see also C. Wright, Tr. 120-130). It depicts "psychic surgery." The film must be seen to comprehend its full impact. It records a series of "operations" on individuals, each of whom is shown lying on a table surrounded by onlookers. The "psychic surgeon" or "faith healer" appears to have his hands, surrounded by blood, in a depression in one part or another of the patient's body, and appears to have opened or to be opening it with his bare hands, without anesthesia or surgical instruments of any sort, and to be removing tissue or other material from inside. During the "operation," the "psychic surgeon" or "faith healer" from time to time holds up to the view of the onlookers what appears to be tissue or material removed from the body. Thereafter, the abdomen, or other part of the anatomy which appears on the film to have been opened, is wiped clean by the "psychic surgeon" or "faith healer," or his attendants. No marks of any incision are seen, and there is no scar. The patient arises and walks away. See CX 80; CX 79 and CX 81 are other reels of film depicting "psychic surgery" which, as described later herein, were shown at meetings connected with or sponsored, directly or indirectly, by respondents Gem and Phil-Am, or those promoting tours with those respondents.

17. Travel King tour brochures (CX 2), "QUESTIONS YOU MAY HAVE" (CX 7A-B), and the photocopied newspaper, newsletter and magazine material (CX 8A-H), were distributed at the Travel King film showings (admissions of Travel King and Galazan; Galazan, Tr. 823-834).

18. During the Sept. 30, 1973, meeting, sponsored by Mr. Galazan and typical of these Travel King film showings (see CX 192 and CX 193; Galazan, Tr. 821-24). Tom Muchlinski, mentioned in finding 15, told the assembled crowd that before he went to the Philippines he had a heart problem which made it difficult for him to walk and which necessitated his taking many nitroglycerin pills. He also told the group he no longer needed to take the pills and showed a film (similar to CX

80) of the kind of "psychic surgery" he experienced. Mr. Muchlinski also showed the group what he claimed was a piece of cholesterol removed from his heart by the psychic surgeons with their bare hands. A woman who claimed to be "legally blind" also spoke at the meeting, telling how she had been operated on in the Philippines by the "psychic surgeons," and that they had improved her vision. Mr. Galazan introduced the various people who spoke about their operations to the audience. The cost of the hotel room in which the meeting was held was shared equally by Travel King, Inc. and Mr. Galazan (Galazan, Tr. 823-833).

19. The film showing held on Oct. 7, 1973 (see CX 10), was similar to the September 30 showing. At this time, Mr. Muchlinski, and other people, again came forward and gave testimonials about the "psychic surgery" they had received in the Philippines. When people asked whether they could be cured of specific diseases, they were told there might be hope for them. Several people signed up at the meeting itself to go on the next Travel King tour. The same literature that was distributed at the Sept. 30, 1973, meeting was also made available at the Oct. 7, 1973, meeting (Galazan, Tr. 858-864). Nyla Ford estimated that about 500 people came to the September meeting and 700 to the October meeting (Ford, Tr. 1824-1832). Additional film showings for audiences also numbering several hundred were held on Nov. 4 and Nov. 17, 1973, at which Mr. Galazan was present (Galazan, Tr. 890A-B; see CX 14, 15 and 16). Mr. Muchlinski's expenses in promoting Travel King's "psychic surgery" tours were paid by Mr. Galazan (Tr. 864-65).

20. Dr. John Wallace is a psychiatrist and teacher of psychiatry at the University of Washington School of Medicine. He is also a consultant to other doctors on the counseling of patients and families of patients who are ill with life-threatening diseases, such as cancer or heart disease. In November 1973, Dr. Wallace saw an ad for a "psychic healing" film showing by Travel King. He subsequently attended the showing at the Olympic Hotel in Seattle (CX 14 and 15 are copies of the advertisements for the showing which appeared in Seattle papers). Dr. Wallace identified Mr. Galazan, Elaine Shin (Shinn), and Mr. Wallinski (Muchlinski) as the principal persons involved in the showing, and identified a Travel King Brochure (CX 2) and promotional document entitled, "QUESTIONS YOU MAY HAVE" (CX 7) as being distributed (Dr. Wallace, Tr. 698-701). Dr. Wallace testified that the films were identified verbally as "showing psychic surgical operations taking place in the Philippines" (Dr. Wallace, Tr. 701). At one point there was a comment by one of the film showers "There it is, the tumor is out" (Dr. Wallace, Tr. 720). Dr. Wallace testified with respect to the audience and the effect of the film at the Olympic Hotel (Tr. 722, 724-25, and 729):

> There were 100 to 150 people present in the Spanish Ballroom. Both sexes, all ages > from children to very elderly people. Many of them obviously infirm in one fashion or another, lame, handicapped in a variety of ways. Some individuals obviously were definitely ill at that time as indicated by their powdered complexion and feebleness and so forth. Others had been clearly through some serious illness. They looked pretty pale. Others in the audience were obviously healthy.

> Certain individuals in the audience were obviously made very anxious and distressed by the close-ups of human anatomy or alleged human anatomy. Some elderly ladies appeared to be about to faint. There were several comments to the effect, look at that, he is really taking it out, quote, unquote.
> In the contents of the film and in the dialogue that went on between the showers of the film and the audience there was a consistent reassurance that cure or some degree of help would be forthcoming. In the context of the film, it would appear that certain dramatic surgical procedures were taking place.

Dr. Wallace testified that questions from the audience in effect asked Travel King representatives whether any condition could be helped by the "psychic surgeons." The answer received was "yes, any condition can be helped by psychic surgery" (Tr. 725).

21. Dr. Wallace evaluated the Travel King brochure (CX 2) and promotional document "QUESTIONS YOU MAY HAVE" (CX 7). In his opinion, statements in CX 7 would contribute to the belief in "psychic surgery" by a seriously ill person. He referred both to claims of cures and a statement suggesting that the existence of films proved that "psychic surgeons" were not hypnotists (Tr. 732). Dr. Wallace testified that CX 7, distributed at the film showings (Tr. 732):

> * * * implies that what you see on the camera is all, or on the film, is all there is to be seen, and that the camera or that results of the filming are the complete and whole truth in the context of a variable description of what the audience was told is being done * * *. The audience was consistently told to suspend their faculties.

TV Advertising

22. Respondents Travel King, Yuda Galazan and Ronald Brown disseminated advertising over TV station KTVW, Channel 13, in the Seattle-Tacoma area promoting Travel King's tours to the Philippines to see "psychic healers." The audio portion of the advertisement is in the record (CX 210). The commercial was broadcast twice each day between Sept. 26 and Oct. 16, 1973 (CX 209). The audio portion of the script states (CX 210):

> * * * YOU CAN VISIT THE MIRACULOUS PHILIPPINE FAITH HEALERS, ALTHOUGH TRAVEL KING TRAVEL AGENCY AND PARTICIPATING SCHEDULED AIRLINES ACCEPT NO RESPONSIBILITY FOR ANY SERVICES, SURGERY OR TREATMENT DONE BY THE PSYCHIC HEALERS, IN CONNECTION WITH THIS TOUR OF THE PHILIPPINES. (Emphasis added.)

Representations to the Public by Phil-Am

23. Respondent Phil-Am Travel Agency, Inc., like Travel King, disseminated travel brochures, literature, and other promotional materials, showed, arranged for or was responsible for the showing of films, and engaged in other activities for the purpose of marketing its tours to the Philippines, representing to members of the public that "faith healers," "psychic healers," "spiritual healers," etc., would open their bodies with their bare hands, remove diseased tissue or disease-causing material, and thereby cure many persons of serious illnesses.

Travel Literature

24. Individual respondents Emile H. Heredia and Adeline C. Heredia, co-owners of corporate respondent Phil-Am, became interested in the business prospects of selling tours to the public to visit Philippine "healers," and authorized Phil-Am's marketing and sales manager, one Victorino P. Mapa, to prepare travel brochures (see Mapa, Tr. 1420-26, 1428-1430, 1432-38; CX 111). The record contains examples of these brochures (CX 26, 27, 39, 106, and 175). One of Phil-Am's brochures "SPIRITUALIST PILGRIMAGE TO THE PHILIPPINES" states (CX 26):

> A European authority on parapsychology said that the phenomenon of psychic surgery is happening in the Philippines because of the intense religious devotion of its people. Witness and experience this at close range.
> See and consult with the world famous spiritual healers of the Philippines * * *. (Emphasis added.)

The Pan-American tour brochure disseminated by Phil-Am listed 14 Philippine "spiritual healers" (CX 27; see also CX 28 and CX 29). A number of these were identified by Ms. Carol Wright, a witness herein, as "psychic surgeons" who purported to "operate" on patients by opening their bodies with their bare hands, and removing diseased tissue or disease-causing material using fakery and deception in the process (C. Wright, Tr. 110, et seq.). In addition to travel brochures prepared by Phil-Am and Pan-American, brochures were prepared with Northwest Orient Airlines (CX 26), Philippine Airlines (CX 175), and Japan Airlines (CX 176). In the case of Northwest Orient and Pan-American the airlines paid one-half the cost and Phil-Am the other half. The brochures prepared with Northwest Orient, Pan-American Airways, and Philippine Airlines were disseminated to members of the public by mail and personally to those who visited Phil-Am's offices (admissions of Phil-Am).

25. In addition to brochures, Phil-Am disseminated a booklet entitled "A GUIDE TO SPIRITUAL AND MAGNETIC HEALING AND PSYCHIC SURGERY IN THE PHILIPPINES" (Mapa, Tr. 1485-86), and offered it for sale to prospective tour members (CX 170). Page 2 of the booklet discusses "What is PSYCHIC SURGERY?" and states (CX 41):

> By means totally unexplainable in terms of modern science, certain individuals (usually with little or no academic training) possess the ability to "operate" on the human body using only their bare hands, and remove diseased tissue, blood clots, and pus * * *.

On page 13, the booklet states (CX 41):

> * * * the healers themselves are concentrating their efforts on patients whose arrangements are handled by Christian and Diplomat.
> * * * * * * *
> Diplomat Travel & Tours * * * specializes in handling patients who desire to visit Tony Agpaoa at his clinic * * *.
> * * * * * * *
> Christian Travel Center * * * specializes in handling patients who desire to visit one or more of the healers associated with the Union Espiritista Cristiana de Filipinas.

Phil-Am was appointed by the Christian Travel Center, Inc. of the Philippines as their exclusive travel agents in the United States to organize tours to consult "spiritual healers", who in fact purported to open the human body with the bare hands, and the "President General" of the foregoing "Union Espiritista Cristiana de Filipinas, Inc." so informed Phil-Am by letter of July 19, 1973 (CX 111; see also Adeline Heredia, Tr. 1565). Phil-Am worked with Diplomat Tours of the Philippines until April 1973 bringing groups from the United States to see "psychic surgeons" (CX 177).

Tour Promoters

26. A number of individuals with the approval, assistance and financial support of Phil-Am promoted that firm's tours to the Philippines to visit "faith healers" or "psychic healers." These persons had previously acted as tour conductors for Phil-Am's group tours to the Philippines, or had otherwise been to the Philippines, and after returning to the states showed films, slides, and photographs depicting "psychic surgeons," and in some instances placed advertisements in newspapers for Phil-Am "psychic surgery" tours. They engaged in such promotional activities to go again to the Philippines by obtaining free passage as tour conductors on another of Phil-Am's tours (admissions of Phil-Am). In some cases Phil-Am reimbursed promoters for their expenses (Adeline Heredia, Tr. 1545-46; Mapa, Tr. 1476-77, 1481), and substantial numbers of recruits for Phil-Am's tours were obtained by them (Mapa, Tr. 1474-75).

27. One of these promoters, Ms. Blanchard, was reimbursed by Phil-Am for the reprinting of magazine articles, mileage incurred by traveling to various cities for film showings, telephone calls and film (Blanchard, Tr. 1590-92). This reimbursement was part of an $1,800 payment (Blanchard, Tr. 1599). About $400 or $500 in "pocket" money was also paid to Ms. Blanchard by Phil-Am in early 1974 (Tr. 1601-02). In addition to these payments, this promoter was a tour conductor three times for Phil-Am, going free twice and splitting a ticket with another the third time, thus receiving tickets worth approximately $2,500 (CX 214; Blanchard, Tr. 1606-07). Total compensation paid by Phil-Am for promotional activities of Ms. Blanchard, including free passage, etc., thus amounted to some thousands of dollars. Emile H. Heredia and Adeline C. Heredia testified that the money paid Ms. Blanchard in reality came from the "Christian Travel Center" in the Philippines (Emile H. Heredia, Tr. 1509-1510; Adeline C. Heredia, Tr. 1545-46; see also Jesus Ma. Jose, Tr. 1706-07). Ms. Blanchard likewise testified that she regarded her payments to have come from "Christian Travel" (Blanchard, Tr. 1590-91). Payments, nevertheless, were made to Ms. Blanchard, and for similar activities to another tour promoter, Ms. Lillian Lux, on Phil-Am checks with no indication that the money came from any source other than Phil-Am (CX 212 and CX 213). The payments were sizeable, the check to Ms. Blanchard being for $1,800 and the check to Ms. Lux for $1,500. Adeline C. Heredia knew that both Ms. Blanchard and Ms. Lux were promoting Phil-Am tours to the Philippines (Tr. 1549-1550). The brochure of Phil-Am for the Nov. 3, 1973, tour via Pan-American had Ms. Blanchard's name on its cover, and a similar brochure for the Phil-Am tour via Philippine Airways contained the name of Ms. Lux (CX 106 and CX 107).

In connection with the foregoing claim that "Christian Travel Center" paid Ms. Blanchard and Ms. Lux rather than Phil-Am, it is relevant to note that Phil-Am had an exclusive working arrangement with the Philippine "Christian Travel Center" (CX 106). For a member of the public to be assured of treatment by certain "psychic surgeons" in the "Union Espiritista," arrangements could only be made through Phil-Am (Adeline C. Heredia, Tr. 1565). Christian Travel provided "land" arrangements, including "spiritual healers," in the Philippines, for Phil-Am's tours, and Phil-Am marketed the "package tour" in the United States. In fact, Phil-Am was the "Christian Travel Center's" exclusive United States agent to organize tours to the Philippines to see "spiritual healers" (CX 106). Phil-Am's "Reservation Application" form provided for a release by the tour member of any liability on the part of "Phil-Am Travel Agency, Inc., and Christian Travel Center, Inc.," for treatment by the Philippine "Spiritual Healers" (CX 29). In essence, Phil-Am and "Christian Travel Center" were engaged in a joint venture involving the marketing of tours to the Philippines to visit "psychic surgeons," "spiritual healers," "faith healers," etc. Whether the money paid Ms. Blanchard and Ms. Lux was that of Phil-Am, or whether Phil-Am was reimbursed or transmitted "Christian Travel Center" funds is not significant. Phil-Am knew about, benefited by, and either paid or transmitted funds to Ms. Blanchard and Ms. Lux in payment for or to defray the cost of their promotional activities, and is responsible for representations by them to prospective tour members that "psychic surgery" was an actual surgical operation, that the body was opened by the "psychic surgeons" and diseased tissue or disease-causing material removed.

28. The films shown to the public by Ms. Blanchard depicted "psychic surgery" operations. Films were shown with considerable frequency, and small advertisements were placed in local papers publicizing them (Blanchard, Tr. 1575-78, 1582). Literature was often distributed at such film showings, such as a reprint of an article entitled "The 'Spiritual Healers' " which appeared in Philippine Panorama on Aug. 26, 1973. (CX 31; Blanchard, Tr. 1584). The article features Alex Orbito, a "psychic surgeon" with whom Phil-Am scheduled appointments for tour members (CX 28, 29, and 107) and describes at length and in great detail the techniques, methodology, and successes of "psychic surgery," with liberal use of medical terms. The flavor of this promotional item is indicated by a picture of a young woman undergoing an "operation" under which the caption states (CX 31B):

> AFTER OPERATION. Linda (at right) smiles, obviously feeling very much relieved. She said she felt no pain during the operation.

29. Another article photocopied from Philippine Panorama magazine was distributed at some of Ms. Blanchard's film showings (Blanchard, Tr. 1585). The article is called "The Healers of Pangasinan" and is dated Sept. 30, 1973 (CX 32B and C). Various "psychic surgeons," some of whom are named in Phil-Am travel brochures (see CX 28, 29, 107, and 108), are discussed and pictured. The article includes descriptions of "miracle cures," and descriptions of various procedures in which bodies are entered with bare hands and diseased tissue or disease-causing material removed. Eyeballs are removed from their sockets, repaired and replaced, and the ability of "healers" to cure many diseases including cancer and diabetes are discussed. Other illnesses which are said in the article to be treated successfully by "psychic surgery" include defective kidneys, high blood pressure, heart problems, cataracts, and varicose veins. Ms. Blanchard distributed Phil-Am tour brochures at her film showings (Blanchard, Tr. 1578-79).

30. Another promoter, Mr. Bill Rogers, and his wife were given free passage as tour conductors on one of Phil-Am's tours to the Philippines. Between August 1973 and January 1974 Mr. Rogers was paid several thousand dollars by Phil-Am for expenses incurred in promoting Phil-Am's tours to the Philippines, including the cost of newspaper advertising, stamps and printing (admissions of Phil-Am).

31. Phil-Am authorized Mr. Rogers to use the name "Phil-Am" in advertisements for Phil-Am's tours to the Philippines, reimbursed him for costs, and CX 37 and 38 are advertisements placed in newspapers by him for meetings held to discuss "psychic surgery" and Phil-Am tours (admissions of Phil-Am, 54, 57, 59 and 60-61). CX 38 is reproduced herein, as follows:

PHIL AM TRAVEL AGENCY
P.O. BOX 572, BELLEVUE, WASH.

This advertisement appeared in one of the two major Seattle newspapers, the Seattle Times or Post-Intelligencer (Allen, Tr. 675-680). Mr. Rogers also distributed travel brochures of Phil-Am, under Phil-Am's name, which stated to prospects that "psychic surgery is happening" in the Philippines "because of the intense religious devotion of its people" (CX 39D). The brochures distributed by Mr. Rogers advised prospects to mark all letters, applications, etc., "Attention Bill Rogers" (CX 39C). Mr. Rogers traveled free as a tour conductor to the Philippines with Phil-Am tours on three occasions, and his wife accompanied him, also free, on two of these trips, also as a tour conductor (Rogers, Tr. 1653-54, 1681-83). Total ticket value was nearly $5,000 (CX 214).

32. In connection with the promotion of Phil-Am tours, Mr. Rogers showed films of "psychic surgery" to the public extensively in the Pacific Northwest. The "psychic surgeons" shown included "healers" mentioned in the testimony of witnesses Donald and Carol Wright, discussed later herein, and which are identified, discussed or quoted in many of the magazine articles which Mr. Rogers and others disseminated publicly (CX 31-36). These "psychic surgeons" included Alex and Marcos Orbito, Romeo Bugarin, Marcello, Tony Agpaoa, Jose Mercado, Juan Blance and others (Rogers, Tr. 1659). Most of these names appear on the brochures and reservation applications used by Phil-Am (CX 27-29, 107, 108, 180). The films show operations for varied illnesses, such as eye ailments, abdominal ailments, paralysis, arthritis, in fact, "just about any type of ailment you can name" (Rogers, Tr. 1654-1660; CX 79).

33. As stated, Mr. Rogers showed his film extensively in the Pacific Northwest. He estimated approximately 75 showings, with about 25 to 40 people attending each showing, although some of his showings were attended by over 100 people. He showed his films to high school classes, at colleges and churches, and before business organizations (Rogers, Tr. 1651-54; Tr. 1682). A typical promotion for "psychic surgery" and Phil-Am tours included the showing of a film which Mr. Rogers or his son took. In the narration of the film, Mr. Rogers sometimes identified the people and usually identified the ailment or illness of that person. What the people observed in these films was some area of the body exposed, the opening thereof with the bare hands, a puddle of blood-like fluid appearing, tissue or material of some sort removed, the wiping up of the liquid revealing no wound, and no sign of a scar. Mr. Rogers answered questions and added his own account of his experiences in the Philippines (Rogers, Tr. 1653). Along with personal reports of what he had seen, Mr. Rogers on occasion referred people with specific questions about specific illnesses to others whom he knew had gone to the Philippines and had been "cured" of a particular ailment. If he didn't know firsthand whether "psychic surgeons" could cure, for example, arthritis, he might recommend that the caller telephone a person who had visited "psychic surgeons" for that ailment (Rogers, Tr. 1671-72). At these showings CX 30-36 were distributed. CX 31-36 are reprints of articles about the truth and validity of "psychic surgery," and an informational sheet. Mr. Rogers additionally distributed CX 39, identical to CX 175, the original Phil-Am tour brochure, and CX 40, whenever he talked to groups or showed films to groups who were interested in "psychic surgery." CX 30 is an information sheet for prospective tour members explaining the advantages of journeying to the Philippines in a tour group and receiving group rates. Mr. Rogers signed this document as a representative of Phil-Am, as follows:

34. At film showings and meetings, Mr. Rogers distributed the travel brochure "PHIL-AM TRAVEL AGENCY'S SPIRITUALIST PILGRIMAGE TO THE PHILIPPINES" (CX 26), reservation applications for Phil-Am (CX 29), the information sheet mentioned in the preceding finding, and reprints of articles describing the opening of bodies by "spiritual healers," "faith healers," etc., in the Philippines, the removal of tissue or disease-causing material, and miraculous cures achieved (CX 31-36).

35. As previously set out, Mr. Rogers was compensated by Phil-Am for his efforts in recruiting members for Phil-Am's tours to the Philippines. Mr. Rogers had a number of discussions concerning reimbursements with Mr. Jose, manager of the Seattle Phil-Am office (Jose, Tr. 1702). Mr. Rogers told him the amount he needed for his various expenses. His expenses included office incidentals, advertising, telephone calls, and gasoline used in travel to show films. Like Ms. Blanchard and Ms. Lux, Mr. Rogers was reimbursed by a Phil-Am check in the amount of approximately $2,800 (Rogers, Tr. 1646-49).

36. In sum, Mr. Rogers actively held himself out to be an agent and representative of Phil-Am, distributed Phil-Am literature, was accepted and ratified as such by Phil-Am, and was compensated by Phil-Am for his efforts. Phil-Am used him to promote Phil-Am tours to the Philippines, and in such promotion represented to the public through talks, meetings, film showings and the distribution of literature that "spiritual healers," "faith healers," "psychic surgeons," etc., in the Philippines performed actual surgical operations by opening and entering the body with their bare hands and removing diseased tissue or disease-causing material, and that serious and even terminal illnesses were often cured thereby.

Representations to the Public by Gem Travel Service

37. Respondent Gem Travel first set up its "psychic surgery" tours early in 1972 in response to a request from Diplomat Tours in Manila. The request came from the manager of Diplomat, one Doris Almeda, to Mr. Cortez, a salesman for Gem and the brother-in-law of Ms. Almeda. Ms. Almeda informed Mr. Cortez that people in the United States would be traveling to the Philippines "seeking the help of the healers," and Diplomat requested that Gem "facilitate the handling of these people" (Cortez, Tr. 1019-1028). Ms. Almeda wanted Gem to organize groups for visits to Rev. Agpaoa, as already noted, a well known "psychic surgeon". Mr. Ron Cacas, an officer of Gem, also discussed initial arrangements with Diplomat (Cortez, Tr. 1029; Cacas, Tr. 1164-65). Under the initial agreement between Gem and Diplomat, Diplomat would set up the land arrangements in the Philippines for the tours for which it would charge Gem a fee, while Gem would arrange air transportation (Cortez, Tr. 1030-32; Cacas, Tr. 1169).

38. Diplomat Tours is a Philippine travel agency formerly managed by Ms. Almeda and currently managed by "psychic surgeon" Rev. Agpaoa's wife. Diplomat Tours has an arrangement with Rev. Agpaoa under which appointments with him are handled exclusively by Diplomat, and Diplomat granted an exclusive agency to Gem for Gem tour members to see Rev. Agpaoa. In effect, this meant the only way for a sick person to have an appointment with Rev. Agpaoa was through Gem (Cortez, Tr. 1032; Cacas, Tr. 1169-1170; Mapa, Tr. 1434-35) and Gem promoted this exclusivity (CX 52, 144). CX 52, printed on a Gem letterhead, states:

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

For those wishing to visit with Rev. Tony Agpaoa in Baguio City.

Appointment and consultation with Rev. Tony can be confirmed by DIPLOMAT TRAVEL & TOURS of Baguio ONLY if travel arrangements are handled through GEM TRAVEL SERVICE of San Francisco, California.

Due to the number of people coming from Europe, Australia and New Zealand, anyone traveling from the United States, Mexico and South America must make advance reservation. For your reservation please fill out and return the form below.

39. On Feb. 22, 1972, Gem ran its first "psychic surgery" tour to the Philippines. The original tour was set up by Ms. Butterfield, Mr. Cortez, and other employees of Gem in conjunction with Diplomat Tours. Ms. Butterfield was the Gem officer with principal responsibility for origination of the tours, although all Gem officers discussed and agreed to setting up those tours (admission of Gem; Marquez, Tr. 1109-1110; Butterfield, Tr. 1180-81). Mr. Cortez was a Gem employee and part-time commission salesman of Gem for more than six years. Mr. Cortez worked in the office of Gem at a desk provided by Gem. He was the principal salesman and tour organizer for the "psychic surgery" tours. Inquiries regarding the tours were generally referred to Mr. Cortez. Gem authorized Mr. Cortez to speak to or correspond with persons inquiring about "psychic surgery" tours. This responsibility was delegated to him by Mr. Marquez (admission of Gem; Marquez, Tr. 1127). Mr. Cortez received half of Gem's commission on each "psychic surgery" tour package sold (Marquez, Tr. 1132-33).

40. Gem prepared and disseminated travel brochures describing its "SPIRITUALIST TOURS to the PHILIPPINES" (CX 50, 51). The brochures included a specific waiver by the tour member of any responsibility of Gem for treatment by Rev. Agpaoa. Mr. Marquez insisted on the inclusion of such a waiver of liability because he was aware of the risk Gem was running in taking customers to Rev. Agpaoa (Marquez, Tr. 1108, 1111-13). Brochures were sent to persons inquiring about Gem "psychic surgery" tours and about cures by Mr. Agpaoa (admission of Gem; Allen, Tr. 574).

41. Gem's "SPIRITUALIST TOURS to the PHILIPPINES" are set up for people who wish to undergo "psychic surgery." Gem arranges and guarantees meetings between its customers and Rev. Agpaoa during those tours, who is known to employees of Gem and members of the public as a "psychic surgeon" (answer of Gem; admission of Gem; see also CX 147(a)). Gem prepared travel literature which was sent or given to persons interested in Gem's "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines. An example is CX 53 titled "THE PHILIPPINE CHURCH OF SCIENCE REVELATION, INC." "SPIRITUALISM AND PSYCHIC HEALING" which was used to promote a tour from San Francisco to Baguio City, Philippines, in June 1972. This pamphlet, which was disseminated to the public by Gem, was most explicit in its representations about "psychic surgery" and Rev. Agpaoa, as follows:

Psychic Surgery

"Not with a knife, but with hands" said Maestro Salvatore D'Aura, and this the fabulou[s] Tony Agpaoa, the Philippines' "Miraculous Spiritual Healer," will demonstrate. Witness the amazing, painless, almost bloodless operation which continues to baffle medical science! [CX 53B.]

This document further announced that Rev. Agpaoa would touch on the finer points of "Spiritual Healing" and the nature of "psychic surgery," and was identified with Mr. Cortez's name, Gem's name, and Gem's address. See also Cortez, Tr. 1099-1100.

42. After returning from a trip to the Philippines in June 1972 during which he filmed Rev. Agpaoa performing "operations" with his bare hands, Mr. Cortez prepared a statement to respond to inquiries from the public coming into Gem's San Francisco and other offices (CX 54A, 153A-B; Cortez, Tr. 1042, 1047). It is reproduced herein and describes "painless surgery with the bare hands performed by Rev. Agpaoa and his assistant, Marcelo." This document was signed by Mr. Cortez and was mailed with a Gem price list (CX 54B) attached and often with a Gem brochure enclosed (Cortez, Tr. 1048-1055).

I have just returned from a three-weeks's visit with Rev. Tony in Baguio where I personally witnessed , observed and took pictures and color movies of a series of painless surgery with bare hands performed by Rev. Tony and his assistant, Marcelo.

The group who traveled with me voiced sincere satisfaction in having made this journey. They all showed courage, faith and belief in Tony's works and expressed their appreciation for the opportunity of having seen Tony and being relieved of their malady and sufferings which have lasted for a number of years , for most of them.

Please be guided by the enclosed information sheet for those wishing to visit with Rev. Tony in Baguio City, Philippines.

Yours very truly,

Ernie V Cortez

Ernie V. Cortez

43. At the time Mr. Cortez was mailing out CX 54 in response to inquiries about Rev. Agpaoa, he was preparing to show his film of Rev. Agpaoa in operation (CX 81). He announced two showings on Sept. 1, 1973, at the Olympic Hotel in Seattle by postcard sent to people who were inquiring about tours to the Philippines (CX 144A; admission of Gem; Cortez, Tr. 1033-37). The postcard announced an "ACTION MOVIE 'THE WONDER HEALERS OF THE PHILIPPINES' Rev. ANTONIO AGPAOA and his assistant MARCELO," stated that travel information would be given "after each show," and that appointments with Mr. Agpaoa and Marcello would be "arranged exclusively" by Mr. Cortez of "Gem Travel Service, Inc." (CX 144A). Mr. Cortez narrated the film describing both the travel and the tour accommodations. He described one segment of his movie as being a "hemorrhoid operation" performed by Mr. Agpaoa and he described other "operations." Mr. Cortez also told the people, in response to questions as to how people felt after the operations portrayed in the film, "There was no pain * * * all they felt was pressure in their body" (admission of Gem; Cortez, Tr. 1035). Mr. Cortez also gave out Gem brochures at the film showing (Cortez, Tr. 1035).

44. Mr. Marquez and Ms. Butterfield, the owners and officers of Gem, viewed Mr. Cortez's film in mid-1972 and were aware that Mr. Cortez planned to show it to promote Gem's tours to the Philippines (Gem answers to interrogatories; see also Marian Butterfield, Tr. 1181). In fact, Gem had a showing of "psychic surgery" taken in the Philippines in its office (Butterfield, Tr. 1182). Mr. Cortez discussed the Seattle film showing with both Mr. Marquez and Ms. Butterfield and received their approval for showing it (Cortez, Tr. 1043-44; Butterfield, Tr. 1194-95). Ms. Butterfield stated that she thought the showing was a good idea at the time (Butterfield, Tr. 1195). Gem paid for part or all of the hotel expenses for that showing (admission of Gem; Cortez, Tr. 1043). The film is in the record as CX 81 and depicts "psychic surgery" in the Philippines showing the opening of the human body with the bare hands, removal of tissue or other material, and the closing of the incision without a scar.

45. In addition to the film shown by Mr. Cortez to the Seattle audience, another film similarly depicting "psychic surgery" was shown by a person known as Elaine Shinn (Cortez, Tr. 1037). Ms. Shinn narrated her film, and Mr. Cortez referred most questions as to Rev. Agpaoa's "successes" to Ms. Shinn who answered them as well as questions about her film (Cortez, Tr. 1037-39; admission of Gem). Prior to the Seattle film showing, Elaine Shinn had conveyed her desire to Mr. Cortez to become a tour conductor for Gem (admission of Gem), and had told Mr. Cortez that she had her own films of "psychic surgery"

(Cortez, Tr. 1039). Subsequent to the Seattle Olympic Hotel showing, she did receive a free ticket from Gem for a tour to the Philippines two weeks later, Sept. 15, 1973 (admission of Gem; Cortez, Tr. 1040-41).

46. In the San Francisco area Gem arranged for the non-promotional showing of a film depicting "psychic surgery" to a study group in the Berkeley area. This was done by a person known as Sarah Paukert on the request of individual respondent Marian E. Butterfield (Butterfield, Tr. 1181-83). Ms. Paukert's promotional activities on behalf of "psychic surgery" were described in her own testimony in this proceeding. She first took a Gem tour to see Rev. Agpaoa on Feb. 3, 1973. Shortly after returning from this tour, she told Mr. Cortez of her interest in becoming a tour conductor and at approximately the same time started showing her films (Paukert, Tr. 1275-77). Because she was spending as much as an hour discussing travel agency arrangements at the end of her showings, she requested that Mr. Cortez supply her with Gem brochures, which she told him were for distribution at such showings (Paukert, Tr. 1276, 1284). In December and November 1973, Ms. Paukert traveled to the Philippines free as a tour conductor for Gem (Butterfield, Tr. 1184, 1216; CX 143B). The value of the tickets she received from Gem appears to have been about $3,000 (Paukert, Tr. 1276; see CX 143B, which shows Ms. Sarah Paukert to have been a Gem tour conductor on two occasions and a "Dr. Norman Paukert" to have accompanied her as a tour conductor on one of these). Gem, that is, Ms. Butterfield and Mr. Cortez (Butterfield, Tr. 1184; Cortez, Tr. 1067), knew the nature of the "psychic surgery" films being shown to the public by Ms. Paukert, i.e., that they purported to show "operations" in which human bodies were opened with the bare hands, diseased tissue removed, etc., provided her with Gem travel brochures to pass out at such showings (Paukert, Tr. 1284), had Ms. Paukert's name printed on such brochures (Butterfield, Tr. 1184), and provided her with free trips to the Philippines as a tour conductor (Butterfield, Tr. 1184; CX 143B). Under the circumstances, respondent Gem must accept responsibility for the representations to the public contained in Ms. Paukert's films.

47. Other persons showed films of "psychic surgery" tours, distributed Gem travel brochures, and received free passage as tour conductors for Gem (CX 143A-D; Butterfield, Tr. 1192-98; Cortez, Tr. 1069-1087; CX 115, 127).

Use of Varying Terms for "Psychic Surgery"

48. In promoting their tours to the public for consultation and treatment by Philippine "healers" respondents used varying terms including "psychic surgery" (CX 26, 37-38, 39D, 41, 53A-B, and 175; Galazan, Tr. 811) "faith healing," "spiritual" or "spirit healing" (CX 2, 7A, 17, 27-29, 31-35, 45, 53D, 107-108, 168, 170, 179B, and 210), "psychic healing" (CX 9, 10, 14, 16, 41, 192, 193, 197, and 210), and "magnetic healing" (CX 41). All these terms were used by respondents in conjunction with the graphic depiction by films of what appeared to be actual "surgical operations" with the bare hands in the Philippines (CX 79, 80 and 81), by verbal statements at film showings, by travel and promotional literature, by distribution of newspaper and magazine articles, and booklets, and through letters and advertisements, to the same effect. In the context used by respondents all the foregoing terms, together with the films, statements, promotional literature and materials disseminated and employed with those terms, meant and conveyed to the public the impression of "psychic surgery" as that term is used in the complaint. All collectively represented to the public that those who purchased tours to the Philippines would be taken to "healers" who would perform actual "surgical operations" with the bare hands, would open the body, remove diseased tissue or disease-causing material, close the body without a scar, that all would be done in a few minutes without anesthesia, pain or suffering, and that many would be cured thereby of serious or even terminal illnesses.

"Psychic Surgery"

49. "Psychic surgery," that is, the opening of the body with the bare hands, removal of diseased tissue or disease-causing material, closing the opening without a scar, etc., is pure and unmitigated fakery. More bluntly, the "surgical operations" of "psychic surgeons," "psychic healers," "faith healers," "spiritual" or "spirit healers," "magnetic healers," etc., with the bare hands are simply phony.

50. The illusion of opening the human body with the bare hands, and the removal of diseased tissue or material therefrom, is created by a variety of crooked devices, mainly clever sleight-of-hand. The "psychic surgeons," "faith healers," "psychic healers," etc., are skilled sleight-of-hand artists, and additionally employ a variety of tricks, devices and methods of deception, including the use of small animal parts, to convey the deceptive impression that a "surgical operation" is taking place and that material is being removed from the body. As the record discloses, thousands of well-meaning people, the sick and infirm have been gulled, exploited and deceived, sometimes with tragic and heart-rending consequences.

51. Two witnesses who testified in this proceeding, Donald F. and Carol Wright, studied "psychic surgery" in the Philippines, actually became "psychic surgeons," and revealed in detail the complete fakery of that phenomenon. The Wrights had studied ESP in the United States, and were extremely interested in what they had heard about the "psychic surgery" phenomenon in the Philippines, tending initially to give it credence. They journeyed to the Philippines in January 1973, and returned again in July 1973 with a group of ill people who were seeking help (C. Wright, Tr. 113-16). The "healers" contacted on this visit included Virgilio Gutierrez, Romeo Bugarin, Tony Rumbo, Alex Orbito, and Tony Alcantara. The techniques used by these persons were very similar. In most of the operations, cotton was used to wipe off the area to be operated on. A bowl of water was present. In nearly all the operations blood clots or material appearing to be blood clots were removed from the body, and sometimes a piece of tissue which looked like an organ was removed. The area being operated on was wiped clean and there was no scar. The Wrights saw this procedure performed many times on the people they had brought with them. However, no one was visibly improved by these "operations" (C. Wright, Tr. 119).

52. The Wright's party returned to the United States but the Wrights stayed on, moving out of their hotel and renting a house. Their purpose in staying was to work with the "healers" and to learn the phenomenon of "psychic surgery." They were disappointed that there were no miracle cures of the people they had brought with them, but they did not yet suspect that "psychic surgery" was fakery. They met a "healer" who offered to allow the Wrights to work with him. They assisted him as he treated Filipino patients. The Wrights also had the opportunity to work with one Virgilio Gutierrez at his center. The centers were located in the "healers' " homes or in small houses where they worked "treating" the sick.

53. While working as assistants to a number of different "healers," the Wrights discovered "psychic surgery" did not consist of "surgery" at all, but was being performed by sleight-of-hand. Donald Wright noted objects falling from the "healers' " hands onto the bodies of the patients before the "operations" (D. Wright, Tr. 270), and Carol Wright had the opportunity to examine a "tumor" which had been removed from a patient. As an assistant, one of her jobs was to dispose of the "extracted" material at the end of an operation. Before emptying the bowl, she unwrapped what looked like a tumor. She testified (Tr. 134):

> * * * so I took the membrane and pulled it back and found that this was a tumor, a membrane that had been stuffed with cotton and blood clots and it appeared very much like a tumor, but it was not, it was just a flat piece of membrane that had been stuffed with cotton and blood clots to look like a round tumor.

The Wrights separately and together had experiences which led them to the conclusion that "psychic surgery" was performed by sleight-of-hand and that the extracted material had not come from within a human's body.

54. After confronting one of their teacher "psychic surgeons" with what they had observed, the "psychic surgeon" admitted that the "operations" were done by sleight-of-hand. The Wrights were eventually taught the techniques involved. The Wrights were trusted because they had been working with this particular "psychic surgeon" for a number of months. Carol Wright explained (Tr. 215):

> I believe that we showed to them our sincerity in that we were come to stay until we did learn and that we did work with them in their centers * * *. We gave this or impressed them that we gave of our time every day in working with their healing centers from morning until night, and over a long period of time they recognized we were serious of being there to learn that.

55. The Wrights were taught how to shop for animal parts used to make up a "bullet." A bullet is actual animal tissue or a clot of animal blood and cotton which is made to appear like tissue coming from inside the body (C. Wright, Tr. 137-141). The Wrights were taught how to make the bullet, how to wrap it, how to prepare the tissue, how to hide the bullet and then how to transfer it onto the patient. They were taken to an open market where they bought animal tissue. The "healer" showed them which animal parts looked most like human parts and then taught them how to prepare the materials. After that, the Wrights were taught where to hide the prepared bullets, for example, on their persons, inside cigarette packs, in their stockings, in their belts, etc. They were taught the techniques of palming so that no one would see the bullet, planting the bullet on the patient's body, moving the bullet if it were necessary, using continuous kneading action in an indentation on the patient's body (which appears to be manipulation but allows the "psychic surgeon" to open his bullets), the importance of such an indentation on the patient's body, the addition of water obtained from saturated cotton balls often passed to the "healer" by attendants, which mixes with a small bullet of animal blood and is used to make the appearance to the uninitiated of human blood issuing from an "opening" in the body, the spreading of an animal membrane in the "blood" in the indentation in the human body to look like an opening therein, and the bringing "out" of the hidden animal membrane so that it seems that material from the body of the person being operated on is being removed. The Wrights were shown how to end an operation, how to clean up the area being "operated on" and to dispose of all the bullets (C. Wright, Tr. 137-154; D. Wright, 269-71). The Wrights, in sum, learned the techniques used for creating the illusion of an actual operation, and they used all these techniques on people who visited some of the centers where they were working. The Wrights continued to work with many other "healers," and they observed the same techniques that they had learned and could perform themselves. They joined the "Union Espiritista Christiana de Filipinas" (C. Wright, Tr. 192-93) which is an organization to which most Philippine "healers" performing "psychic surgery" belong.

56. The nature of Ms. Carol Wright's testimony can be appreciated from the following (Tr. 137-39):

Q. What did you observe as he demonstrated these techniques?

A. He showed me exactly where he had positioned the bullet, as it was known, on himself and then on the body of the patient before he did the operation.

To go back, if I may, he taught me also how to make a bullet, which is the actual tissue, blood clot and cotton that is used in the operation that is made to appear like material coming from inside the body. He took me to—he showed me how to buy the material, what to look for, what to buy, how to make it, how to wrap it, how to prepare the tissue, then on patients, and I worked on a number of patients, not models or not just to practice on, but they were patients who were ill, doing these types of operations.

Q. Where were the materials for these operations obtained?

A. In an open market.

Q. What kind of materials were obtained?

A. Blood clots, blood, from the blood of a cow, which was congealed, and also material from pigs and from cows. Liver was used. We were shown how to look in the intestines to pick out small glands and cysts that could be used, for example, in an adenoid operation or thyroid operation. We were shown what to look for and how to prepare the material so it would very closely resemble the human body as you would bring out a piece of tissue.

Q. And how were these materials then prepared before the operation?

A. Before the operation they would be prepared, for example, taking a small piece of blood clot, perhaps the size of a marble, and placing it into a square of cotton, a small piece of cotton—they always used Red Cross cotton, for some reason—rolling it up very tight and then placing it into a cigarette pack so it would not be noticeable when it was carried.

Q. How were these items carried to the scene of the operation?

A. Inside these cigarette packs, empty cigarette packs. They were also secreted on the person of the healer, the psychic surgeon, perhaps in his socks. We were shown that if you were to wear socks like a man would wear, to put them inside the elastic at the top. They could be put inside the belt, they could be under the collar, they could be—I observed one of the female psychic surgeons take one from her bra—any place on your body which would be or could be a hiding place.

Q. And, in the operation you were shown, how were the materials which were prepared then used to create the appearance of the operation?

A. Taking one of the bullets, which is the blood clot inside the cotton, it would be palmed and held in such a manner that it would not be seen by the patient or by relatives or whoever was around, have it in here like so, and would be planted on the patient's body somewhere and then, after a moment, it would be brought to the area wherever they were going to do the operation and they would begin kneading and they would also make a pressure indentation into the patient's body if it's on the abdomen. If the person was very, very thin, they would often bring the legs up in order to make it softer so that the hands could go down further. And then, through kneading, through pushing, then adding some water, this blood that is in the cotton would begin to mix with the water and appear red and begin to run all over the body and be kind of messy and dramatic and then, if there was also wrapped inside the bullet a piece of tissue, then, while the psychic surgeon's hands are down in, with the hands folded underneath, then it could be—they would break that open and bring these pieces out bit by bit, always keeping one hand in. This was one thing they would say, if they took both hands out, the opening would close, but there was always one hand down and the fingers would be bent under like so, and this is how I was taught to do this.

57. The Wrights testified that the "operations" which they performed and the thousands of "operations" which they witnessed being performed by some of the most well-known "psychic surgeons" in the Philippines were in truth not real operations, the body of the patient was never opened, the flowing blood-like fluid was not that of the patient, the material removed had never been inside the patient, and there was no scar because there had been no "operation." These "operations" were all performed by sleight-of-hand. All the "healers" they witnessed and the "healers" who had taught them used sleight-of-hand techniques commonly employed by magicians (C. Wright, Tr. 145-46; D. Wright, Tr. 267).

58. The Wrights stayed in the Philippines until April 1974. Toward the end of their stay they tried to expose "psychic surgery" for what it was, fakery (C. Wright, Tr. 180). Their original hopes and expectations of learning a miracle healing method from "psychic" or "spiritual" sources by then had been dashed. When they returned to Iowa, they continued to try to expose "psychic surgery" through appearances on local television (D. Wright, Tr. 336-38).

59. Mr. Wright demonstrated in the hearing room the techniques of "psychic surgery" exactly as he and Carol Wright had been taught by Philippine "psychic surgeons" (see transcript beginning at Tr. 296 for demonstration by D. Wright). The techniques used in Mr. Wright's demonstration were similar to those on the films which have been received in evidence (CX 79, 80 and 81). Carol Wright viewed two of respondents' promotional films, CX 80, which was used by respondents Travel King and Mr. Galazan, and CX 81 used by Gem and Mr. Cortez. Based on her experience and training as a "psychic surgeon" Ms. Wright analyzed the events portrayed. The techniques were the same as she learned, and she detected the sleight-of-hand involved, including that used by Rev. Tony Agpaoa (C. Wright, Tr. 124-25, 169-170).

60. The "healers" or "psychic surgeons" who worked with the Wrights, or whom the Wrights testified they observed as performing sleight-of-hand, include the following: Terte, Virgilio Gutierrez, Jr., Tony Rumbo, Tony Alcantara, Romeo Bugarin, Juanito Flores, Alex Orbito, Tony Santiago, Jose Mercado, Felicia Irtal, Rosita Bascos, Marcello, Rudy and Placido Palitayan (C. Wright, Tr. 137, 148-153; D. Wright, Tr. 286-292). Their testimony discusses a number of variations of "psychic surgery" which "psychic surgeons" used to apply to different ailments and on different parts of the body. A number of these names are the same as those on respondents' Phil-Am and Travel King promotional literature (CX 17 and Galazan, Tr. 834-844; CX 27, 107, and 108). Many of these names also occur in articles written in magazines or newspapers which were reprinted or photocopied and distributed at promotional meetings by tour conductors of various respondents herein. The Wrights considered these healers to be the "major psychic surgeons" in the Philippines. The number of "psychic surgeons" the Wrights observed at work while living in the Philippines was great. They concluded that the techniques used by the "psychic surgeons" were all essentially similar and all were fake. The techniques of "psychic surgery" originated in a particular locality among a core group of practitioners, and spread as the commercial demand developed, with Mr. Terte and Mr. Agpaoa teaching recruits (C. Wright, Tr. 233; D. Wright, Tr. 288, 477). Donald Wright testified that once he had learned the techniques used by the psychic surgeons, he could detect the use of sleight-of-hand every time (Tr. 403). An additional technique employed by one particular "psychic surgeon" involved the use of a hidden razor blade to make a minute and shallow cut on a patient's body, enhancing the dramatic effect and heightening the illusion of "surgery" (see Wright, Tr. 146-47; Gurtler, Tr. 351-52; Brown, Tr. 2112-13).

61. Another witness who observed "psychic surgery" at close range in the Philippines and who determined it to be pure fakery accomplished by sleight-of-hand combined with clever use of "props," dramatic effects to exploit the gullibility of onlookers and the desire of many to believe, was a professional magician and sleight-of-hand artist, Robert Gurtler (Andre Kole). Mr. Gurtler is a famous magician who has performed throughout the world on television and in films. He has also viewed and evaluated performances of many other magicians in this country and throughout the world. In September of 1973 while performing on stage and over television in Manila, Mr. Gurtler was contacted by Time magazine and was asked to investigate the phenomenon of "psychic surgery" which was beginning to receive wide publicity at that time (Gurtler, Tr. 350). Mr. Gurtler accepted this assignment and viewed at close range the activities of seven psychic surgeons, five of whom are mentioned in the literature of one or another of respondents.

62. One of the "psychic surgeons" used the technique mentioned earlier of a concealed razor blade employed as part of his "operation" (Gurtler, Tr. 351-52; see list of "psychic surgeons" on Phil-Am's travel brochure, CX 27, No. 2 on list). The technique, which creates the illusion that an incision is made when the "healer" points his or a spectator's finger at the skin of the patient, is in fact created by sleight-of-hand in the preliminarily cutting of the skin with the concealed blade. Mr. Gurtler's testimony describing the sleight-of-hand techniques used in "psychic surgery" corroborates the testimony of the Wrights. The "psychic surgeons" were observed by Mr. Gurtler to use what Mr. Gurtler called "loads" or capsules filled with blood and tissue to simulate "surgical operations" with the bare hands. Mr. Gurtler's expert eyes detected these secreted by the "psychic surgeon" in a variety of places, on the person, in a cigarette pack or case, around the "operating" table, in the cotton swabs, on the person of an assistant, behind a fan, under the pillow, etc. They were used during the "operation" as convenient or required. The "psychic surgeon" would "make a depression" in the body of the patient, would knead it and during such process by sleight-of-hand would obtain a "load" or "bullet," would burst the "load" or "bullet," mixing the concealed blood and animal tissue with water in a piece of cotton offered by an attendant, producing a red blood-like fluid, and creating the illusion that the body had been penetrated (Gurtler, Tr. 353-366).

63. Mr. Gurtler's expert evaluation of the "psychic surgery" he witnessed make it clear why so many people have been fooled. The sleight-of-hand employed by the "psychic surgeons," in Mr. Gurtler's professional opinion, is better than the vast majority of the magicians he had witnessed throughout the world (Gurtler, Tr. 361). No training in science or medicine would ordinarily help a person initially to detect these sleight-of-hand techniques, although Mr. Gurtler believed that an observer could be taught to detect them. The techniques, however, were not new in the world of magic and could be duplicated by a sleight-of-hand expert or professional magician.

64. Another witness, Mr. Larry Allen, who personally observed and studied "psychic surgery," provided additional compelling evidence of its wholly fraudulent nature. This witness, an electronic technician, gave a detailed and credible account of his experience with Rev. Agpaoa, one of the most well-known of the "psychic surgeons," whom he observed closely and filmed while on a tour promoted by respondent Gem in September 1972. Mr. Allen was able to detect the manner in which Rev. Agpaoa's "loads" or "bullets" were brought into the room. He watched one of Rev. Agpaoa's assistants on several occasions enter the operating room quarters carrying two shopping bags, each of which was filled and covered with a towel. During the excitement surrounding an incident where a patient undergoing an "operation" began to hemorrhage, Mr. Allen looked into the shopping bags which he had seen brought in, and one was filled with the capsules or bullets used in the "operations."

65. Mr. Allen viewed numerous "surgical operations" in the hotel in Manila where the Gem tour group stayed. In one "operation" performed by Rev. Agpaoa on a woman's ear he "heard a pop," a squirt of red liquid shot out of Rev. Agpaoa's hand and almost hit the wall, and then Rev. Agpaoa pulled out what Mr. Allen recognized as "a chicken heart, the heart of a small chicken or bird" (Tr. 591). Rev. Agpaoa held it up to the people and said, "This is causing her ear problem." Mr. Allen also viewed Marcello, Rev. Agpaoa's assistant, and Juan Blance performing "psychic surgery" (Tr. 682-83). He observed both of them using "loads" or "bullets" to perform their operations and, in addition, he saw Mr. Blance use a hidden razor blade in a performance similar to that described by the magician, Mr. Gurtler.

66. During a tour arranged by respondent Gem to see Rev. Agpaoa, a witness in this proceeding, Erna Hansen, saved garments which were stained with blood during "psychic surgery." She brought them back to the United States where they were examined by a criminologist, who was director of the King County (Seattle) Police Department Crime Laboratory. Analysis showed that (Sweeney, Tr. 2155):

> * * * the blood supported by the garments was of swine origin or hog blood.

67. A number of expert medical doctors provided evidence of the fakery involved in "psychic surgery." One of them was Dr. Thomas Gail whose practice as an active hospital staff member regularly includes surgery. While a doctor in the United States Navy assigned to the U.S. Embassy in the Philippines, he had occasion to view Rev. Agpaoa performing "psychic surgery" in Quezon City in 1966. Dr. Gail viewed, among others, abdominal "psychic surgery" and concluded that there had been no opening in the body and no actual surgery. He observed that the "blood," based on its color and its clotted appearance, was not fresh human blood. He also described the parts of the abdominal cavity which would be seen in an actual operation but which were not visible during the "psychic surgery." As to the tissues and membranes which appeared, he testified that "none of these structures even resembled those encountered in a surgical operation" (Tr. 533-38). Dr. Gail described a surgical procedure to correct sterility, one of the "operations" performed by Rev. Agpaoa which he witnessed, and testified that Rev. Agpaoa's procedure did not even simulate that operation with any fidelity (Tr. 538-39). The first "psychic surgery" witnessed by Dr. Gail was a nose "operation." In his opinion, based on viewing the tissues and structures, which were completely dissimilar from normal human tissues and structures, and dissimilar from anything he had "ever seen or encountered in surgery," no actual entry of the body occurred and no "surgery" had taken place (Tr. 547).

68. Dr. Gail viewed individual respondent Galazan's film of "psychic surgery" (CX 80) and gave his expert opinion as a surgeon that no surgery was taking place. This opinion was based on the dissimilarity between actual human blood and body tissue, and that which appeared in the film. Dr. Gail further testified that the events he saw portrayed in the film were generally similar to those he had observed in the Philippines (Tr. 545-47).

69. Dr. Gail believed the illusion of an opening in the body was created as follows (Tr. 557):

> * * * by sleight of hand, upon thrusting, after he [psychic surgeon] thrust his hand on the abdomen, he squeezed something in his palm and produced the bloody substance, and the bloody substance does not come from the person, and this illusion of the incision is created this way.

Dr. Gail furthermore believed that, if an operation had taken place during the "psychic surgery" he witnessed, based on the lack of sanitary conditions, there was virtually an absolute certainty that serious infection would have occurred (Tr. 540). In addition, in an abdominal operation the hands of the surgeon would normally go far into the abdomen to reach various organs, whereas Rev. Agpaoa penetrated only one or two inches (Tr. 534, 546). In Dr. Gail's expert opinion as a surgeon, the body cannot be entered without breaking the skin or without surgical instruments, nor can an operation be performed without leaving a scar (Tr. 539-540).

70. A medical doctor, Ronald Chard, Jr., an expert in the field of pediatric oncology (tumors in children) and hematology, who worked both as a practicing physician and assistant clinical professor at the University of Washington School of Medicine, testified in this proceeding. He viewed the Galazan film (CX 80), used to promote Travel King tours, immediately prior to testifying. In his opinion, there was "no evidence of any surgical operation in any of the procedures on the film" (Tr. 757). He testified that in nine of the ten procedures, puckering of the skin, such as would occur simply from pushing on the skin, occurred, unlike actual surgery in which the skin flaps open. Furthermore, the tissue supposedly removed was unlike any with which Dr. Chard was familiar (Tr. 758-59). Dr. Chard examined four patients who had been treated by "psychic surgeons." One boy with leukemia, who was under the regular care of Dr. Chard, was treated and supposedly cured of his disease. According to Dr. Chard (Tr. 767):

> Upon my examination about ten days after that there was no evidence in the child's skin or anywhere else that anything had been done at all, and X-ray was done of his pelvic area that included this and there were no abnormalities in this area.

Another patient of Dr. Chard, a teen-age girl with cancer in several areas of her body, had "psychic surgery" on her knees, stomach and lung. On her return, Dr. Chard testified (Tr. 770):

> The girl did have an examination, in which there was no evidence that any procedures on her skin had been accomplished. Repeated X-rays showed that all lesions were larger without interruption of any of their borders. There were also new lesions in the chest and the leg had progressed.

It was Dr. Chard's medical opinion that the statements appearing in the first paragraph of Travel King's information sheet (CX 7A) were "fraudulent" because in fact the body is not entered in "psychic surgery" (Dr. Chard, Tr. 780).

71. Another medical doctor, Elray G. Burgwald, is a surgeon in practice in the State of Washington. He testified that from October 1966 until January 1970, and from August of 1973 until the present, a person named Phyllis Douglass was a patient under his care. Ms. Douglass had originally been treated for breast cancer in 1966. In 1973, the disease was present in her shoulder and neck. Dr. Burgwald advised Ms. Douglass as to the worthlessness of "psychic surgery" but, despite his advice, she went to the Philippines that month for that purpose (Dr. Burgwald, Tr. 2052-54). On her return, Ms. Douglass was examined by Dr. Burgwald who testified (Tr. 2054):

> * * * if anything the mass in her left superclavicular area was slightly large[r], if anything, but overall there had been little change, if any, with an increase in the size of her mass, rather than any loss of size or removal of any tissue that was evident. There was no evidence of any new scars or other signs of surgery procedure..

Ms. Douglass' husband brought back to Seattle a piece of the tissue the "psychic surgeon," Rev. Agpaoa, "removed" from Ms. Douglass (Richard M. Douglass, Tr. 1352). Dr. Burgwald examined the tissue and, in his opinion, "there was no question from even gross examination that this was a specimen of small intestine or small bowel" (Tr. 2056). Dr. Burgwald turned the tissue over to a pathologist, Dr. Arnold D. Hoekzema, for further examination. Dr. Arnold D. Hoekzema analyzed the tissue "removed" from Ms. Douglass by Rev. Agpaoa, and received from Dr. Burgwald, and determined that it was or came from the bowel of a small animal (Dr. Hoekzema, Tr. 2067). CX 57 is a copy of the pathology report. The report states (CX 57):

> The specimen consists of two pieces of tissue, one a 15-cm. in length segment of what appears to be small bowel from a non-human source * * *.

Responsibility of Individual Respondents

72. Yuda Galazan, Nyla Ford and Ronald Brown were individually responsible for the promotion of tours to the Philippines so that tour members could undergo "psychic surgery," and each was individually responsible for false, misleading and deceptive written, oral and visual representations to the public, in connection with the sale of tours to the Philippines for "psychic surgery," that "psychic surgery" was an actual surgical operation, that the body was thereby opened with the bare hands, and diseased tissue or disease-causing material removed therefrom. As previously found, Nyla Ford and Ronald Brown were officers, owners, and managers of Travel King, Inc., Mr. Brown becoming sole owner, however, as of Feb. 1, 1974. They formulated, directed and controlled the policies, acts and practices of Travel King, Inc.

73. Yuda Galazan, as previously found, was president and sole owner of Ramble Travel & Tours, Inc., which continued the downtown Seattle business of Travel King, Inc., subsequent to Dec. 7, 1973, using the trade names Travel King and Travel King & Ramble Tours. From Oct. 31, 1973, to Dec. 7, 1973, Mr. Galazan managed the downtown Seattle office of Travel King, Inc. Mr. Galazan formulated, directed and controlled the policies, acts and practices of Ramble Travel & Tours, Inc., from the date of its incorporation, and participated in the formulation, direction and control of the policies, acts and practices of the Travel King, Inc., office in downtown Seattle.

74. Mr. Galazan promoted tours to the Philippines for "psychic surgery" by a variety of methods, including newspaper advertising, public meetings with film showings, and tour literature. CX 9, 10, 14-16, 192 and 193 are newspaper advertisements from the major Seattle newspapers, the Seattle Times and Post-Intelligencer, placed by Mr. Galazan between August and December 1973.

CX 192 reads "PHILIPPINE PSYCHIC HEALING, Appointment and Tour Arranged, Films Available for Showing, For More Information Call 622-5424." This ad appeared in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Sept. 26, 1973. The telephone number was identified as Mr. Galazan's, and Mr. Galazan placed and paid for that advertisement (Galazan, Tr. 822-23).

CX 193 reads "NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC, Information for PSYCHIC HEALING in the Philippines, Film to be Shown Sunday, Sept. 30, 1 P.M., Holiday Inn—Bellevue," again listing Mr. Galazan's number. This ad appeared in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer on Sept. 29, 1973, and was placed and paid for by Mr. Galazan (Tr. 821-22).

CX 9 is a newspaper advertisement identical to CX 192, except that it shows the telephone number of the Travel King, Inc., downtown Seattle office rather than Mr. Galazan's number. This ad appeared in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer on Oct. 18, 1973 (Galazan, Tr. 854-56).

CX 10 is a newspaper advertisement which reads "NOTICE TO PUBLIC, Due to Overwhelming Requests There will be Another Showing of Astounding Films on PHILIPPINE PSYCHIC HEALING, Sunday, Oct. 7, 1 p.m., Holiday Inn, Bellevue, Wn., Free to Public." This ad appeared on Oct. 6, 1973, in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. Mr. Galazan acknowledged that he placed this advertisement (Galazan, Tr. 854-57).

CX 15 is an advertisement which appeared in the Seattle Times on Nov. 15, 1973. It is entitled "VISIT PHILIPPINE FAMOUS PSYCHIC HEALERS" and announces a film showing in the Spanish Ballroom of the Olympic Hotel on Saturday, Nov. 17, 1973, at 1:00 P.M., and also announces a tour departure on Nov. 29, 1973. The advertiser is identified as "TRAVEL KING TRAVEL AGENCY—SEATTLE." CX 14 is an advertisement using practically the same language but a different format. Mr. Galazan placed and paid for these two advertisements (Galazan, Tr. 888-890A; Admission of Mr. Galazan; Galazan, Tr. 795).

CX 16 announces another film showing at the Holiday Inn in Bellevue, Wash., Sunday, Nov. 4, at 1:00 P.M. The downtown Seattle phone number of Travel King, Inc., is given in this advertisement. The exhibit is an advertising specimen for the Seattle Times dated Nov. 2, 1973. Mr. Galazan placed this advertisement before Oct. 31, 1973 (Galazan, Tr. 888-890A; downtown office phone number appears in respondent Ronald Brown's supplemental answers to interrogatories, Exhibit B).

75. As the foregoing findings disclose, Travel King and Mr. Galazan sponsored public meetings at which "psychic surgery" was discussed and films of "psychic surgery," like CX 80, were shown. These meetings have already been discussed in some detail. Mr. Galazan was present at all these showings and promoted tours to the Philippines for "psychic surgery" at them. The showings were before audiences of hundreds of people (Galazan, Tr. 890A-B), and "psychic surgery" was represented to the public as an actual surgical operation by which the body was opened with the bare hands, diseased tissue or disease-causing material removed, etc.

76. The TV advertising of Travel King has been the subject of prior findings. CX 210 is the script of this commercial which was prepared on the basis of instructions given to the manager of Channel 13 by Mr. Galazan (Galazan, Tr. 851-52).

77. Mr. Muchlinski and others were paid for their expenses in promoting Travel King "psychic surgery" tours. Mr. Galazan was a moving force in arranging to subsidize the expenses of Mr. Muchlinski in return for the promotion and recommendation by him of "psychic surgery" and Travel King tours (Galazan, Tr. 864-65). Mr. Galazan, in fact, continues to promote "psychic surgery" and tours to the Philippines (Galazan, Tr. 804, 815, 820, 862, 891-94, 925; Ford, Tr. 1821-22). Indeed, in a newspaper advertisement placed several months after a Federal court injunction was entered in this matter, the heading is used "TRAVEL KING AND RAMBLE TOURS AGENCY Continues Their Famous TOURS TO THE PHILIPPINES" (CX 19; Galazan, Tr. 896-97). Mr. Galazan placed this advertisement. Under the circumstances, this advertisement implies that a tour for "psychic surgery" is again being made available to the public, notwithstanding the injunction. This is especially so in view of Travel King's widely publicized film showings in the fall of 1973. Many of the people who went on the tour announced by this advertisement were sick and as a part of their tour, Mr. Galazan arranged visits with the "psychic surgeons" (Galazan, Tr. 895-900). During hearings in this very proceeding, Mr. Galazan was involved in sending people to Portland, Oreg., for "psychic healing" (Galazan, Tr. 917-920, 958).

78. Ms. Ford, as earlier stated, fully participated in the formulation, direction and control of the policies, acts and practices of both Travel King, Inc., and Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc. She was instrumental in obtaining and operating the downtown Seattle office of Travel King, Inc., during 1973, and actively promoted tours to the Philippines for "psychic surgery." After Mr. Galazan and later Ramble Travel & Tours, Inc. took over operation of the downtown Seattle office, Ms. Ford continued working as a travel agent receiving a salary from Mr. Galazan. This employment was terminated in February 1974. One of the terms of the sale of the downtown office to Mr. Galazan was a provision for monthly payments or royalties to Ms. Ford based on the continuation of the "psychic surgery" tours (CX 1C; Ford, Tr. 1786-1790, 1796-97, 1838, 1848; Hasson, Tr. 1898; Galazan affidavit; Brown interrogatories; admissions of Ms. Ford).

79. Ms. Ford observed "psychic surgery" in the Philippines prior to promoting tours in the Seattle area. On her return from the Philippines, she obtained respondent Ronald Brown's concurrence in the promotion of tours for "psychic surgery" by Travel King, Inc., and prepared a tour program. A travel brochure was written and submitted to Northwest Airlines (Ford, Tr. 1814-1823; Hasson, Tr. 1900; Brown, Tr. 1861-63; Galazan, Tr. 807, 817, 960; Brown interrogatories; admissions of Ms. Ford). As noted earlier, CX 7A-B "QUESTIONS YOU MAY HAVE" was prepared by Ms. Ford for use in selling tours to the Philippines for "psychic surgery," and represents to the public that "there are men in the Philippines who have (or claim to have) powers to heal and/or operate on persons without instruments of any kind" (Ford, Tr. 1830-31). Ms. Ford was present with Mr. Galazan at film showings sponsored by Travel King showing "psychic surgery," and spoke at one of these meetings describing Travel King's travel brochure (Ford, Tr. 1824-1832).

80. Individual respondent Ronald Brown, although half-owner and later sole owner of Travel King and vice-president of that corporate respondent, was far less involved in the promotion of tours to the Philippines for "psychic surgery," and the misrepresentations connected therewith, than Mr. Galazan or Ms. Ford. Nevertheless, he did participate. He paid half the cost of television commercials for Travel King broadcast in September 1973 advertising "MIRACULOUS PHILIPPINE FAITH HEALERS," but disclaiming any responsibility for "surgery" by them (CX 210). Mr. Brown was well aware of the promotional activities for "psychic surgery" being conducted by Mr. Galazan and Ms. Ford, as already indicated, and the misrepresentations being made (Galazan, Tr. 817, 960; Ford, Tr. 1819-1820; Brown, Tr. 1861-63).

81. Adeline C. Heredia and Emile H. Heredia were likewise individually responsible for the promotion of tours to the Philippines so that tour members could undergo "psychic surgery," and each was individually responsible for false, misleading and deceptive written, oral and visual representations to the public that "psychic surgery" was an actual surgical operation, that the body was thereby opened with the bare hands, and diseased tissue or disease-causing material removed therefrom. Mr. Mapa, the sales and marketing manager for Phil-Am, began the development of "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines on behalf of that travel agency after encountering a tour group arranged by respondent Gem (Mapa, Tr. 1420-22). Thereafter he advised Mr. Heredia, co-owner of Phil-Am, of the potential of such tours and with his consent began planning a tour to visit Rev. Agpaoa, the best known "psychic surgeon" at that time (Mapa, Tr. 1420-26, 1428-29). Mr. Heredia had seen "psychic surgery" operations in the Philippines, was aware that Rev. Agpaoa, one of the most famous of the "psychic surgeons," had been indicted for fraud and had fled the United States, and yet, as owner and manager of Phil-Am, permitted Phil-Am to promote "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines as described in earlier findings (Emile Heredia, Tr. 1498-99, 1500). Likewise, Adeline C. Heredia exercised the general executive responsibilities of president of Phil-Am. She had a general understanding of "psychic surgery" and approved the brochure publicizing Phil-Am's tour with Philippine Airlines which stated "psychic surgery is happening in the Philippines" (Adeline C. Heredia, Tr. 1534-1542; CX 175). She looked upon "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines as "another market" for Phil-Am, and approved payments to former Phil-Am tour conductors for the promotion of "psychic surgery" by film showings and other means (Adeline C. Heredia, Tr. 1545-1550).

82. Individual respondents Laurence C. Marquez and Marian E. Butterfield jointly owned and controlled corporate respondent Gem. They knew of, participated in, and were responsible for, the activities of Gem in promoting "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines so that tour members could undergo "psychic surgery," and each was individually responsible for false, misleading and deceptive, written, oral and visual representations to the public that "psychic surgery" was an actual surgical operation, that the body was thereby opened with the bare hands, and diseased tissue or disease-causing material removed therefrom. Both Mr. Marquez and Ms. Butterfield were fully cognizant of the promotional activities of Gem employees for "psychic surgery." Indeed, both had seen "psychic surgery" films and did not believe that the body was actually opened with the bare hands, and diseased tissue or disease-causing material removed (Marquez, Tr. 1108-09, 1123; Cortez, Tr. 1148; Butterfield, Tr. 1205).

Respondents Had No Reasonable Basis for Representing "Psychic Surgery" to Be an Actual Surgical Operation, Etc.

83. It has been found that "psychic surgery" is pure fakery. The body is not opened, no "surgery" is performed with the bare hands or with anything else, and nothing is removed from the body. The entire "operation" is an egregious fraud perpetrated by sleight-of-hand and similar tricks and devices. The fact that an individual respondent in this matter may have been taken in by the tricks of the "psychic surgeons," if that is true, does not render the deception perpetrated on the public by the promotion and sale of tours to undergo "psychic surgery" any the less real. Knowledge or intent is not a requisite for finding that respondents engaged in false, misleading, deceptive and unfair acts and practices, and made material misrepresentations to the public in promoting tours to the Philippines for "psychic surgery."

84. In any event, in view of the absolutely incredible nature of "psychic surgery" respondents were under a duty to make a thorough inquiry before making representations to the public in promoting tours to the Philippines that actual surgery would be performed, that the body would be opened with the bare hands, etc. Respondents had no reasonable basis to represent, or to allow representations to be made on their behalf, that "psychic surgeons" opened the body with their bare hands, removed diseased tissue, etc. Indeed, apart from the incredible nature of "psychic surgery," there is evidence in the record of the wide dissemination of information, when respondents were promoting their tours, that fraud was involved in "psychic surgery." One of the more famous "psychic surgeons," Rev. Agpaoa, was indicted in 1968 for fraud in the United States involving "psychic surgery," forfeited bail and fled the country (CX 59A-C, CX 60). This received extensive publicity (see Adeline C. Heredia, Tr. 1500). Leading metropolitan newspapers in both Seattle and San Francisco carried prominent articles questioning "psychic surgery" (see articles in Seattle Times, CX 72 through CX 74, CX 76-78; Tr. 979-980; the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, CX 96, the San Francisco Chronicle, CX 147 and 148). In the Seattle area, one of the witnesses in this proceeding who saw "psychic surgery" in the Philippines and detected it as fakery, appeared on at least three occasions on Channel 7 disclosing the fraud involved (Allen, Tr. 627, 681-82). And in the Port Angeles, Wash., Chronicle as early as Oct. 25,

1972, articles appeared revealing the fakery in "psychic surgery" (CX 154).[3]

85. The publicity relating to "psychic surgery" described in the foregoing finding was very explicit. The Port Angeles Chronicle, for example, in October 1972 carried an article headed "Films of Phony Operations Will Be Shown." The Port Angeles Chronicle went on to state (CX 154):

> * * * The techniques used by Agpaoa can be clearly seen. They include use of animal parts and tissue as well as dehydrated blood capsules. At first the healer and his assistants welcomed the filmmakers, but when they realized how powerful the zoom lens on the camera was they stopped the cameras and wouldn't allow any more filming * * *."

The Seattle Times in December 1973 reported (CX 74):

> Agpaoa, a self-styled leader of the healers, jumped bail in Detroit five years ago after a federal grand jury charged he had defrauded ailing Detroit residents of thousands of dollars by enticing them to fly to Manila for "cures."
>
> The "psychic surgeries" he and other healers supposedly perform with their bare hands cause no pain and leave no scar. Skeptics say this is because the healers actually do not open the body.
> Several newspapers and persons who have witnessed the "surgeries" have reported the healers conceal animal organs and blood capsules in their hands, then palm the matter atop the body to give the appearance of an opening in the flesh.

The Philippine consulate was reported to have warned ailing persons "not to expect miracles" and that Rev. Agpaoa had been "denounced by the Philippine Medical Association for his questionable activities and faces possible criminal prosecution" (CX 76). Another article appearing in the Seattle Times in November 1973 contained the statement (CX 78):

> A nonbeliever is Alejandro Roces, a writer and secretary of education a decade ago in the cabinet of former President Diosdado Macapagal.
> On a recent occasion, he seized a pan of water containing flesh which a healer supposedly had just extracted from a patient.
> Roces said he took it to a laboratory for analysis. "It was chicken intestine," he said.

The article also contained a large picture of respondent Galazan. An article in the San Francisco Chronicle in June 1973 began with a statement that "Gem Travel Service, Inc." was marketing a "nifty" tour package "complete with two weeks' worth of visits to a psychic healer" (CX 147A; see also Cortez, Tr. 1025-26). The article featured " 'Dr. Tony' Agpaoa" and contained a picture with the caption "Films show 'Dr. Tony' operating with his bare hands." The article also noted that films were circulating in the "Bay Area," and reported that:

> Agpaoa made the mistake a month later of visiting this country and was arrested, tried, and fined for fraud and practicing medicine without a license. He's had his problems with the authorities back home, too, but continues in business.

[3] These newspaper articles were not admitted for the truth of any factual information contained in them. They were received as relevant and material to the allegation in Paragraph Six of the complaint that respondents lacked a "reasonable basis for representations leading members of the general public to believe that the 'psychic surgery' performed in the Philippines is an actual surgical operation * * *." (Tr. 979-980).

A companion article on June 26, 1973, contained additional descriptive matter on "psychic surgery," endorsements of those who believed in it, and quotations from one "Dr. Francis Rigney, an assistant clinical professor of psychiatry at the University of California Medical Center" (CX 148A):

> Any decent magician could do it, and few people could spot the trickery * * *."

The American Cancer Society was quoted as follows (CX 148B):

> The cancer society's report also said tests have found the blood isn't always human blood—sometimes it is from animals, and sometimes ont [sic] blood at all—and the removed tissues are usually animal guts.

A witness in this proceeding, Larry Allen, mentioned earlier, after detecting the fraudulent character of "psychic surgery" on a Gem tour, returned to Seattle and in addition to appearing over television to expose the fraud, wrote a letter which the Seattle Post-Intelligencer published on Nov. 17, 1973, which stated (CX 96):

> * * * The healing turned out to be a common fraud, performed by sleight-of-hand with animal blood and innards * * *."

86. Publicity calling "psychic surgery" into question on the ground of fraud was proven by complaint counsel to have come to the attention of representatives of all corporate respondents. The article in the San Francisco Chronicle (CX 147A-B) published June 25, 1973, was seen by respondent Adeline C. Heredia (Tr. 1539), and both Ms. Heredia and Emile H. Heredia were long aware that Rev. Agpaoa had been indicted in the United States for fraud in connection with "psychic surgery" (Emile H. Heredia, Tr. 1500; Adeline C. Heredia, Tr. 1537). Laurence C. Marquez and Marian E. Butterfield of Phil-Am were also proven to have seen the San Francisco Chronicle article (CX 147A-B) see Tr. 1123 and Tr. 1205. Mr. Cortez, an employee of Gem, who particularly promoted that travel agency's "psychic surgery" tours, was also familiar with the San Francisco Chronicle articles and the indictment of Rev. Agpaoa (Cortez, Tr. 1024-27). Likewise, respondent Galazan had seen articles in the Seattle Times including the announcement, quoted earlier, from the Philippine consulate (CX 76). Mr. Galazan acknowledged seeing another article published Nov. 20, 1973, which contained his picture as well as the statement, also quoted earlier, of "Alejandro Roces" that he found the material allegedly removed from a patient by a "psychic surgeon" to have been "chicken intestine" (CX 78) see Galazan, Tr. 982-83.

Public Interest

Volume of Business

87. Substantial numbers of people have purchased package tours to the Philippines from and through respondents, paying substantial sums of money therefore. The cost of the tour offered by Travel King, Inc. & Ramble Tours from the West Coast was either $1,132 per person or

$1,186 per person, depending on the season (CX 2). Phil-Am's tour cost $985 under the group plan, and $1,200 under the independent plan (CX 26). The Gem tour was $932 under the group plan, $1,007 under the regular plan, and $1,116 under the independent plan (CX 50). Travel King, Inc. & Ramble Tours appear to have sold at least 200 tours (see Galazan, Tr. 804, 815, 820, 862, 891-92). Phil-Am has marketed over 814 tours (CX 214; Tr. 1570), and Gem about 1042 (CX 143; Tr. 1014). All in all, about $2,000,000 has been spent by the public on the "psychic surgery" tours of respondents to the Philippines. Further, insofar as travel to the Philippines to obtain "psychic surgery" is concerned the foregoing seems to be only the "tip of the iceburg." Many thousands of ill persons from all over the world seem to have made the trip, drawn by the desperate but futile hope that by some magic their bodies will be opened by Philippine "healers," and the causes of their diseases removed.

Injury to the Public

88. The representation that "psychic surgeons," "psychic healers," "faith healers," or "spiritual" or "spirit healers" have the ability to open the body with their bare hands, to remove diseased tissue or disease-causing material, to close the body and leave no scar, all without pain or anesthesia, has the capacity to cause the gravest and most serious, indeed, incalculable injury to individuals and to the public generally. Not only do such representations have the tendency and capacity to cause seriously ill persons to travel long distances at great expense, and to waste their time, money, and energy in the false belief that they will undergo an actual surgical operation, but such representations have the tendency and capacity to worsen the condition of the sick, and even to cause death, through interruption of normal medical care.

89. The foregoing are not purely theoretical possibilities. Complaint counsel produced evidence establishing the reality of such effects.

The case of Mr. Hansen

Mr. Hansen, suffering from congestive heart failure and a non-reparable hernia, was taken by his wife, through a Gem tour, to the Philippines to obtain "psychic surgery" from Rev. Agpaoa. Mr. Hansen was desperate to have his hernia repaired. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen had seen "psychic surgery" films, and decided to go to the Philippines to see Rev. Agpaoa (Mrs. Hansen, Tr. 2072-73). Mr. Hansen started the trip comfortably, although in a wheelchair. By the time he had traveled from Seattle to San Francisco, transferred aircraft and flown to Hawaii, he "had a spell." Mrs. Hansen, a registered nurse, had medications with her and there was a doctor on the plane. Mr. Hansen was given oxygen and was eventually able to sleep (Mrs. Hansen, Tr. 2073). After arriving in the Philippines, Rev. Agpaoa "operated" on Mr.

Hansen. According to Mrs. Hansen, Rev. Agpaoa removed "a piece of tissue that was about an inch wide and six inches long" from her husband. This amazed her "because you know when you are being operated on for a rupture, you don't have to pull out anything. You repair" (Mrs. Hansen, Tr. 2077). On the return trip, just as they arrived home, Mr. Hansen came down with pneumonia, and had to be hospitalized. Mr. Hansen spent eight days in the hospital with pneumonia and died at home of congestive heart failure on the day he was released (Mrs. Hansen, Tr. 2084-86). Persons with congestive heart trouble are susceptible to pneumonia, which is hard on their hearts (Mrs. Hansen, Tr. 2087-88).

The case of Mrs. Douglass

Mrs. Douglass suffered from inoperable cancer in her neck and had a short life expectancy. Her husband heard about, and became interested in, "psychic surgery" as offering a possible cure. Mr. Douglass saw an advertisement for a Travel King promotion at the Holiday Inn, Bellevue, Wash., which included a film showing. He and his wife attended. They watched the film and listened to testimonials (Douglass, Tr. 1344). As a result they purchased tickets, although from Gem, and both journeyed to the Philippines for "psychic surgery" from Rev. Agpaoa. Rev. Agpaoa "operated" on Mrs. Douglass, and pulled some tissue from the area of her neck. Mr. Douglass described Agpaoa's hands moving back and forth, moving cotton around on Mrs. Douglass' body, and seeing blood spurt after a few moments. He described blood clots on the skin's surface and the removal of what Rev. Agpaoa announced was "the tumor" (Douglass, Tr. 1351). As described in earlier findings, Mr. Douglass took a piece of the tissue Rev. Agpaoa had stated was the tumor he removed from Mrs. Douglass' neck. When they returned home the tissue was analyzed and was found to be of animal origin (Dr. Hoekzema, Tr. 2067). The report caused Mrs. Douglass to cry (Douglass, Tr. 1367). Mrs. Douglass did not improve. She received no benefit from her visit to the "psychic surgeon." She returned bitterly disappointed and physically weakened. The trip to the Philippines cost the Douglasses over $2,000 and they also left Tony Agpaoa a $100 donation (Douglass, Tr. 1367-68). The hot and humid climate and the disappointment of no improvement for his wife made Mr. Douglass describe his trip to the Philippines as "miserable" (Douglass, Tr. 1373).

The case of Mrs. Brown

Wallace Brown testified that his wife suffered a stroke in July 1972 which left her almost totally paralyzed. Over the next year, Mrs. Brown received various types of therapy, including physical, occupational, and speech therapy, but was able to improve her condition only slightly. She was confined to a wheelchair, had difficulty speaking, and had double vision. Mr. Brown went to an advertised Travel King film showing on Sept. 30, 1973 (see CX 193). At the showing, he saw films of "psychic surgery" operations. He felt that his wife was at a point where no more improvement would occur and that he would have to accept things as they were. The films of "psychic surgery," however, offered him a hope of improvement for her that was not available anywhere else (Brown, Tr. 2093-94). Mr. Brown was very impressed with what the film showed and, coupled with the testimonials offered at the film showing, was very anxious to find out more about "psychic surgery." As a result, Mr. Brown took his wife and a woman to assist her to the Philippines in October 1973. In a two-week stay, Mrs. Brown was "treated" by many "healers," including Alex and Marcos Orbito, Tony Agpaoa, and Juan Blance. Mrs. Brown had many "operations" by these "healers," respondent Yuda Galazan making all the arrangements (Brown, Tr. 2111), but each day Mr. Brown noticed that there was no improvement. He also noticed that there was no improvement in the other members who accompanied him on this Travel King tour. Upon returning to the United States, there was still no improvement in his wife's condition. She had in fact lost ground in her ability to feed herself, which she was able to do before the trip but, because she did not continue her therapy, she did not have the ability upon her return. Mrs. Brown found the loss of hope very hard to take. The trip cost between $3,000 and $4,000 (Brown, Tr. 2115-2117).

The case of William Chambers

Mr. William Chambers was afflicted with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease. His physician, Dr. Otto Trott, estimated that he had about three years left to live (Dr. Trott, Tr. 1964). Mr. Chambers, his wife and mother-in-law attended a film showing of psychic surgery conducted by Ms. Blanchard, and later a showing at which Mr. Rogers was present (Mrs. Chambers, Tr. 2157-58; Mrs. Stolz, Tr. 1942). Both Ms. Blanchard and Mr. Rogers, as described in prior findings, received payment for expenses from Phil-Am for their promotional activities for "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines. After the showing at which Mr. Rogers was present, Mr. Rogers sent Mr. and Mrs. Chambers Phil-Am travel literature, including "PHIL-AM, TRAVEL AGENCY'S SPIRITUALIST PILGRIMAGE TO THE PHILIPPINES" (CX 39). This brochure contained the statement "the phenomenon of psychic surgery is happening in the Philippines," as previously described. Mr. Chambers determined to journey to the Philippines to obtain "psychic surgery." Mrs. Stolz, his mother-in-law, accompanied him. In November 1973 they both traveled to the Philippines on one of Phil-Am's "psychic surgery" tours. Mr.

Chambers had much difficulty walking during the trip, especially on one occasion when he had to carry baggage a long distance over concrete at the airport (Mrs. Stolz, Tr. 1943). Once in the Philippines, Mr. Chambers' treatment consisted of "psychic surgery" with frequent, intensive massage of the legs. Mrs. Stolz testified that after these treatments, Mr. Chambers was in great discomfort with swollen and weakened legs (Mrs. Stolz, Tr. 1944-49). When Mr. Chambers returned, his wife observed that his condition was weaker, and several days later he entered the hospital with blood clots in the lungs for which he was placed on anticoagulant medication (Mrs. Chambers, Tr. 2159-2160). It was the opinion of his physician, Dr. Trott, that these emboli were caused by thrombosis of the legs resulting from the trip to the Philippines. The factors of a long flight, sitting upright in an airplane seat, and the frequent intensive massage connected with the "psychic surgery" combined to form blood clots in his legs which were carried to his lungs. In early April of 1974, Mr. Chambers had a fall at home, striking his head and suffering a subdural hematoma, a bleeding between the skull and the brain. Mr. Chambers recovered from this occurrence, but had to be taken off the anticoagulants upon which he had become dependent. Shortly thereafter, he suffered another pulmonary embolism, which resulted in his sudden death on the day he was scheduled to leave the hospital. Dr. Trott concluded that the Philippine "psychic surgery" tour resulted in Mr. Chambers' death when he was still expected to have approximately two years to live. Dr. Trott testified that pulmonary embolism is not a normal complication of amyotrophic lateral schlerosis and explained that blood clots could easily form in Mr. Chambers' weakened legs under the kind of massage he received in the Philippines. See Dr. Trott, Tr. 1968-2047. Mr. Chambers spent about $2,000 and Mrs. Stolz about $1,500 on the trip to the Philippines, including the tour price paid to Phil-Am, about $400 in donations to "psychic surgeons" and incidental expenses. Dr. Trott estimated that medical expenses incurred by Mr. Chambers as a result of his travel to the Philippines were about $3,300. In addition, because of his sudden death, Mr. Chambers was unable to obtain his normal pension from which his widow would have received benefits after he died (Mrs. Chambers, Tr. 2160-2186).

CONCLUSIONS

1. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction over the corporate and individual respondents, and over the acts and practices which are the subject of this proceeding.

2. Corporate and individual respondents promoted and were responsible for the promotion of tours to the Philippines so that tour members could undergo "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," "faith healing," or "spiritual" or "spirit healing."

3. In the course of promoting tours to the Philippines, corporate and individual respondents made representations to the public which had the tendency and capacity to cause members of the public to believe that the "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," "faith healing," or "spiritual" or "spirit healing," which those who purchased tours from respondents would undergo in the Philippines, consisted of an actual surgical operation, that the body was opened with the bare hands, and that diseased tissue or disease-causing material was thereby removed.

4. Such representations were false and fraudulent, unfair, misleading and deceptive.

5. The "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," "faith healing," or "spiritual" or "spirit healing," performed in the Philippines on persons purchasing tours promoted by respondents did not consist of an actual surgical operation, the body was not opened with the bare hands, or with anything else, and diseased tissue or disease-causing material was not removed.

6. The "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," "faith healing," or "spiritual" or "spirit healing," to undergo which respondents marketed tours to members of the public, is pure fakery and a fraud accomplished by the deception and trickery of the "psychic surgeons," "psychic healers," "faith healers," or "spiritual" or "spirit healers" through the use of sleight-of-hand, tricks and devices, including the employment of animal parts, tissue and blood, all used to defraud and deceive trusting persons into the false and mistaken belief that human bodies have been opened with the bare hands, diseased material or disease-causing material removed, and the incision closed, all without pain or suffering.

7. The representations of corporate and individual respondents herein, and for which they were responsible, in the promotion of tours to the Philippines so that tour members could undergo "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," "faith healing," and "spiritual" or "spirit healing," had the tendency and capacity to inflict great injury and suffering on persons afflicted with serious, incurable or terminal illnesses and diseases, to prey upon and to exploit them, and to cause them, and in some cases their spouses, children or relatives, to undertake long journeys at great cost, hardship and inconvenience, and to forego medical treatment with the potential result of worsening their condition and hastening or causing their death.

8. There is great and abiding public interest in this proceeding.

9. The acts and practices of corporate and individual respondents disclosed by the record are to the prejudice and injury of the public, and constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

REMEDY

All corporate respondents disseminated false, misleading and deceptive representations concerning the nature of the "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," "faith healing," or "spiritual" or "spirit healing," which those who purchased tours to the Philippines from them would experience. The individual respondents herein controlled the policies, acts and practices of the closely-held corporate respondents, and are responsible for the activities of the businesses they controlled and the employees thereof. Standard Educators, Inc., 79 F.T.C. 858, 894-99, aff'd Standard Educators, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 475 F.2d 401, 402-03 (D.C. Cir. 1973); Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 302 U.S. 112 (1937); Pati-Port, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 313 F.2d 103 (4th Cir. 1963); Standard Distributors, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 211 F.2d 7, 15 (2nd Cir. 1954); Fred Meyer, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 359 F.2d 351 (9th Cir. 1966). All individual respondents, in fact, knew of, and authorized, directly or by acquiescence, or personally participated in, the dissemination of false, misleading and deceptive representations to the public, through film showings, distribution of literature and printed materials, statements, and otherwise, that the "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," "faith healing," "spiritual" or "spirit healing," which members of the public would experience if they purchased tours to the Philippines from respondents, consisted of an actual operation, that the body was opened, and diseased tissue or disease-causing material removed. Responsibility of respondents for the representations of "tour conductors" or "tour promoters," under the circumstances set out in the findings made earlier in this initial decision, is clear. Goodman v. Federal Trade Commission, 244 F.2d 584 (9th Cir. 1957); Holiday Magic, Inc., order of Oct. 15, 1974 [84 F.T.C. 748]. To end the false, misleading and deceptive representations, all corporate and individual respondents must be bound by an order. Such action does not constitute "regulation of religious action" or of travel which is "religious in nature." Respondents may continue to do business as travel agents, but respondents may not promote travel or tours by misrepresenting the nature of the "treatment" available.

The order issued not only prohibits misrepresentation that "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," etc., consists of an actual "surgical operation," but prohibits the continued use of the terms "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," "faith healing," "spiritual" or "spirit healing," and similar terms, employed in the past by respondents in the promotion of tours to the Philippines. The continued use of those terms would permit continued deception of the public. This would be true notwithstanding cessation of specific misrepresentations through films, dissemination of literature and printed materials, statements, etc., that "psychic surgeons" or "healers" in the Philippines had the miraculous power to open human bodies with their bare hands, and remove diseased tissue or disease-causing material. The legal authority to enter an order which will end all means of continuing past deceptive practices is well established. Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U.S. 419, 428-430 (1957); Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U.S. 608 (1946). The sale of "psychic surgery" or the arrangement for treatment by "psychic surgeons," in view of the record herein, is also obviously deceptive and requires prohibition, considering respondents' past conduct.

As an additional provision for ending continuing effects of past false, misleading and deceptive representations in the promotion of tours to the Philippines, respondents must also provide a copy of Attachment A to every member of the public who has taken a "psychic surgery" tour of a respondent or who inquires in the future about "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," etc., or who seeks to purchase travel, tours or accommodations for such purpose in the Philippines, or elsewhere. Past tour members must be notified because they may have discontinued vital medication or otherwise terminated valid medical treatment. As a result of the widespread publicity given to "psychic surgery" films, and other false, misleading and deceptive representations contained in the promotional materials and literature disseminated by, or on behalf of, respondents, it is probable that requests by the public for "psychic surgery" tours, and for travel to visit "psychic surgeons," or Philippine "healers," will be addressed to respondents in the future. Members of the public inquiring about "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," etc., must, for their protection, be given adequate disclosure of the fakery and danger involved. Such provision will also insure compliance with the order by preventing respondents from implicitly endorsing "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," etc., or continuing to sell such tours, by responding to requests for information by sending tour brochures or other literature. Such warning notice is clearly within the Commission's authority to order the relief essential to end unlawful practices and their continuing effects. Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead, supra; Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470 (1952); Jacob Siegel Company v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; see also, Arthur Murray Studio of Washington, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 458 F.2d 622 (5th Cir. 1972), rehearing denied May 11, 1972; S.S.S. Company, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 416 F.2d 226 (6th Cir.

1969); All-State Industries of North Carolina, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 423 F.2d 423 (4th Cir. 1970).

Certain other provisions have also been included in the order. Respondents had no reasonable basis for believing that "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," etc., involved an actual opening of the human body with the bare hands, and the removal of diseased tissue or disease-causing material. In view of past misrepresentations with respect to treatment of disease by "psychic surgery," respondents must be prohibited from future misrepresentations with respect to any other form of treatment of disease unless there is a reasonable basis therefor. Those caught violating the Act "must expect some fencing in." Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead, supra. Similarly, the manner in which respondents approved, authorized, used, and benefited by the promotional activities of "tour promoters" or "tour conductors" for travel and tours to the Philippines for "psychic surgery," "psychic healing," etc., warrants that respondents be prohibited from providing compensation expenses, travel at free or reduced rates, or other benefits, to persons making representations or engaging in acts or practices prohibited by this order.

Complaint counsel originally sought a provision in the order requiring restitution to all persons who purchased "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines from any corporate respondent in this proceeding. Subsequent to submission of proposed findings, complaint counsel withdrew their advocacy of restitution on the basis of the Commission's ruling of Jan. 21, 1975, striking the restitution provision from its order against Holiday Magic, et al., Docket 8834 [85 F.T.C. 89]. The Commission's action was taken in view of the decision in Heater v. Federal Trade Commission, 503 F.2d 321 (9th Cir. 1974), and the decision of the Commission not to seek review of that decision by the Supreme Court. In striking the order of restitution from Holiday Magic, the Commission noted that while its determination not to seek review of the Heater decision should not be taken to signify a change in its view regarding the correctness of that decision:

> * * * it does eliminate any possibility that Heater will not continue to be governing law in the Ninth Circuit.

This case, of course, arose in the Ninth Circuit and all respondents are within that circuit. Hence, restitution is not a valid remedy in this matter, even if it were otherwise contemplated, and complaint counsel properly no longer urge a provision in the order to that effect.

Complaint counsel, however, although dropping the restitution provision from their proposed order, seek to amend retroactively the notice order issued herein to provide a basis for the Commission to seek, in its discretion, "consumer redress" in the form of restitution as authorized by the "Federal Trade Commission Improvement Act" of Jan. 4, 1975. Respondents oppose such action.

Section 206 of that Act creates a new Section 19 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. §59, allowing the Commission, after it has issued a final cease and desist order, to sue a respondent or respondents in Federal district court to obtain "consumer redress" which may consist of "rescission or reformation of contracts, the refund of money or return of property, the payment of damages, and public notification" respecting the unfair or deceptive acts or practices. The statute applies to cases in which a cease and desist order issued after the date of enactment if the respondent (Section 206(b)(2)):

> * * * had been notified in the complaint, or in the notice or order attached thereto, that consumer redress may be sought.

Neither the complaint, amended complaint, nor notice order in this proceeding contained any provision for restitution, or notified any corporate or individual respondent that "consumer redress" was or might be sought. Retroactive amendment of the Complaint would constitute a transparent evasion of the plain and unambiguous terms of the statute.

The fact that complaint counsel at the initial pretrial conference announced that they intended to seek restitution, and shortly thereafter filed a written notice to this effect (see notice of intent to seek restitution from corporate and individual respondents, filed Mar. 22, 1974) does not change matters. Such notice did not emanate from the Commission, but from complaint counsel. Respondents were never given notice by the Commission that "consumer redress" was or might be sought. And certainly, as stated, no such notice was in the complaint or notice order. To rule that, in lieu thereof, notice from complaint counsel met the requirements of the statute, would require construction and modification of the plain language thereof. Such action would be wholly unjustified. Where the language of a statute is plain and unambiguous there is no occasion for construction, and the statute must be given effect according to its plain and obvious meaning. United States v. Public Utilities Commission of California, 345 U.S. 295, 315 (1953); Mastro Plastics Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 350 U.S. 270, 287 (1955). Giving effect to the plain language of the statute will not produce anomalous or absurd results, indeed, to the contrary. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Tuttle, 244 F.2d 605 (2nd Cir. 1957), cert. denied, 354 U.S. 925. The motion of complaint counsel to amend the notice order is denied. It may be noted, in connection with the advocacy of restitution or "consumer redress" by complaint counsel, that respondents did not retain the bulk of the money paid by members of the public for "psychic surgery" tours to the Philippines. Except for a commission, respondents remitted all such funds to airline companies and to hotels, etc., for "land" accommodations.

The following order is entered.

ORDER

It is ordered, That respondents Travel King, Inc., doing business as Travel King, Inc. & Ramble Tours; Phil-Am Travel Agency, Inc.; Gem Travel Service, Inc.; and Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc., corporations; Yuda Galazan and Nyla Ford, individually and as officers and directors of Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc.; Ronald Brown, individually and as an officer of Travel King, Inc.; Adeline C. ATTACHMENT A

The following notice shall be typed on a single page or printed in type at least as large as typewriter pica type on respondents' letterhead:

WARNING

The following factual information is of vital importance to anyone who has undergone or contemplates undergoing "psychic surgery" by any "psychic surgeon" in the Philippines, or elsewhere.

Please read this warning carefully.

"Psychic surgery" has been shown to be fraud and fakery. The "psychic surgeons" in the Philippines use sleight-of-hand and other tricks and deceptions, including the employment of animal parts, tissue and blood to create the appearance of surgery.

"Psychic surgeons" use small capsules filled with the blood and tissue of animals hidden in their hands, cotton, and other places, to simulate human blood and tissue. Chemical analysis of blood appearing during one "operation" showed it to have come from a pig and a tumor supposedly removed during another came from a small animal. Another "psychic surgeon" used a concealed razor blade to make surface incisions. Two former "psychic surgeons" have publicly testified that all "psychic surgery" is a fake, using sleight-of-hand techniques and animal parts to create its effects. There is no opening of the body and nothing is removed from inside the body during "psychic surgery," regardless of who claims to be able to perform it.

There are known instances of people who have died or have been seriously injured as a result of the careless manipulations of the "psychic surgeons." These manipulations are particularly dangerous for persons with cancer, tumors, varicose veins, and certain heart conditions.

If you have stopped taking medication or seeing your doctor because you believe you have been "cured" by "psychic surgery," you may be in serious danger. There is no way to diagnose many diseases yourself. The feeling of improvement, if any, may only be short-lived and if you wait too long to consult a doctor, it may be too late for him or her to help you.

You should check with a doctor to ensure your own safety.

This travel agency no longer provides any arrangements for visits to "psychic surgeons."

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

BY HANFORD, Commissioner:

The amended complaint in this matter charges the eleven respondents (four West Coast travel agencies and seven of their officers and shareholders) with selling tours to the Philippines by falsely representing that the "psychic surgery" offered there is an actual surgical operation by which diseased tissue or disease-causing material is removed from the human body and with lack of reasonable basis for these same representations.[1]

The initial decision of Administrative Law Judge Hanscom, filed Feb. 28, 1975, found all eleven respondents in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act on both theories. A comprehensive order was entered, prohibiting virtually any activity by respondents in connection with "psychic surgery," and requiring that respondents send warning notices to past purchasers of "psychic surgery" tours and to those who inquire about such tours in the future. One travel agency, Gem Travel Service, Inc., and its two officers and shareholders, Laurence C. Marquez and Marian E. Butterfield, appeal.

We find no merit in any of respondents' contentions, nor do we see any other reason to disturb the initial decision and order; thus, they are both affirmed in full. The findings and conclusions of the law judge are adopted as those of the Commission.

Respondents raise four sets of arguments in challenging the initial decision.

1. Their first contention is that Judge Hanscom's findings of fact are not supported by the record as a whole.[2] Respondents' primary contention here is that their allegedly deceptive promotional efforts were few and far between and, in essence, de minimis. This argument is not supportable as either a legal or a factual matter. The dissemination of only one or a small percentage of deceptive representations has frequently been held to violate Section 5.[3] As we have stated previously, "we are not prepared to say that deception is all right if practiced in moderation."[4] This is particularly true where, as here, the deceptive representations have the capacity to cause extreme medical and financial injury to those members of the public who rely on them.[5]

Moreover, the deception practiced by respondents was by no means de minimis, either in time or in scope. In promoting its June 12, 1972 tour to the Phillipines, Gem's brochure featured the psychic surgery of Tony Agpaoa as one of its "highlights."[6] It was represented in these brochures that Mr. Agpaoa would perform "painless, almost bloodless operation[s]" with his hands, rather than a knife.[7] Soon thereafter, Mr. Ernie Cortez, a Gem employee, began sending out letters on Gem stationery, informing some of the "dozen a day or so" of potential Gem "psychic surgery" customers about the activities of Mr. Agpaoa.[8] This letter speaks of "painless surgery with bare hands."[9] Later, in mid-1973, Mr. Cortez, on behalf of Gem, attempted to promote "psychic surgery" tours through public showings of movies depicting actual "psychic surgery operations."[10] This film was shown five times in four cities in two states and was viewed by hundreds of prospective Gem customers.[11] It unquestionably has the tendency and capacity to convey the message that "psychic surgery" is an actual surgical operation involving the opening of the human body and the removal of diseased tissue and/or disease causing material.[12]

Moreover, films depicting "psychic surgery" were shown to the public on Gem's behalf by several Gem tour conductors.[13] The law judge found respondents liable for these films as well,[14] and respondents concede such responsibility.[15] We find no merit in respondents' contention that the representations made by the tour conductors were not deceptive.[16] This defense is bottomed on two propositions: 1) the films accurately portray that which took place and 2) the tour conductors accompanied the films with a "balanced" narrative, setting forth the possibility that "psychic surgery" may be a fake. However, the mere holding out of the possibility that the procedure is genuine when in fact it is not is deceptive. Secondly, the few disclaimers shown to have been made were not sufficient to dissipate the profound emotional message of the films. Third, when a person shows a film which ostensibly depicts a miracle cure involving an apparent opening of the body to seriously ill persons, then invites them to partake of the cure, it is virtually impossible for disclaimers to eliminate the tendency of the film to convey the message to at least some members of the audience that an opening of the body is taking place. We must also reject respondents' defense that the tour conductors did not intend to sell the "psychic surgery" tours.[17] Intent to deceive is simply not an element of a deception under Section 5.[18]

Respondents also argue that there has been no showing that sales resulted from any misrepresentations, rather than from word of mouth advertising.[19] This contention must be rejected for two reasons: first, much of the word of mouth must inevitably have stemmed from earlier misrepresentations;[20] second, it need not be shown that even one consumer actually relied on a particular false claim.[21]

2. Contending that the law judge's order is overbroad, respondents ask us to alter Paragraphs 3 and 5 and delete Paragraph 6 and the first "It is further ordered" paragraph. The purpose of modifying Paragraphs 3, 5, and 6 is to allow respondents to continue to sell "psychic surgery" tours. We believe, however, that based on respondents' past conduct in promoting these tours and the law judge's conclusion that "psychic surgery" is "pure fakery and a fraud,"[22] an outright ban on promotion of "psychic surgery" tours or arrangement for visits to "psychic surgeons" is well within the permissible limits of the Commission's power to "fence in" law violators.[23] Where the very sale of a product or service is offensive to public policy, it is within the authority of the Commission to ban its sale entirely.[24]

Because we are dealing here with desperate consumers with terminal illnesses who want to believe that "psychic surgery" will cure them, no amount of disclosure will suffice to drive home to all the point that "psychic surgery" is nothing but a total hoax. Respondents' argument that we may not prohibit the arrangement or advertisement of "psychic surgery" has little force in light of their concession that we may prohibit them from selling "psychic surgery."[25] Surely the power to prohibit the sale of a service encompasses the power to prohibit its advertisement.

The second aspect of respondents' appeal of the order relates to the sending of the warning notice to past purchasers and those who inquire about "psychic surgery" in the future. As respondents themselves contend, much of their "psychic surgery" business stems from word of mouth of former customers. As respondent Butterfield put it, word of mouth had a "snowballing" effect.[26] Even if Gem no longer sells "psychic surgery" tours, some wayfaring souls, hearing the word of mouth, may book passage through Gem to the Philippines to see Mr.

[20] As respondent Butterfield put it (Tr. 1186), word-of-mouth from the earlier tours created a "snowballing effect" on Gem's "psychic surgery" business. See also Tr. 747.

Agpaoa. This is a continuing effect of past deception and may properly be remedied via a warning letter.[27]

Additionally, for their own medical benefit, it is important to warn past "psychic surgery" tour participants that "psychic surgery" was a hoax. As Judge Hanscom said: "Past tour members must be notified because they may have discontinued vital medication or otherwise terminated valid medical treatment."[28]

As for future inquirers about "psychic surgery," it is obvious that they have at least some interest in partaking of "psychic surgery" services. The fact that they have come to Gem is evidence that the interest was likely engendered by Gem's past acts. To reduce the probability that, as a result of Gem's past deception, these individuals partake of "psychic surgery," it is not unduly burdensome to require respondents to inform them that "psychic surgery" is a hoax.

Respondents also ask us to delete the requirement that they distribute a copy of the order to employees and past or present "psychic surgery" tour conductors. Provisions of this type have frequently been entered by the Commission and upheld by the courts.[29] We find this provision entirely appropriate here.

3. Respondents also ask us to delete the reasonable basis provision (Paragraph 7) from the order.[30] This request is based on three arguments. First, they contend that the representations for which the reasonable basis was allegedly lacking were de minimis. We reject this contention as being unfounded in law or fact for the same reason we reject the de minimis argument as to the falsity issue.[31] Second, respondents argue that the tour conductors did not lack a reasonable basis for their claims, since they were "satisfied users." The experience of a lay tour guide is clearly not an adequate basis for this type of medical claim.[32] Respondents' third argument is that the order paragraph relating to reasonable basis is too broad in any case. They contend that it would stop their sale of tours to Lourdes or Fatima. This would be so only if the mere sale of a tour there constitutes a representation as to the efficacy of the "treatment for disease or disorder" which may be obtained there. We do not believe that a mere visit to a religious or spiritual shrine constitutes a "treatment." Thus, this provision is not overbroad.

4. Respondents' last major argument is that individual respondents Marquez and Butterfield should not be included in the order because they did not personally represent anything about "psychic surgery" to anyone and did not encourage violations by the tour conductors.[33] Respondents miss the point. Under the law, the presence of knowledge, control, and authorization is more than an ample basis for individual liability.[34] All these elements were found by the administrative law judge and respondents do not contest these findings.[35] We hold that individual liability is amply justified under the law and is necessary on these facts to prevent circumvention of the order.[36]

For the reasons set forth herein, the appeal of respondents is denied. The initial decision will be adopted as the decision of the Commission.

FINAL ORDER

This matter having been heard by the Commission upon the appeal of respondents Gem Travel Service, Inc., Laurence C. Marquez and Marian E. Butterfield from the administrative law judge's initial decision, and upon briefs and oral argument in support thereof and in opposition thereto; and the Commission having rendered its decision denying the appeal and adopting the initial decision:

It is ordered, That respondents, Travel King, Inc., Phil-Am Travel Agency, Inc., Gem Travel Service, Inc., Ramble Travel and Tours, Inc., Yuda Galazan, Nyla Ford, Ronald Brown, Adeline C. Complaint

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Act, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Rosenthal Chevrolet Co., a corporation, and Robert M. Rosenthal and Harry Rosenthal, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

Paragraph 1. Respondent Rosenthal Chevrolet Co. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 3400 Columbia Pike, in the County of Arlington, Commonwealth of Virginia.

Respondents Robert M. Rosenthal and Harry Rosenthal are individuals and officers of the corporate respondent. They formulate, direct, and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including those hereinafter set forth. Their business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent.

The respondents cooperate and act together in carrying out the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

Par. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, and sale to the public of new and used motor vehicles and in the servicing and repair thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, respondents now cause, and for some time last past have caused, their said motor vehicles to be sold to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, including the Commonwealth of Virginia, and maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in said motor vehicles in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. Also in the course and conduct of their business, respondents have caused, and now cause, customers' notes, contracts, payments, checks, credit reports, title registrations, correspondence and other documents relating to payment of the purchase price for respondents' motor vehicles to be transmitted by various means, including but not limited to, the United States mails, in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing and which were likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of their motor vehicles and services, the respondents have made, and are now making, numerous statements and representations in advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation and by means of radio and television broadcasts transmitted by radio and television stations located in the District of Columbia, having sufficient power to carry such broadcasts across State lines, and by other means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. Typical and illustrative of the statements and representations in said advertisements, published in October and November of 1970, disseminated as aforesaid, but not all inclusive thereof, are the following:

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, the respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication:

1. That the motor vehicles described or referred to in respondents' advertisements are new;

2. That the motor vehicles described or referred to in respondents' advertisements carry a full five year warranty.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. The motor vehicles described or referred to in said advertisements, in many instances, are not new. To the contrary, they have been driven substantially in excess of the limited use necessary in moving or road testing a new vehicle prior to its delivery to the ultimate purchaser.

2. Some of the motor vehicles described or referred to in respondents' advertisements do not carry a full five year warranty, but merely the remaining balance of the factory warranty. The warranty starts to run from the date the motor vehicle is sold or from the original date the vehicle is placed in service. Many of the advertised motor vehicles have been driven a number of miles and/or have been placed in service for a number of months.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five, hereof, were, and are, unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the further course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their motor vehicles, respondents, through oral statements by their salesmen, have misrepresented the nature and extent of the prior use of said motor vehicles. Said salesmen have represented motor vehicles as demonstrators when, in truth and in fact, such vehicles were driver education vehicles used in high schools in the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan Area.

Therefore, such representations and statements are unfair, false, misleading and deceptive acts and practices.

PAR. 8. In the further course and conduct of their aforesaid business, respondents have engaged in the following acts and practices in connection with the sale of their said motor vehicles:

1. A $40 dealer handling and service charge is added to the price of respondents' used motor vehicles, the first indication that such a charge is being made, in many instances, occurs at the time the buyer receives a copy of the sales invoice and the conditional sales contract. The purchaser, in many said instances, believes that the motor vehicle will be delivered in satisfactory condition and appearance without the imposition of additional charges. The dealer handling and service charge becomes an undisclosed cost that should have been made known prior to the consummation of the sale.

2. Respondents have repaired or repainted, or have caused to be repaired or repainted, damaged cars, said repairs or repainting hide damage that may adversely affect a vehicle's performance and life expectancy. Respondents have failed to disclose to prospective purchasers and purchasers of respondents' motor vehicles that said damage has been hidden by repairs or repainting.

Therefore, respondents' failure to disclose such material facts, prior to the time of sale was, and is, unfair, false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 9. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and are now, in substantial competition, in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale, service and repair of new and used motor vehicles of the same general kind and nature as that sold, serviced and repaired by respondents.

PAR. 10. The use by the respondents of the aforesaid unfair, false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices and the failure to disclose material facts, as aforesaid, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were, and are, true and complete and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' motor vehicles and services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief. Respondents' aforesaid acts and practices unfairly cause the purchasing public to assume debts and obligations and to make payments of money which they might otherwise not have incurred.

PAR. 11. The acts and practices of the respondents, as set forth above, were, and are, all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Federal Trade Commission having issued a complaint charging that the respondents named in the caption hereof have violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

The Commission having duly determined upon motion submitted by complaint counsel and respondents that, in the circumstances presented, the public interest would be served by a withdrawal of the matter from adjudication for the purpose of negotiating a settlement by the entry of a consent order; and

The respondents and counsel for the Commission having executed an agreement containing a consent order, an admission by the respondents of all the jurisdictional facts set forth in the complaint, a statement that the signing of said agreement is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission by respondents that the law has been violated as alleged in the complaint, and waivers and other provisions as required by the Commission's rules; and

The Commission having considered the agreement and having provisionally accepted same, and the agreement containing a consent order having thereupon been placed on the public record for a period of sixty (60) days, now in further conformity with the procedures described in Section 2.34 of its rules, the Commission hereby makes the following jurisdictional findings, and enters the following order:

1. Respondent Rosenthal Chevrolet Co. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 3400 Columbia Pike, in the County of Arlington, Commonwealth of Virginia.

Respondent Harry Rosenthal is an officer of said corporation. He formulates, directs and controls the policies, acts and practices of said corporation, and his address is the same as that of said corporation.

2. The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this proceeding and of the respondents, and the proceeding is in the public interest.

Said decal or sticker shall also contain the following statement: "FOR EXACT mileage, see odometer."

5. Misrepresenting, orally or in writing, directly or by implication, the nature or extent of previous use or condition of any vehicle displayed, offered for sale or sold.

6. Representing, orally or in writing, directly or by implication, that any of their motor vehicles are warranted, unless the nature and extent of the warranty, the identity of the warrantor and the manner in which the warrantor will perform are clearly and conspicuously disclosed; misrepresenting, in any manner, the terms, conditions and extent of any warranty.

7. Failing to disclose both orally and in writing, prior to the signing of the completed retail order for a used motor vehicle, and in any and all advertising of such vehicles, the precise amount of handling and service charges which will be added to the cost of respondents' used motor vehicles.

It is further ordered, That respondent Robert M. Rosenthal be dismissed from the complaint as an individual and named officer of the corporate respondent.

It is further ordered:

(a) That respondents shall forthwith distribute a copy of this order to each of their operating divisions;

(b) That respondents deliver a copy of this order to cease and desist to all present and future personnel engaged in the offering for sale, or sale, of any motor vehicle, and in the consummation of any extension of consumer credit or in any aspect of preparation, creation, or placing of advertising, and that respondents secure a signed statement acknowledging receipt of said order from each such person;

(c) That respondents notify the Commission at least thirty (30) days prior to any proposed change in the corporate respondent such as dissolution, assignment or sale resulting in the emergence of a successor corporation, the creation or dissolution of subsidiaries or any other change in the corporation which may affect compliance obligations arising out of the order;

(d) That the individual respondent named herein promptly notify the Commission of the discontinuance of his present business or employment and of his affiliation with a new business or employment. Such notice shall include respondent's current business address and a statement as to the nature of the business or employment in which he is engaged as well as a description of his duties and responsibilities.

(e) That the respondents herein shall within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report, in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, and by virtue of the authority vested in it by said Acts, the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Hollywood Carpets, Inc., a corporation, and Charles Snyder, Florence H. Snyder and Dale E. Snyder, individually and as officers of said corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as respondents, have violated the provisions of said Acts, and the rules and regulations promulgated under the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Hollywood Carpets, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the District of Columbia, with its principal office and place of business located at 10212 Southard Dr., Beltsville, Md.

Respondents Charles Snyder, Florence H. Snyder and Dale E. Snyder are individuals and are the principal officers of the corporate respondent. They formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, including the acts and practices hereinafter set forth. Their business address is the same as that of the corporate respondent. All of the aforementioned respondents cooperate and act together in the carrying out of the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

PAR. 2. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the advertising, offering for sale, sale, distribution and installation of carpeting and floor coverings to the public.

COUNT I

Alleging violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count I as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents have caused, and now cause, the dissemination of certain advertisements concerning the aforesaid carpeting and floor coverings, by various means in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, including, but not limited to, advertisements inserted in newspapers of interstate circulation for the purpose of inducing and which were likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of respondents' said merchandise.

In the further course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, respondents have caused, and now cause, their said merchandise, when sold, to be shipped from their places of business located in the State of Maryland, to purchasers thereof located in the Commonwealth of Virginia and the District of Columbia. Thus, respondents maintain, and at all times mentioned herein have maintained, a substantial course of trade in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their carpeting and floor coverings, respondents have made, and are now making, numerous statements and representations by repeated advertisements inserted in newspapers of interstate circulation, and by oral statements and representations of their salesmen to prospective purchasers with respect to their products and services.

Typical and illustrative of said statements and representations, but not all-inclusive thereof, are the following:

PAR. 5. By and through the use of the above-quoted statements and representations, and others of similar import and meaning but not expressly set out herein, separately and in connection with the oral statements and representations of respondents' salesmen to customers and prospective customers, respondents have represented, and are now representing, directly or by implication, that:

1. By and through the use of the word "SALE," and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, that said carpeting and floor coverings may be purchased at special or reduced prices, and purchasers are thereby afforded savings from respondents' regular selling prices.

2. Purchasers of respondents' carpet remnants are afforded savings of 50 to 75 percent off the prices at which such carpet remnants are usually and customarily sold at retail.

3. By and through the use of the words "Compare $238 to $264 Value" and other words of similar import and meaning not set out specifically herein, that said comparative value is the price at which the same carpet remnants are being offered for sale by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

4. By and through the use of the words "WAREHOUSE SALE," separately or in conjunction with the words "LOW PRICES," and other words of similar import or meaning, not set out specifically herein, that the facility at which respondents' merchandise is being offered for sale or sold is used primarily for the storage of merchandise used by respondents' retail business, and that respondents' merchandise is being offered for sale or sold out of such facility at prices substantially below those charged for the same or similar merchandise by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact:

1. Respondents' merchandise is not being offered for sale at special or reduced prices. To the contrary, the price respondents regularly advertise and their so-called advertised "sale" price are identical and are used to mislead prospective customers into believing there is a saving from a bona fide regular selling price.

2. Purchasers of respondents' carpet remnants are not afforded savings of 50 to 75 percent off the prices at which such carpet remnants are usually and customarily sold at retail. To the contrary, the percentage price comparison is based on prices for quantities of carpeting required for wall-to-wall installation rather than the advertised carpet remnants or rugs which are usually sold for less than wall-to-wall prices.

3. The same carpet remnants are not offered for sale at the comparative price by a principal number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

4. The facility at which said merchandise is being offered for sale or sold is not used primarily for the storage of merchandise used by respondents' retail business. Instead, such facility is regularly used for the display and retail sales of merchandise at prices not substantially below those charged for the same or similar merchandise by a substantial number of the principal outlets in respondents' trade area.

Therefore, the statements and representations as set forth in Paragraphs Four and Five hereof, were and are false, misleading and deceptive.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid business, and at all times mentioned herein, respondents have been, and now are, in substantial competition in commerce, with corporations, firms and individuals in the sale and distribution of rugs, carpeting, floor coverings services of the same general kind and nature as those sold by respondents.

PAR. 8. The use by respondents of the aforesaid false, misleading and deceptive statements, representations, acts and practices, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations were and are true and complete, and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondents' products and services by reason of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, as herein alleged, were and are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondents' competitors and constituted, and now constitute, unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

COUNT II

Alleging violation of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and the implementing rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, and of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the allegations of Paragraphs One and Two hereof are incorporated by reference in Count II as if fully set forth verbatim.

PAR. 10. Respondents are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the introduction, delivery for introduction, sale, advertising, and offering for sale, in commerce, and in the transportation or causing to be transported in commerce, of textile fiber products including carpeting and floor covering and have sold, offered for sale, advertised, delivered, transported and caused to be transported, after shipment in commerce, textile fiber products, which have been advertised or offered for sale in commerce; and have sold, offered for sale, advertised, delivered, transported and caused to be transported, after shipment in commerce, textile fiber products, either in their original state or contained in other textile fiber products, as the terms "commerce" and "textile fiber product" are defined in the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act.

PAR. 11. Certain of said textile fiber products were misbranded by respondents within the intent and meaning of Section 4(a) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and of the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, in that they were falsely and deceptively advertised, or otherwise identified as to the name or amount of constituent fibers contained therein.

PAR. 12. Certain of said textile fiber products were falsely and deceptively advertised in that respondents in making disclosures or implications as to the fiber content of such textile fiber products in written advertisements used to aid, promote, and to assist, directly or indirectly, in the sale or offering for sale of said products, failed to set forth the required information as to fiber content as specified by Section 4(c) of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, and in the manner and form prescribed by the rules and regulations promulgated under said Act.

PAR. 13. Among such textile fiber products, but not limited thereto, was carpeting which was falsely and deceptively advertised in the Washington Post newspaper published in the District of Columbia, and having a wide circulation in the District of Columbia and various States of the United States, in that said carpeting was described by such fiber connoting terms among which, but not limited thereto, was "Acrilan," and the true generic name of the fiber contained in such carpeting was not set forth.

PAR. 14. By means of the aforesaid advertisements and others of similar import and meaning not specifically referred to herein, respondents have falsely and deceptively advertised textile fiber products in violation of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act in that said textile fiber products were not advertised in accordance with the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder in the following respects:

1. In disclosing the fiber content information as to floor coverings containing exempted backings, fillings, or paddings, such disclosure was not made in such a manner as to indicate that such fiber content information related only to the face, pile or outer surface of the floor covering and not to the backing, filling or padding, in violation of Rule 11 of the aforesaid rules and regulations.

2. A fiber trademark was used in advertising textile fiber products, without a full disclosure of the fiber content information required by said Act, and the regulations promulgated thereunder, in at least one instance in said advertisement, in violation of Rule 41(a) of the aforesaid rules and regulations.

3. A fiber trademark was used in advertising textile fiber products, containing only one fiber and such fiber trademark did not appear, at least once in the said advertisement, in immediate proximity and conjunction with the generic name of the fiber, in plainly legible and conspicuous type, in violation of Rule 41(c) of the aforesaid rules and regulations.

PAR. 15. The acts and practices of respondents as set forth above were, and are, in violation of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, and constituted, and now constitute, unfair and deceptive acts and practices, in commerce, and unfair methods of competition, in commerce, under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

INITIAL DECISION BY MILES J. BROWN, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

MARCH 18, 1975

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint in this matter on July 8, 1974 (mailed July 17, 1974), charging respondents with unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §45), as well as with violation of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act (15 U.S.C. §70) and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder. By answer duly filed respondents denied summarily many of the substantive allegations of the complaint, although they did admit making certain representations alleged in the complaint. Respondents also denied that their practices were "in commerce," and denied that they had violated the Federal Trade Commission Act or the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act. Respondents also asserted numerous defenses including the Commission's lack of jurisdiction, "laches," no showing of public interest, and "de minimis."

Adjudicative hearings were held in Wash., D.C. on Nov. 6, 7, 11, 12 and 26, 1974. The record in this proceeding was closed on Dec. 19, 1974, although the record was thereafter reopened by order of Jan. 3, 1975, for the sole purpose of receiving CX 62 into evidence (see Tr. 416-417, 522). In addition certain corrections in the official transcript were ordered on Jan. 3, 1975.

In support of the allegations of the complaint, Commission counsel adduced the testimony of respondents Charles Snyder, Florence Snyder and Dale Snyder; two consumer witnesses Verna Dickerson and Howard Beard; Harold Reznick, executive vice-president and general manager of Diener's, Inc., a carpet retailer; Lindsay Stott, Jr., an ex-employee of Hollywood; and Martin Adem, owner of Marty's Floor Covering, Alexandria, Va. Counsel's exhibits included copies of respondents' newspaper advertising (CXs 1-48), several so-called installment sales agreements (CXs 61, 123) and numerous invoices covering Hollywood's purchases of carpeting from certain suppliers (CXs 154-772).

In support of the defense, respondents adduced the testimony of Charles and Dale Snyder; John Bowen, assistant classified advertising manager, Washington Post; Mark Teaney, Wash., D.C. area sales representative of Philadelphia Carpet Co., a carpet manufacturer; Curt Brandland, representative of Barwick Mills, a carpet manufacturer; and Steven Wexler, salesman for Coronet Carpets, a carpet manufacturer. Respondents' exhibits include pictures of its facility in Beltsville, Md. (RX 1-17); pricelists of various carpet manufacturers (RX 18, 20, 27); an advertisement respondents placed in the Washington Post on Dec. 15, 1973 (RX 41); documents relating to respondents' complaint to the Washington Post about the use of the word "Acrilan" in RX 41 (RX 42, 43, 45; CX 62); copies of advertising of other retailers (RX 44, 51); pictures of other retail establishments (RX 46-50); numerous sales invoices (RX 36, 39, 40, 52-72); and an analysis of respondents' retail sales by type of carpeting in each of its store locations (RX 73b, d).

On Feb. 5, 1975, counsel supporting the complaint filed their proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law, and proposed order. On Feb. 14, 1975, respondents filed their counter-proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law, and proposed order along with their memorandum brief in support thereof. Respondents' counsel advised the administrative law judge that failure to file proposed findings on the scheduled day of Feb. 5, 1975, was due to certain internal office problems. Complaint counsel have not objected to this late filing and have advised the administrative law judge that they did not intend to file a reply.

Any motions appearing on the record not heretofore or herein specifically ruled upon either directly or by the necessary effect of the conclusions in this initial decision are hereby denied.

The proposed findings and conclusions submitted by counsel have been given careful consideration and to the extent not adopted by this decision in the form proposed or in substance are rejected as not supported by the evidence or as immaterial.

Some of the abbreviations used in this decision are as follows: CX - Commission's exhibits; RX - respondents' exhibits; Tr. - transcript of testimony; CPF - Commission counsel's proposed findings; RPF - respondents' proposed findings; Comp. - complaint; Ans. - respondents' answer to the complaint.

At this posture of the case there appears to be little dispute over the evidentiary facts. Respondents' main contentions appear to be that the allegations of the complaint and complaint counsel's proposed findings relating to the meaning of the terms "SALE" and "WAREHOUSE," either considered separately or in conjunction with each other, do not constitute a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act. In addition, respondents assert that their representations as to certain savings relating to remnants are in fact true. It is significant to point out that the evidence concerning respondents' alleged unfair trade practices presented by counsel supporting the complaint relate mainly to a period of time from Nov. 15, 1970, through June 1972, at which time respondents operated certain retail stores in addition to their so-called "warehouse."

Having reviewed the record in this proceeding, and having considered the demeanor of the witnesses as they testified, together with the proposed findings, counter-proposed findings, conclusions and arguments submitted by the parties, I make the following findings of fact based on the record considered as a whole:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Respondent Hollywood Carpets, Inc. ("Hollywood"),[1] is a District of Columbia corporation with its principal office and place of business located at 10212 Southard Dr., Beltsville, Md. (Comp.; Ans. Par. One). Incorporated in 1962, Hollywood has operated retail stores at Prince Georges Plaza, Md., Bladensburg, Md., and Bailey's Crossroads, Va. (Tr. 7, 16, 217, 419; see CX 39). In addition, since 1969 Hollywood has had a retail store and storage and cutting facility at its Beltsville location (Tr. 17, 420). The Virginia store was closed in late 1969 (Tr. 24) and the Prince Georges Plaza and Bladensburg stores were closed by the end of 1972 (Tr. 16, 218; see CX 45). Since 1972 Hollywood has done business only from its Beltsville facility (Tr. 17). In the period from November 1970 through November 1971 Hollywood's dollar volume of sales was approximately $610,000 (Tr. 519). In 1974 Hollywood's annual retail sales were approximately $400,000 (Tr. 23).

2. Respondent Charles Snyder was president and the chief executive officer of Hollywood from 1962 until 1971 (Tr. 7-8). Since 1971, he has served the corporation in the capacity of a director and consultant. His main duties have been "advising for advertising and purchases and different duties because of his past experience" (Tr. 13, 15). Mr. Snyder owns 51 percent of the outstanding shares of stock in Hollywood (Tr. 14). He has been connected with the carpet business in some capacity since 1949 (Tr. 92).

3. Respondent Florence H. Snyder, wife of Charles Snyder, has been a director and officer of Hollywood throughout its corporate existence (Tr. 8, 109). In 1972 she assumed the office of president and is also treasurer (Tr. 12-13, 109). She is an owner of shares of stock in Hollywood (Tr. 14-15).

4. Respondent Dale E. Snyder, son of Charles and Florence Snyder, has been actively employed by Hollywood since 1962 (Tr. 119, 120, 452). Before Nov. 15, 1971, he cooperated and acted with Charles Snyder in carrying out the acts and practices of the corporate respondent, and since that time has been instrumental in carrying out the acts and practices of the corporation (Tr. 114, 120). He is presently vice-president and secretary of Hollywood and is an owner of shares of stock in that corporation (Tr. 15, 109).

---

5. The individual respondents Charles, Florence and Dale Snyder, formulate, direct and control the acts and practices of the corporation, and all of these respondents cooperate and act together in carrying out the acts and practices of the corporation as such acts and practices are pertinent and relevant to this proceeding (findings 2, 3, 4, supra; see Ans. Par. One; see also Tr. 15, 111-112, 113, 115).

6. At all times relevant herein, respondents have been engaged in the advertising, offering for sale and distribution and installation of carpeting and floor covering to the public at retail (see Ans. Par. Two).[2] During the period from Nov. 15, 1970, through Nov. 15, 1971, and subsequently, respondents advertised regularly in the classified section of the Washington Post Newspaper, a few times in the Evening Star, and occasionally on a radio station, all of which have circulation or transmission across State boundaries (Tr. 22, 28-31; see CXs 1-48). In the course and conduct of their business respondents have caused their said carpet merchandise, much of which had been purchased from suppliers located outside the State of Maryland (CXs 275-772) to be shipped from their place of business located in Maryland to purchasers located in the Commonwealth of Virginia and the District of Columbia (Tr. 24, 25). Hollywood is in competition with other retail carpet stores in the metropolitan Wash., D. C. area (Tr. 25). The acts and practices and the methods of competition challenged in this proceeding are acts and practices "in commerce" and methods of competition "in commerce" as "commerce" is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. §41).

7. Certain of respondents' newspaper advertisements contained the following statements and representations:
